The blind girl is having her sight restored, but the newsboy can not bear to have her see him—she has imagined that he is handsome—so he attempts suicide. Again he is saved by mere accident. He is carried to the hospital and straightened. All this is done by the doctor who restores Nina's sight. The boy and girl are finally left in each other's arms, and it is made reasonably sure that they will survive—the "Beautykins" figure is having a big sale. Without the attempted murder and the attempted suicide this would be a clean little, humanizing story like those Dickens wrote for Christmas reading, and it is attractive in spite of those defects. Everybody is kind and good. There are no villains and no suspense; just some good old stock characters nicely led through a sweet little episode.

"Germany and Its Armies of Today"

Official Views Presented by Special Permission of the German Government.

A SERIES of war pictures, "Germany and Its Armies of To-day," has been brought to this country by the Germanic Official War Film, Inc., and are now ready for state rights release. The views were taken by special permission of the Imperial German government and show "Berlin in the Third Year of the War," "Rear of the West Front," "St. Quentin, France, in the Fall of 1916," "The Kaiser With the Army of the Crown Prince of Bavaria," "Funeral of Aviator Boelke at Cambrai," and many other authentic and interesting scenes.

The Berlin pictures included views of many public buildings, but their chief claim to notice is the sidelights they give on actual conditions among the inhabitants of the city. The postwomen, female railway guards and the various occupations now being followed by the women of Germany are brought before the spectator and show that the work agrees with the workers. The facts are also brought out that important building operations are going on in the German Capital and that the people still find time to attend the meets at the Karlshoets racetrack.

The pictures of the Kaiser are, naturally, the most interesting of the series. They show him in many intimate and close-up views taken along the West Front and are, without question, far in advance of anything previously shown. The photography of the entire series is of a high order of merit, the work having been done by members of the German army. The pictures are now being shown at the Strand theater, New York, in three weekly installments.

"The Battle of Let's Go"

Two-Reel L-Ko, Released January 24, Presents Dan Russell and Others in Amusing Military Burlesque.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE have been any number of military burlesques since the inauguration of the comic film, but Dan Russell and his assistants, including Vin Moore and Marjorie Ray, prove that good things bear repetition. To follow in the wake of so many previous attempts along this line and still make a favorable impression is no small feat, but it is accomplished in good style in this offering.

The number is laughable throughout. Dan Russell plays General Debility, the scene being laid on the Mexican border. Here a military camp of considerable size is pitched and the time is spent in drilling awkward squads of very unmilitary looking soldiers.

The place is infested with Mexican spies, disguised as women. General Debility, after numerous misadventures, puts on female apparel, after which he is made the target for beatings from both sides of the conflict.

The war scenes in the second reel are uproarious in places and enough gunpowder is burned to satisfy almost any observer. An aeroplane and "tank" play important parts in the battle episodes; also a war correspondent who writes his story amid bursting shells. The fun is all free from offense.

"The Innocence of Lizette"

Mary Miles Minter Appears to Advantage in Five-Reel Mutual Star Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHILE stating that Mary Miles Minter appears to advantage in the production in question, it is only fair to add that in a story of different theme and better construction, this clever and beautiful little actress would have appeared to much greater advantage. The production as it stands reflects a clumsy effort at making a child's picture. There are many children employed in the making of the picture, and there are scenes of individual interest to children, but unfortunately the plot of the story develops situations which, under their present subtitles, are apt to jar the sensibilities of a refined audience, and are not at all commendable for child audiences.

The story, which it is very evident has been built around the little star, is badly constructed and presents a series of incidents in the life of a child some of which are pathetic, and some of which are intended to be amusing. As the story runs, a little girl whose grandfather and only living relative dies, leaving her in the care of Granny Page, the landlady, becomes a helper at the news stand of Granny's son and is later adopted by a widower whose life she has brightened by personally delivering his paper each morning. The unpleasant element of the story, without which a charming production might have been the result, occurs when Lizette, finding a baby on the doorstep of her foster father's home after having been absent at Granny's for a couple of months on a visit, states that the child is hers, and pictures the handsomest young man she knows as its father. Her foster father approaches the young man in a rage, demands that he marry the girl, hauls him away to his house and faces him with a minister to perform the ceremony. The actual marriage of the pair is prevented by the arrival on the scene of the mother of the baby. If the young man had been left out of the question, and the producer had satisfied himself with the child's persistance in the statement that the baby had been sent to her from heaven, the story's climax would have been both pleasing and amusing.

Kalems for January 15

Distinctive for Their Excellent Photography, Fast Snappy Action and Big Thrills.

FROM its coast studios, located at Glendale and Hollywood, California, the Kalem Company has received for release through the General Film exchanges the third week in January, a clever Ham comedy, an excellent two-part episode of "The Girl from Frisco" and a thrilling "Hazard of Helen." Director Robert Ellis, producing in Jacksonville, Florida, has contributed an episode of "Grant, Police Reporter" that maintains the widespread interest this series has aroused. In fact, it is safe to say that there never was another thrill so daring and so well executed as the one in this episode of the Police Reporter series.

On Tuesday, January 16, Ham and Bud, ably assisted by Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch, introduce some new comedy stunts in a Ham comedy entitled "Cupid's Caddies." It contains just the right mixture of slapstick and polite farce comedy antics to make it appeal to any audience. Above all, it is absolutely clean, the prime requisite of a good comedy.

On Wednesday, January 17, through the medium of the screen the Kalem "Girl from Frisco" players cause to live again one of those abandoned mining towns of the Far West. Robert Welles Ritchie, the author, says that "The Resurrection of Gold Bar" matches an actual occurrence in his own life and that he cannot find a single flaw in Director Horne's version of his story. Marin Sais and True Boardman make the most of the opportunities afforded them in this episode to reveal their screen technique. Frank Jonasson, as Ace Brent the Empire builder, has a splendid part and Edward Clisbee's portrayal of the old prospector is a work of art. Ronald Bradbury plays his twenty-third heavy part, no two of which have been alike.

In "The Black Circle," the episode of "Grant, Police Reporter" that will be released Friday, January 19, George Larkin is sure to pull audiences to the edges of their seats with his wild swing ten stories above ground and his hand over hand entry into the apartment window of the man he is trailing. It certainly does look foolhardy to see this intrepid Kalemite go through this stunt but he does it, which is the main thing after all. Ollie Kirkby does a clever bit of doubling in "The Black Circle." Called upon to portray both mother and daughter she succeeds admirably well.

On Saturday, January 20, Helen Gibson again proves that she is absolutely devoid of all fear. In "The Wrecked Station," she endures a nasty spill from her motor cycle, climbs into a steam shovel and is dumped along with the dirt into a sidehinged car, is dropped from that into a coal car and leaps from that to the tender of an engine whizzing by to escape death as the coal car crashes into the Lone Point Station completely wrecking it. This last named incident, the wrecking of the Lone Point Station, was so well done that the Kalem Company has just built a new depot for the "Hazards" players and while they were about it they made it quite an elaborate affair.

TWO BIG SELIG FEATURE RELEASES.

William N. Selig has announced the forthcoming release in K-E-S-E service of "The Princess of Patches," a Mark Swan melodrama adapted for the screen by Gilson Willets. The release date is scheduled for Monday, January 22. The stars include Vivian Reed and Charles Le Moyne. Director Al Green escorted a company of Selig players to Tennessee, where true-to-life plantation scenes were filmed. Among the more exciting episodes announced for "The Princess of Patches" are the blowing up of a houseboat, the fight for life in the dead of night, etc. Beautiful photography, including scenes taken in Southern cotton plantations, add to the attractiveness of the photoplay, it is stated.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan" is the title of the Selig Red Seal play announced for release in K-E-S-E on Monday, February 12. It is said to be a gripping drama of the Texas borderland. Certainly an exceptional cast of players is announced, including George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton, Frank Campeau, Tom Mix, Goldie Colwell and others. Some exciting episodes are announced, including a realistic forest fire, a sensational hand-to-hand battle between two infuriated men—a battle which is said to compare favorably in realism to the fight in "The Spoilers," and an automobile crash. Wonderful views of the Texas cattle country are presented.

Weekly News Reels Combine

Hearst's International Weekly and the Pathe to Be Issued as Hearst-Pathe News.

BY NO means the least interesting feature of the arrangement recently announced whereby all International pictures are to be released through Pathe was the statement that the Pathe News and the International Weekly are to be combined under the title of the Hearst-Pathe News. The Pathe News has been so long in the field that any statement as to a change of name or policy in connection with it is of real interest to the whole trade. The International Weekly, while of more recent inception, profiting by its unequalled news gathering facilities, has rapidly gained strength because of its merit until to-day it is acknowledged to be second to none and enjoys a wide popularity.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is particularly enthusiastic over the new weekly. The old Pathe Weekly was inaugurated by Mr. Berst some eight years ago, and was the first news film in the field. Mr. Berst has always been a believer in the news film, first because everyone finds entertainment and instruction in it, and secondly because it gives to the exhibitor a one-reel picture of a quality and kind that it will be profitable for him to advertise and feature. Mr. Berst says of the Hearst-Pathe News:

"The elimination of one news weekly by combining the two which are the best known in the field cannot fail to help the market and tend to stabilize conditions generally. The Pathe News could not equal Mr. Heart's news-gathering facilities. The Hearst organization could not equal Pathe's splendid factory facilities. The new weekly, with its force of cameramen carefully selected from the best men of the two forces, thus become stronger and better than either of the old weeklies. I am much gratified that through Mr. MacManus, Mr. Hearst's interests and ours in the matter of news weeklies become identical."

Mr. MacManus, of the International, was equally enthusiastic when seen at his office. He said: "No one who has talked with exhibitors in all parts of the country can fail to recognize the prestige the Pathe News has had and the general recognition of its interest and high quality. The International Weekly, enjoying the unique facilities which the great Hearst organization offers in the way of news gathering, has made a phenomenal growth in the comparatively short time it has been on the market." The first number of the Hearst-Pathe News will be issued January 10, and will be booked through the Pathe exchanges.

PICTURESQUE TITLES FOR "STINGAREE."

The genius of E. W. Hornung, internationally famous as the author of "Raffles" and the "Stingaree" stories so admirably filmed by the Kalem Company, shines forth in unmistakable fashion in the titles he has given to the new series of "Stingaree's" adventures now under way with True Boardman in the title role.

Not only are these titles picturesque and indicative of the originality of the new series, but they are such good film titles as to lead one to believe that Mr. Hornung has made a study of motion pictures, including their sales angle. And that is exactly what he has done. Having followed closely all of the former "Stingaree" series as they were released in London, Mr. Hornung has grasped the motion picture viewpoint as perhaps no other author outside of the industry ever did and as a result of his study and analysis of the manufacturer's problems, he has named the first thirteen of Kalem's new "Stingarees" as follows:

"A Salon Passenger"; "A Model Marauder"; "His Mark"; "A Brace of Snakes"; "A Prisoner of Stingaree"; "The Double Dummy"; "The Black Bloodhound"; "Through Fire and Water"; "At the Sign of the Emu"; "A Hanging Matter"; "All Peacock Blue"; "The Jackeroo on G. Block"; "A Champion of the Church."

LASKY COMPANIES TRAVEL FAR.

Two Lasky companies are at the present time journeying far from the Lasky studio in search of special settings. For "Each to His Kind," in which the well known Japanese star Sessue Hayakawa is to appear, Director Marshall Neilan is sailing to the far-off island of Hawaii with his players. The story of the play centers around this picturesque mid-Pacific island and many of the scenes will be staged in and around Honolulu itself.

Theodore Roberts, on the other hand, will star in "The American Consul," some of the action of which is specifically stated as taking place in Washington. It was decided to send the players across the continent from Hollywood, Cal., in order to get the real setting called for by the story.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

FAT AND FICKLE (Vim), Dec. 28.—An amusing comedy number, with Babe Hardy and Kate Price getting over numerous laughs. They indulge in considerable rough arguments. Both have enough avoirdupois to make this amusing. Babe is the fickle one, but finds out that it doesn't pay to be fickle with the daughter of Kate. Despite a vampire, however, things are brought to a happy close. An acceptable number.

THE LUCK CHARM (Vitagraph), Dec. 29.—No. 2 of the "Dangers of Doris" series. Mary Anderson and Duffy Kirk play the leading parts. This time Doris helps a contractor by becoming his typist. She climbs from one window to another on the outside wall of a high building in an effort to frustrate the attempted theft of the contractor's bids. She is bound and gagged, but manages to attract the attention of her friends in the office just below by dropping the "luck charm" through a hole in the floor, used for spying. A fair reel.

THE RIGHT-HAND PATH (Selig), Dec. 30.—A reel with an elementary story of a youth who, seeking fortune, becomes a prize fighter. After several years, when he is down and out, he realizes that he has chosen the wrong path. The reel is only average. In the leading parts are seen Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley.

A DOLLAR DOWN (Essanay), Jan. 3.—A split reel containing about five hundred feet of knockabout comedy and about the same amount of footage showing views in the Yosemite Valley. The scenic section is especially good. The comedy shows a vaudeville actor who tries to steal the best girl of a stevedore. He gets away because of a grotesque make-up.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 2, 1917 (Selig), Jan. 4.—Poor children given presents on war vessels, Brooklyn Navy Yard; Squadron A returns from border, New York; Goat is bell-wether of sheep, Omaha, Neb.; Lee Darcy arrives, New York; School car brings knowledge to children, Los Angeles; Police Commissioner Woods and wife give presents to widows of policemen, New York; Artillerymen use caterpiller tractors, El Paso, Tex.; Villar Kyronen wins marathon race, Yonkers, N. Y.; Mrs. F. Sheehy Skeffington, of Irish revolt fame, tours U. S., New York; With the French Army in the Somme region; Ice tennis popular, New York.

THE HOUSE OF SECRETS (Kalem), Jan. 5.—No. 12 of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. George Larkin does an unusually daring stunt in this one-reel episode. In escaping from a house, which is a secret submarine base, he climbs a pole on which wireless antennae are stretched, cuts the wires, and swings on the wire across a wide arc to a tree, which he clutches with his legs. This thrill gets over well. The story and action are keyed up to a high pitch throughout the reel. A good number. Reviewed on page 243 of last week's issue.

TWIN FEDORAS (Vitagraph), Jan. 5.—One of the "Dangers of Doris" series. In this reel Mary Anderson, as Doris, solves the mystery as to how confidential information leaks out from the office of the father of Bob Dale (Duffy Kirk). She gets a job as a waitress and sees two men exchange hats. The papers with the information are in the band of one of the hats. Doris leaps on to the rear of an automobile and follows one man. She climbs the porch of a house in the suburbs, and the evildoers are finally brought to book.

CUPID'S CADDIES (Kalem), Jan. 16.—A comedy reel with Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. Ham and Bud, striving for the reward offered, endeavor to find a girl for Prince Poppycock. They find Ethel. Although Ham wants to keep her, she is kidnapped by the Prince, who is in turn kidnapped by Ham and Bud. The reel is quite lively and there are several laughs.

General Film Company Specials.

WIFE IN SUNSHINE (Essanay), Dec. 30.—Third of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. This two-reel drama is a strong visualized sermon against divorce. The story interests and is well acted. In the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth and Lillian Drew. The story tells of the wife of an artist who, listening to the advice of others, obtains a divorce. She realizes her folly when she sees the type of man she has taken up with, and when she knows that she might have children. A quite strong short-length offering.

ON ITALY'S FIRING LINE (Selig), Jan. 1.—Three reels of interesting and educational war pictures, giving a comprehensive idea of Italy's fighting forces. Practically every branch of the Italian army is represented in the film, and there are some good scenes showing the artillery in action high up in the mountains. The film is a worth-while subject. It will be of especial interest to those who would know more of Italy's military operations.

THE GIRL GOD MADE FOR JONES (Essanay), Jan. 2.—One of the "Black Cat Features." The picture is an excellent two-reel comedy-drama. Bryant Washburn and Alice McChesney are seen in the leading roles. Several of the subtitles are funny. The story tells of Jones, an author who searches for a girl with whom he was in a railroad wreck. He knows her only by her voice. He searches in vain, only to find that the girl is the girl to whom he has been dictating the story of the wreck. The picture has been produced with care.

THE FALSE PROPHET (Kalem), Jan. 3.—No. 21 of "The Girl from Frisco" series, by Robert Welles Ritchie. In this two-reel episode Barbara Brent is instrumental in exposing a band of men who, as "prophets" of the end of the world, mulct gullible persons of sums of money. In bringing about the capture of two of the men, Marin Sais performs a hazardous and thrilling stunt—she leaps from a speeding automobile to a moving train. The episode is fully as interesting as any. A longer review was printed on page 243 of last week's issue.

Artcraft Pictures Corp.

THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN, Jan. 8.—Mary Pickford makes her second appearance on the new program in a story written by Elaine Stern. It is a fine picture—sweet, wholesome, moving—as pointed out in a review in another column.

Art Dramas Inc.

THE RAINBOW (Sherrill Feature Film Co.), Jan. 4.—The William Sherrill Feature Corporation is the owner of the screen version of the A. C. Thomas' stage play. The picture introduces Dorothy Barnard in the leading role. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

HER SOUL'S INSPIRATION (Bluebird), Jan. 15.—A five-part adaptation of Harris Anson's story "Mary Keep Your Feet Still." Ella Hall is the featured member of the cast, which otherwise consists of Marc Robbins, R. Hasset Ryan, Edward Hearn, Marcia Moore and Margaret Whistler. The adaptation seems to require a deeper dramatic reading, but the production will be found on the whole entertaining. Ella Hall does admirable work in the interpretation of Mary, the little girl whose sole ambition in life was to become a great dancer.

Greater Vitagraph

THE MAN OF MYSTERY, Jan. 8.—E. H. Sothern is the star of a five-reel version of A. C. Gunter's romance, which tells an exciting tale of mystery and is excellently played by Mr. Sothern and the supporting company. The picture was reviewed at length on page 244 of the Jan. 13 issue.

THE GIRL PHILIPPA.—Taken from Robert W. Chambers' novel, the screen version is in eight reels, and the title role is played by Anita Stewart. The present war is used as a background and the picture has many merits. It is reviewed at length in this issue.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay.

THE MASTER PASSION (Edison), Jan. 8.—Good acting marks this five-reel drama. Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness are featured. As a whole the picture is an acceptable offering. The story tells of a wife whose ambition leads her to desert her home to seek fame in the opera. She finds that fame is not what she wanted. There are several good situations. The exteriors, lighting and photography are especially good. A longer review is printed an another column.

Metro Pictures Corporation

THE GREAT SECRET (Metro), Jan. 1.—The opening chapters of this serial are reviewed at length on another page of this issue. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the stars, and the story is full of action. The acting and production are of good grade.

Mutual Film Corporation

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 69 (Gaumont), Jan. 3.—"Pasadena, Cal.," is the subject of this issue of the American travel series. The scenes presented include the famous Busch sunken gardens, the San Gabriel mission, the First Christian Science Church, the Colorado Avenue Bridge, the beautiful Arroyo Seco valley and other scenes of interest and beauty.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, 105, Jan. 3.—Among the interesting items of this number are excellent views of the submarine H-3 wrecked in the fog off the Pacific coast, the floating of an immense oil burning vessel, an animated picture of Colonel Cornelius Vanderbilt, and also one of Chas. Schwab. Telegrams to the number of 110,000 being sent by the Cardinal at Baltimore requesting aid for charity fund is also an interesting item.

JERRY'S DOUBLE HEADER (Cub), Jan. 4.—In this number Jerry does his usual number of amusing tricks. Travelling in an auto trunk on the back of the automobile of his sweetheart he experiences some thrilling adventures, and saves the party from a vicious Mexican as a finale to the picture. Rather amusing.

REEL LIFE, NO. 36 (Gaumont), Jan. 7.—A strong number, commencing with views showing the manufacture of turpentine from waste timber, giving the process quite fully. The return of a whaling vessel from an arctic trip is next pictured. The observer is then taken through an English walnut grove in California, and the manner of handling the crop is shown, picking, drying, culling, grading and packing. A lesson in draping gowns to the human figure closes the reel.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 10 (Gaumont), Jan. 9.—This number of the series contains charming views in "The Foothills of the Pyrenees," and "Budapest, Hungary," and also illustrates "Life in Egypt," covering primitive agricultural methods, irrigation, etc.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 70 (Gaumont), Jan. 10.—"In the Heart of the Blue Ridge" is the subject of this number of the series. Beautiful views in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia are presented along with views of historic buildings such as the Washington and Lee University, the ruins of Liberty Hall, the church in which "Stonewall Jackson" taught a Sunday school class, the Virginia Military Institute and other interesting scenes.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE TURN OF THE WHEEL (Mutual), Dec. 11.—The cast employed in this two-part production includes Dorothy Davenport, Rupert Julian and Benjamin Horning. The story of the picture deals with the unpleasant experience of a young woman whose father has gambled away his fortune, and who is obliged to make a livelihood out of her talent for painting. She is caught in the clutches of the man who ruined her father, and is rescued from his gambling den by her lover. Only a fair offering.

THE INNOCENCE OF LIZETTE (Mutual Star Production), Dec. 25.—A five-part production featuring Mary Miles Minter. The story on which it is based is not a well-constructed one, and contains an unpleasant element which bars it from presentation before child audiences to which the picture was evidently intended to cater. A full review of the picture will be found on another page of this issue.

JEALOUS JOLTS (Vogue), Dec. 31.—A two-part comedy which is moderately amusing. The plot, what there is of it, is the usual one of rivalry for the hand of a pretty maid between a couple of gross farce comedy characters. One of the funny incidents of the picture occurs when one of the characters puts on a wide garment which, inflated, causes him to soar through the skies.

THE ACE HIGH LOSES (Signal), Dec. 31.—Chapter 11 of "A Lass of the Lumberlands." This is a characteristic instalment, in which Holmes indulges in numerous plots to interrupt the construction of the Shady Creek branch. The views of the railroad construction and the mine diggings are pleasing. A work train dynamited, Helen saves a man from drowning, Stephen is kidnapped and a row at the "Ace High" wine room, are the chief features. The number maintains the average set by this serial.

THE VAMPIRES, NO. 9 (Gaumont), Jan. 18.—This is the closing episode of this excellent serial, and is entitled "The Terrible Wedding." It includes an attempt to kill Philip Gaurd and his wife by the circulation through the key hole of their bedroom of a poisonous gas, and the final round-up and destruction of the entire gang of vampires.

Paramount Pictures Corp.

THE EVIL EYE (Lasky), Jan. 4.—The script for this story was written by George Proctor and was based on a tale by Hector Turnbull. Mr. Proctor hardly could be expected to achieve the impossible of injecting life into a theme more than scant in photoplay material. The story is weak. There is a bit of a thrill in the final reel. Blanche Sweet has the role of a woman doctor who, in an epidemic, battles against the superstition of the natives as well as against disease. She is supported by Tom Forman and Webster Campbell, among others.

Pathe Pictures Corp.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 15 (Pathe), Jan. 14.—Advanced spring fashions are shown in "Preparing for the South," as this number of the Florence Rose fashion notes is called. "Small Birds of Warm Climates," interesting studies in color, are on the same reel.

PEARL OF THE ARMY (Astra), Jan. 21.—The eighth installment of this serial is called "International Diplomacy" and shows how Pearl Hare escapes from the Boleriosts. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation

THE ICED BULLET (Kay Bee), Jan. 21.—An amusing comedy of authorship, showing the author, William Desmond, in adventures at the Ince studio and the mystery story he wrote.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 53 (Universal), Jan. 3.—Ice skating in Chicago, Christmas carol singing in Washington, D. C.; a Philadelphia celebration, war sidelights and other interesting features are contained in this number.

THE MASKED CUPID (Victor), Jan. 16.—A comedy number, featuring Johnnie Walker, Helen Morton and Sidney Bracy. This concerns a generous husband, an extravagant wife and a maid in love with a would-be crook. The point of view shifts continually, robbing much of the action of any particular point. The cast is pleasing, but the general effect achieved is not strong.

HEARTSICK AT SEA (L-KO), Jan. 17.—A one-reel comic with some very funny business in it, particularly in the closing scenes. Dan Russell appears as a gentleman hobo, shanghaied by a party of sailors. His adventures on the rocking boat, in the part of a waiter, are full of incident and bring numerous laughs.

PUTTING ONE OVER ON IGNATZ (Victor), Jan. 18.—A comedy by L. T. Peacock, featuring Alida Hayman, Al McKennon and Walter Belasco. The latter appears to good advantage as the grocer. The plot, which concerns a lost tooth with a diamond set in it, is rather trifling, but amusing in its way.

BARRED FROM A BAR (Joker), Jan. 20.—A comedy number by Karl Coolidge, featuring William Franey, Gale Henry and others of the Joker cast. It follows the fortunes of a wine room waiter. There is some good burlesque work, particularly on the part of Gale Henry as the siren. The latter winds up as a temperance reformer.

MR. SHOESTRING IN THE HOLE (L-KO), Jan. 21.—A characteristic knockabout number featuring Billy Armstrong, Louise Orth and Dave Morris. The police force round up a notorious pickpocket after exciting adventures. The reel closes with daring stunts on the roofs of high buildings.

Universal Film Mfg. Co. Specials

THE DOUBLE ROOM MYSTERY (Red Feather), Jan. 15.—This five-reel number, written by Willard Mack and produced by Hobart Henley, has a sociological theme and shows that innocent and guilty suffer alike for the sins of the world. The construction is not strong; in fact the intention of the story is shown in a very hazy manner. Some good types are depicted by Edwin H. Brady, Gertrude Selby, Hayward Mack and Edward Hearn, and some of the episodes are in themselves exciting and well handled. Most of the characters involved live in a boarding house and include a slavey, a reporter, two crooks and a shyster lawyer. The types are good but the story uncertain in its general handling.

THE PRODIGAL WIDOW (Gold Seal), Jan. 16.—A three-reel number by Walter Woods, featuring Neva Gerber, Edward Cecil and Carl von Schiller. The story begins in the East, picturing the manner in which an extravagant, flirtatious wife brings her husband to suicide. The social scenes at the beginning are agreeably, if conventionally, presented. The widow then goes West to find her husband's brother, who denounced her as the cause of the tragedy. Neva Gerber does good work, and in spite of the unsympathetic character portrayed, lifts the part above the average. The mixed motives of the plot are a considerable drawback, though there is no lack of action.

A SLAVE OF FEAR (Imp), Jan. 17.—A two-reel number by Philip Gastrock, featuring M. K. Wilson, Earl Page and Agnes Vernon. The story is located near a factory and has average settings. It concerns a youth, in love with a girl, who is thought to be a coward. He awakens to this fact and proves his strength of character by rounding up some thieves. A familiar theme, presented in a fairly strong way. An average number.

BRUTE FORCE (Bison), Jan. 20.—A two-reel number by Eustace Hale Ball, featuring George C. Pearce, Jane Bernoudy and James Farley. The circuit minister rides into a moonshine district and falls in love with a mountain girl. The native lover forges a note, signing the minister's name, tipping the revenue men off to the presence of illicit stills. There is some suspense in the latter scenes, when Lew tries to force the minister to marry himself and the girl. This type of story has many predecessors and this release is one of about average strength. The mountain scenery and photography are good.

FACING DEATH (Universal Special Feature), Jan. 21.—No. 4 of "The Purple Mask" series. It develops, to Phil Kelly's chagrin, that the girl he captured is not Patsy at all. The scene then shifts, in a rather awkward way, to the Dupont studios, where Patsy appears, in proper person. She poses in the semi-nude for a young artist, whom she afterwards aids in getting the grand prize, in spite of the crooked judges. Dupont and his gang break up the studio dance that night. This general melee is staged in the style for which Francis Ford is famous, and no observer can complain of lack of action. The number, in spite of some awkwardness of construction at the beginning, is full of interest.

THE BUBBLE OF LOVE (Rex), Jan. 21.—A two-reel society story by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Douglas Gerard, Ruth Clifford, Betty Schade and Willard Wayne. This opens by picturing a mouse gnawing a lion out of a net. The parallel does not exactly follow, but is suggested by the later story. A wealthy young business man provides a home for a pretty flower girl whom he has injured with his auto. She later saves him from killing himself after being fleeced by a woman of the vampire type. The closing scenes are not convincing, but the number as a whole carries the interest along very well.

World Pictures.

THE MAN WHO FORGOT (Paragon), Jan. 15.—The theme of this five-reel photoplay is Temperance. It has a strong human interest, however, and is excellently produced and acted. Robert Warwick and Doris Kenyon head an exceptionally strong cast. A longer review is published on another page.

Five Worlds in the Making

Peerless Studio at Fort Lee Scene of Unusual Activity—Big Scenes in all Subjects.

FIVE picture plays simultaneously are in the process of making for the World Film Corporation under one roof in the Peerless studio, Fort Lee. The directors in charge of these productions are Emile Chautard, Harley Knoles, Travers Vale, John O'Brien and George Archainbeaud, respectively.

The individual stars are Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, Alice Brady and Gail Kane, together with one of the World-Brady all-star casts led by Carlyle Blackwell, Arthur Ashley and June Elvidge.

Mr. Chautard is directing the play in which Kitty Gordon is acting the star role, the working title of which is "Haunting Shadows." In the cast assisting Miss Gordon are Montagu Love, George McQuarrie, Alex Francis, Lillian Herbert and Norma Phillips.

Mr. Vale's production, starring Ethel Clayton, is "The House Cat," with Rockliffe Fellowes. Others in this cast are John Hines, Walter Green, Edward Kimball, Eugenie Woodward, Justine Cutting, Frank Goldsmith, Ned Burton, etc.

"Motherhood," with Alice Brady as its star, is being produced by John O'Brien, the most recent addition to the World's list of directors. Supporting Miss Brady are John Bowers, David Powell, Stanhope Wheatcroft, John Dugley, Madge Evans, Marie Chambers, Florence Crane and others.

Harley Knoles is placing the finishing touches on "Who Is Sylvia," with Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, George McQuarrie, Albert Hart, etc.

The final scenes of "Her Higher Destiny" are being made under the direction of George Archainbeaud, with Gail Kane as the star. In this play the cast includes Frank Mills, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford.

Purely by coincidence it occurs that all five of these productions are unusually "heavy" in their employment of massive scenes and large number of players outside the principals, so that the studio presents a spectacle of unwonted action with every department pressed to the utmost of its productivity.

Studio Manager Robert B. McIntyre, Technical Director T. K. Peters and the various department heads have been working long hours at top speed—and this is true also of nearly all their subordinates.

"It would have been simple enough if one or two of the plays had not been so exacting," said Mr. McIntyre to a reporter, "for then we should not have had to crowd on all steam five ways at once. The good points about this rush period are that it gives us a practical demonstration of what our capacity really is, and that it does away with all possibility of our ever getting an order that scares us."

TITLE CHANGED ON WORLD FILM.

The title of "Frou-Frou," the new Alice Brady picture for the World Film Corporation program, has been changed to "A Hungry Heart," and the production will be released February 5, one week ahead of the original date. The first American stage adaptation of this celebrated French play was produced by the late Augustin Daly and at once became a sensational success. Afterward it was revived from time to time by various feminine stars, always effectively.

The public has never failed to respond to it as one of the very best dramas ever supplied by the Paris theaters, where it is a classic.

It tells the pathetic story of a girl who marries out of respect for her father's wishes a man who she does not love, and afterward leaves him and their baby to run away with the one who always possessed her heart. Ruin follows in the natural course, the outraged husband slays the lover, and the victim of this marriage-of-convenience creeps feebly home to die.

In the screen version, directed by Emile Chautard, Miss Brady plays the butterfly heroine broken on the wheel of custom. The other important characters are acted by Gerda Holmes, Edward Langford, George McQuarrie, Alex Francis and John Dugley.

MUTUAL "FEATURETTES."

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation announces the coming of a number of series of important short releases under the general designation of "Featurettes," which by their artistic merit will illustrate the meaning of the new title—that they are all-star and specialty productions.

Among Mutual productions that are now classified as "Featurettes" are four Gaumont single-reel releases, "Tours Around the World," "Reel Life," "See America First," "Mutual Weekly," the George Ovey one-reel "Cub Comedies," produced by David Horsley, the Vogue two-reel comedies and "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton."

Rushing Essanay Features

"Little Shoes" and "Skinner's Dress Suit" Being Hurried to Completion.

ESSANAY is rushing to completion two new features for release within the next three weeks. Henry B. Walthall's next feature will be the first. Its title is "Little Shoes," and it will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service January 15. "Skinner's Dress Suit," a comedy-drama, with Bryant Washburn in the leading role, will follow through the K-E-S-E service February 2.

Mr. Walthall offers an innovation in his career in "Little Shoes." He is seen in an entirely different type from that which he hitherto has presented. It is that of the great lover, and the noted actor has thrown all of his marvelous emotional talent into the portrayal of this character.

The story is from the pen of Eleanor M. Ingram, famous novelist. It presents an appealing portrayal of child-love which guides a man and a woman along the path of righteousness until finally they are united in marriage and happiness. Mr. Walthall has drawn a character on the screen who will touch the heart-strings of his audiences.

Mary Charleson, who supported Mr. Walthall in "The Truant Soul," winning nation-wide praise, appears in the leading feminine role in "Little Shoes." Other well-known actors in the cast include Patrick Calhoun and U. K. Haupt. "Little Shoes" has a screen time of 1 hour, 15 minutes.

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is an adaptation from the story by Henry Irving Dodge, which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post. The great success of the novel—it was one of the "six best sellers"—insures a splendid reception for the picture.

The plot hinges on a poor "boob" who doesn't know what life is until he gets dressed up. Then he goes out and makes a fortune—just on his "front." The story is true to life, and replete with many ludicrous situations. Bryant Washburn has done some of the best work of his notable career in the role of "Skinner."

"Skinner's Dress Suit" is one of the most expensive productions ever put out by Essanay. A special train was chartered to transport Mr. Washburn's company to the country for suitable exteriors. No detail was overlooked to make the feature perfect. Its screen time is approximately 1 hour, 10 minutes.

"HIS PERFECT DAY," NEW DREW COMEDY.

"His Perfect Day," the one-act comedy which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have prepared as the Metro-Drew release for Jan. 15, is essentially human. Mrs. Henry Marsh (Mrs. Drew) reads a magazine article which says that all days should be like a string of pearls, each one perfect unto itself. Mrs. Marsh decides that she and Henry will proceed to lead the perfect life, and she so advises him. He is shaving at the time and he is so disgusted at the announcement that he swears, cuts himself, and starts the day in anything but a perfect manner.

Bad luck seems to follow throughout the day, in spite of the fact that Mrs. Marsh gives her husband a set of mottoes with sweet sentiments to read when anything goes wrong. Her path is not smooth, either, for the cook quits, and when Henry brings home guests to dinner she burns the chicken, which has refused to cook before. She bursts into tears, and Henry tells her to keep cool, that they must lead the perfect life. Needless to say the pursuit of the perfect life is at once abandoned for something more human and natural.

A new Metro-Drew comedy by Charlotte Wharton Ayers, the author of many others, is now being produced by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. This, like all the comedies by Mrs. Ayers, and most of the Drew playlets by any author, has the good-luck name of "Henry" for its leading character.

BESSIE LOVE IN "THE DOLL SHOP."

Bessie Love is hard at work upon her latest starring vehicle, "The Doll Shop." If this new play from the pen of Anita Loos is completed on schedule time—about the middle of January—it will give Bessie a record of three feature releases within three months, which is evidence of hard work well accomplished that few eighteen-year-old screen heroines would care to dispute.

The story of "The Doll Shop" tells of a young girl who runs a toy store in a small factory town. Her uncle is a janitor who nourishes a deep hatred for the rich, and the little toy-maker shares his prejudices. However, many of her pet theories regarding the heartless selfishness of the over-prosperous receive a severe jolt when she falls in love with a young man of unusual means, thinking he is only a chauffeur, an opinion that he encourages until their marriage is at hand.

Roy Stewart is her leading man, and makes a splendid foil for Bessie's diminutive person. In addition to Stewart, Bessie Love is supported by Max Davidson in the role of the janitor with an aversion for the "parasite rich," Carmel Myers, who has the second feminine part, and Carl Stockdale, who is cast as a hard-fisted, self-made factory owner. Edward Dillon is directing the production.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Bosh.

WE'VE just been talking to a man about his house. He is breaking into a town with an already established house. He doesn't think it can be done because he isn't doing it, but he is doing nothing to do it. He puts tame advertising into the papers and opens the house and locks it up after the show, just as a dozen have done before him, and as two dozen more may do after him. He doesn't run kid matinees because he doesn't think the school principal will approve of the idea. The first thing to do is to go to the mat with the principal in a nice way and convert him by showing what can be done. To get matinee business he must fight for it, to get night business he must fight for it, and that goes for every man who runs a house. It is not enough to merely put an advertisement in the paper. Make the advertisement count. It is not good to argue that a thing cannot be done because it never has been done. It can be done and will be done in time. Once people thought that if they sailed far enough across the Atlantic ocean they would fall off into space—but all the time the American continents were right there waiting to be discovered.

Another From the Princess.

Lately we showed a "lumberland" set from the Princess, Henderson, N. C. Now S. S. Stevenson sends in a photograph of his submarine and tells of its construction. We reproduce one of the cuts. The other shows its use for a Chaplin, and here the machine is plastered with advertising signs relating to the subject. Mr. Stevenson writes:

> Am not claiming to have originated the submarine float, but have found it very effective advertising. I noticed a similar float on the Advertising for Exhibitors' page the week we were using ours, and as the enclosed photo shows a little different idea, we are forwarding same. This float was made for Triangle's "Submarine Pirate," but the reels were delayed and it was used for "Horrors of War." This was used a few days later for Chaplin and we followed a circus parade which resulted in very satisfactory business.
> The frame was built of small strips of wood covered with cheap gray cloth, and dotted with black paint to represent rivets. The frame, light enough for two men to handle easily, was placed on an automobile. The cost was less than $10.

Sergelisms.

W. J. Sergel, of the Casino, Laurel, Mont., sends in a very useful throwaway. The sheet is 6x12 inches, white stock of the cheapest sort, but well printed in black. There is a catchline, changed each week, then the program with side dates and days, and a brief talk of ten to twenty lines, signed by the management. It is not pretentious, but it doesn't pretend to be other than what it is, and for a one-sheet program it is well laid out. There is a line or two of description for each subject, yet the space is not crowded and no one will kick because it is not better, because it is so well done. An ordinary throwaway would be wasted, but Mr. Sergel added thought to white paper and got results. It is a splendid model for a throwaway program and we think Mr. Sergel will be glad to send you one if you enclose a return envelope. It must be seen to give the right impression.

Vamp Sheets.

The Gaumont company has issued for "The Vampires" a four-page press sheet giving the stories of the nine divisions of the release, and some advertising matter. It would be handier were the matter printed on one side of the paper only in order that theaters might use the material without copying, but the text is well written and there is the makings of a good advertisement, either for newspapers or on card, in the cipher used by the thieves. This cipher can be taken up either as a mystery advertisement, a prize contest or can be run as a special Sunday story with references to some of the Poe cryptograms to take the "adv" off.

Pretty Work.

Here is a pretty four-column advertisement from Ray Bagley, of the Liberty, Long Beach, Cal. It costs money to mortise on cuts and break up rule like this, but it gets results, and the advertisement overshadows everything else on the page, with comparatively little to fight. Mr. Bagley is reminded that it is a long time between letters, and the same goes for his former partner up the coast, Ralph Ruffner.

Vol. III.

Sharp and Vahl, of the Orpheum, Nampa, Idaho, are now in their third volume of Reel-ism, and mind that they have 52 issues to a volume and not thirteen. It is going some, but Reelism is the sort of sheet that makes money for the house. It is something more than a program—it is a mouthpiece to reach people who do not come to the house to listen, and then when they come the sheet becomes the voice of an old friend. It is not unusual, but it is friendly and sincere, and that is better than large and imposing words that sound as though they had just been taken out of cold storage and were not thawed out. Only one page goes to the program, with the back for the feature talk, or an underline. One page is description and one house stuff.

Even the Lobby.

The Fox company offers a new idea in its booming of the new Kellermann picture at the Lyric, New York. The house has a long, narrow lobby, cutting through the block that the theater proper may lie upon less valuable ground. This has been lined with tinted enlargements of the stills of "The Daughter of the Gods." Post cards are being mailed out with a hand-written inscription reading: "Don't overlook the free exhibition of paintings in the lobby of the Lyric theater, Broadway and 42nd street. It is worth your while.—W. F." The reverse shows a cut of the lobby and above "The Picture Beautiful Free Salon. Open from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m." And the best part is that the pictures are sufficiently unusual to repay a trip to the theater just to look at them. The advertising for this attraction is unusual from many angles, but this is the most novel touch yet. The idea can be adapted to other subjects on which you can get a good supply of stills, and if your lobby is shallow, open the house mornings and put the pictures there. It is merely another application of the "anything to get them in," though you must give them something after they get there.

Stillman Ads.

Here are a couple of advertisements from the Stillman, Cleveland. Mr. Madden changes from a 10-inch space to five twos, and these were scattered. The form of the advertisement attracts and the cumulative effect is good while, as a rule, a small advertisement such as this will get better treatment in the make-up than the larger stuff that naturally sinks to the bottom of the page. For a change, this form is excellent and will bring results and moreover it will let you get more than one chance at a reader in the same paper.

Sticks to Pictures.

The Marcelle, Hopewell, Va., is sticking to the cards with the ideal pictures used for the opening and then commented upon. We think that cuts of the players would be better despite the fact that these cards are unusually well done, but Miss Pickford or Lillian Gish means more to the fan than does "Jessica," even if Penrhyn Stanlaws is her art-father. The folder is used as a mailing card with a seal supplied by the company furnishing the cards. The weekly program is very nicely laid out, but the days are merely named and not dated, as should have been done. For a new house we would rather put the money spent for picture into another page of the folder with some house talk.

The Rules to Space.

George Editor Carpenter sat down and wrote one of his famous fables the other day. It was about a showman who did everything to get space in the local paper except to offer stuff that was fit to print. We cannot print the entire fable, but he arrives at these valuable rules:

(a) A prize essay has no place in a modern newspaper.

(b) The most valuable thing around a newspaper office is time.

(c) A newspaper is not going to take the word of any interested party on the merits of a show because if it comes out with unqualified statements, it may have to be placed in the unenviable position of having to take back all it has printed when the show is presented.

(d) Broadly speaking (according to Florence E. Yoder, dramatic editor, Washington Times), the ideal notice, one which can meet with no objection from the newspaper standpoint, is as follows: Note that the paragraphs each contain certain sets of related ideas; that the middle of the notice can be eliminated without impairing the real facts, and that the whole is in four distinct parts, related only through their unwritten bearing on one another:

1. Star, place, time of showing, production and producer.
2. Kind of role and sentence synopsis of story.
3. Place where scenes occur and time.
4. Members of the cast.

(e) Having segregated your press notice as set forth above add as much as you like to each section. Tell the facts, however, and don't inject your personal opinion, adjectives and the editorial "we." If the editor feels like cutting your notice he can do so without impairing the general acceptable form.

This is pretty much along the lines of Picture Theater Advertising, but the man from Salt Lake has put it in such compact form that you can (and should) cut it out and paste in on your desk. That is the whole trick of writing press stuff. Write more than the editor will probably take, if you wish, but write it in such a way that the editor can simply mark off the useless parts and use the rest. If you jumble it up so that he cannot get the meaning without writing the whole thing over again, don't think that you have fooled him into using it all. More probably he will use none of it.

Now after those kind words perhaps George Editor will get a move on and send in some more Empress stuff and practice what he so ably preaches, durn him.

A New Layout.

Here is a pretty five-attraction layout. It will be seen that the week end attraction plays two days, the off Friday and the busy Saturday. This has a lot to commend it. Not much use wasting a good attraction on an off day, and in most places Friday is poor. If you have somehting good for Saturday, show it on Friday and send your audiences out to do personal press work for you. This program is issued by the Century, Brooklyn, and is a five by eight page. The Sunday program runs on the back page with an underline. The front page looks scratchy because it is poorly set. It would be better to short form the program, which is given in full inside, and to take the rest of the space for house or film talk, using two columns of six point to the page.

Why Graveyards.

Herman J. Brown, of the Majestic, Boise, Idaho, comes out with a 70-inch advertisement in the leading state paper that starts off with and goes on to announce the re-decoration of the house. In the course of his talk he remarks:

> Boise, like most cities, is the graveyard of showmen, but in that she is not unique, as Seattle, Portland and San Francisco are jammed with great theaters that are known in the profession as "bloomers," hosts of liquor dealers and others having lost enormous sums lately in trying to get rich in the theater business. A business that "any one can run," "they are always full," etc. Hence we were not deterred by past performances in coming to Boise, and just to show that we had faith in Boise, and confidence in the ability of any man who really knows his business to make good, we ordered $1,500 worth of improvements the day the theater was purchased. These improvements were not of a showy kind, they concerned heat, ventilation, wiring, etc. They are now complete and in spite of the fact that we are now in the middle of the show season, we are taking up the task of re-decorating the entire interior.

Old-timers will recall that Southern Illinois was called "the Graveyard" twenty-five or thirty years ago, but we cannot see that the large cities of the West Coast are graveyards now, though Mr. Brown claims that no one is making money in that territory because of the extortions of the exchanges and manufacturers. We know houses that have been whole cemeteries in themselves to be turned into small mints with the right management, and we know mints that have been put out of business by an incompetent who has bought in, but we do not think that this condition is general on the Coast, and we do not think that such an unsupported statement is good to make in any advertising. The business does not yield such quick returns nor such certain returns as five years ago because conditions have changed. The novelty is gone and stories have not been held up to the general advance in demand and expectation, but this is a matter that must eventually right itself when business management replaces speculation, and in the meantime there is no graveyard, though a grave may be dug anywhere there is a plot of ground. This seems to be "Montgomery-style" talk designed to win attention and perhaps to rouse local pride, but it is a statement entirely too general to pass unchallenged. All of the towns mentioned are good show towns if the management is good, and if exchange conditions are poor the exhibitors have only to stick together to right them. The trouble is they will not stick together long enough to whip the exchanges into line. Mr. Brown contradicts himself when he says that any man who really knows his business can make good. Surely there must be some men in Portland and San Francisco who know their business.

Changed.

The Royal, Calumet, Mich., has changed its program form again and now prints on stiff paper, 3½x5½. It makes a neat-looking offering, and the back page runs to talk of the house. One thing we note is a reference to a serial run two days. The management adds "but if you do not care for this exceedingly good picture, see the feature at 7:30 or 9." A better way of putting it would have been: "If you do not care to follow the continued story," etc., for it is not the quality of the story so much as its continuation that keeps people away. It is a good thing to give the time of the feature on serial nights, for you have to boom up the serial, and people are apt to stay away thinking that is the main offering. Many people do not care for continued stories where it holds the patronage of others. By giving the showing time of the feature, both tastes are catered to.

Contrasting.

Otto Ellis, of Lawrence, Kan., Gazette, writes enclosing two newspaper advertisements from practically the same copy, and wants to know. He writes.

> I am sending you two advertisements that appeared in the two local papers here. No. 1 was in the "Gazette"; that is the paper that I work on; and the "Journal-World" set the other. We want your opinion on the composition of the two ads. In both papers they were on a page where they were the largest ad., so they did not have anything to fight against. No. - is monotyped and No. 2 linotyped.

Both advertisements are three fives. Number 1 is that with the square portrait cut. To get it over with, we like the other better. Even if Mr. Ellis does give us a hint, we think that the other advertisement gives a better display in all save the one point of title, and to offset this the other is better divided. The "Gazette" advertisement seems to have followed copy as written. The "Journal-World" man seems to have split the lines to better advantage, thiugh this is partly a matter of type faces. The top line in Number 1, for example, is weak through the use of a smaller letter. This is the house names, and though most persons would probably recognize it if set in ten point, nothing is gained in the use of the smaller letter. It gets more white space, but the other compositor gets the same emphasis with a piece of rule. He gets a strong name and yet does not permit it to fade out the following announcement. To the contrary, by splitting this last he makes it even stronger. Compare the two and you will find that the fact that the Varsity has the film one day and the Bowersook for two is made more clear through splitting the announcement and using caps.

Coming down the space, one shows Miss Clark's name divided by the cut. It is plain and clear, but it takes two looks to get it all in where on the other it is all in one place with the title on the other side. Miss Clarke is more important to the average playgoer than her play, and it is wise to give her the best of the display, but "this is not a costume play" should have underlined the title in both cases. This, however, is the fault of the copy and not of the compositor. It is not so important that it should be played up, and the eighteen point line in Number 1 is too large. The ten point caps give the line its proper value. The addition of a line in Number 2 gives a better balanced last line. Here again the type is better proportioned to the value of the announcement.

Taking Number 1, without reference to the other, we think we should have kept the last lines down, have moved up the house name and have put Miss Clark's name directly above the title in the same type now employed for that title, and have set the title in the type used for the name at present. This could have been done nicely, and then "Not a costume play" could have gone on one side of the cut in ten point display, and "A story of modern times" on the other, breaking the white space without detracting from the appearance of the cut or its prominence. It is, of course, necessary to obtain consent to changes, but most advertisers will be glad to be told if asked when the copy is brought in, and many will permit changes to be made without consultation if they find the advice is generally good.

By the way, two copies of one film in the same town under the same management on the same day would seem to be something of a novelty.

Kidding the Kiddies.

Here is some nice stuff from the Censor program. It merely says to please keep the brats at home, but it says it in a way that sounds very different to doting parents. It is a lesson in diplomacy as well as a program aid.

> We are lovers of children. Those who are old enough to understand and enjoy our photoplays are welcome. Some of our films are chosen with special reference to the needs and tastes of these young people. Many features necessarily are for more mature audiences. But our hearts go out in sympathy to the babes in arms who cannot enjoy the pictures; who hate the semi-darkness without understanding the reason for it; who chafe against restraint and the quiet urged upon them and who protest, with their little voices raised on high, against the injustice of bringing them to the theater.
> Then there are those somewhat older, who scamper up and down the aisles, annoying those patrons who have paid for their seats and are entitled to an opportunity to enjoy in peace the pictures they have come to see.
> If the children are too young to like the attractions, for their own sake and the sake of your friends, we urge you to leave them at home.

It is unfair to the rest of your patrons to permit half a dozen youngsters to spoil their entertainment, and we have been in houses where the children drove us out with their infernal noise. This is a tactful but emphatic way of getting about it.

Makes You Feel Good.

This is taken from the program of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa.

> We are just as particular in keeping you well as we are in presenting the best photo plays. Cleanliness is an unbreakable rule at this theater. We take from 5 a. m. to 11:30 a. m. every day to put the theater in the spick and span condition you have the right to demand, for your health's sake as well as your pleasure. Bear this in mind when deciding which theater to go to.

Program Talk.

The Garfield, Chicago, prints a good argument on its tiny front page each week. Here is one that is better than average, short and to the point:

> "Bunk" is a Boomerang. If the GARFIELD Boosted a picture to the skies and you paid your money to see something worth while, and in return spent a wretched hour reviewing a second rate film, you'd become vexed and the Garfield would suffer. Glance over the program for the coming week and then figure out whether or not we have the right to crow like a chantecler.

It pays to drive home the fact that the reason your shows are good is that you know how. It gives people confidence in the house and persuades them to patronize the house rather than some particular subject.

Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

That Brain Polisher.

GRATIFYING almost to the point of embarrassment has been the response to the Brain Polisher published in the issue of December 9th. The response has been so large that it has seriously taxed our time to briefly comment upon the various solutions, but we are pleased and proud of the interest taken and later we may start another. There is much food for comment in the replies received, and we are going to take considerable space.

The first thing that struck us was the slowness of the authors to reply. The issue for that date should have reached the reader in the eastern section by November 29, but it was some days later before the replies started to come, and about ten days before they came in any numbers, and yet many contestants evidently gave small time to the answer.

This is, perhaps, the most notable point. More than 90 per cent. of the replies suggest that the writer read the premise, sat at his machine and dashed off the first thing that came into his head. Very few seem to have thought deeply. They did not search for the best working of the situation, they took the first and most obvious solution. The two most obvious solutions were barred in advance. These were the use of her child and references to the past. With these two out of the way, the next most obvious answer was the arrival of the husband in time to save the girl. This was worked in a score of ways, one writer taking half a dozen scenes, cut in, to bring the husband from the office to his home, having him stop to refuse the pleadings of a beggar and similar trifling business that inevitably would have cut down the interest through interruption. Two brought in the police to effect a rescue; in one instance an entire platoon on reserve, though there was nothing to show that the police could have had any knowledge of the happening. Several of the hubby-to-the-rescue squad had him turn on Dora and accuse her of improper intimacy with Jim, basing this belief on her prior marriage to Jim and ignoring the fact that a man lately out of prison and sodden with drink would not be apt to look the part of a lover.

Next to having Tom come dashing in, the favorite device was to have Jim trip over a roll of carpet, be tripped by a sudden pull on the rug or some similar device. These solutions were so numerous as to suggest that this device has lately been used in some other play—and remembered.

Third in favor was some scheme whereby Dora obtained Jim's revolver through some pretext and held him up until assistance came. When the test was written, it was the writer's belief that this would be the favored solution, but it ranks only third in point of use.

These three were the ones most used and represent about eighty per cent of the replies. About half of the remainder used an appeal to Jim's animalism to get him into some situation that would hold him. Of these the best was offered by Mrs. George H. Ingraham. She offers as an analysis the premise that > If Jim is such a weakling as to lose the love of a good woman for drink, there is nothing in his character to appeal to but animal passion.

In her development Dora, for the sake of her child rather than herself, pretends to yield to an old fascination. She seduces him from his murderous intent to a softer passion and then, pretending fear that her husband is coming, shoves the rum-stupid dupe into the street with the promise of an appointment for the following night. Others used the seduction theme, but generally to permit Dora to gain possession of the revolver. Mrs. Ingraham actually has the revolver in Dora's possession, but makes her give it back to him with no attempt to use, thereby convincing Jim that she does not plan his undoing. The revolver incident is merely a phase of a greater moment, where others make it the climax.

But Mrs. Ingraham offers but half the solution. She sees possible only an appeal to the brute side of Jim. Miss Alice C. Brown digs deeper and says that there are two openings. Jim must either be cajoled or intimidated. This is true, but in these alternatives lies the whole field of dramatics. All action possible in this scene lies to one or the other. Nothing else is possible. Everything is possible under these two heads, for the cajolery may be downright seduction or merely "jollying," while intimidation may be a hold-up at the point of a gun or moral force. Miss Brown offers a novelty in her own solution. Jim is in the state known as crazy drunk. In this condition Dora picks up a toy snake, the plaything of her baby, and to Jim's disordered imagination the snake is real and he has a violent case of delirium tremens as an end to his holiday, while Dora sends for the police.

But since seeing snakes is generally regarded as a comedy feature, it is possible that through the tension created the audience will react and regard the matter as comedy. It is too delicate a matter to be trusted to.

The best solution received up to the time of writing (and the replies are still coming in at the rate of five or six a day) is offered by Theodore Breidenback, who gives this brief development:

> Dora from a window sees Jim approaching the house. Divining his design, she grasps a stiletto and goes out to meet him at the door. She holds out the weapon to him, calmly saying—
> Cut in—Here, Jim, if you cowardly crave for my blood, make it flow with this.
> Jim turns away—silently—shamefacedly.

No human being ever used such stilted language under stress of emotion, but there is a chance for a situation there, though the author does not make use of it. His development is too casual. Perhaps a better writing would be:

> ROOM—Dora on—bending over bureau drawer—Jim springs into room. Is unsteady on his feet and his face is distorted with rage—after a momentary surprise Dora becomes calm and eyes Jim coldly—Jim heaps upon her all the abuse to which he can give tongue—she merely regards him with a contemptuous smile—he grows more violent and draws a gun, which he points at her waveringly—she does not flinch, nor does she make any movement—he lurches toward her—loses his footing and falls sprawling—the gun rolls across the floor toward Dora—cursing, Jim struggles to his feet with great difficulty—Dora meantime has picked up gun and stands holding it—as Jim crouches, she smiles scornfully and offers him the gun butt foremost—Jim astounded—regards it suspiciously—there must be some trick—she advances to him—thrusts gun into his hand—he looks at it stupidly—he could understand resistance—this mood he cannot fathom—smiles foolishly—returns gun to pocket—lurches from room—Dora hurries to door—listens—turns—sways—falls in a faint.

Here the avoidance of a leader will help to hold up the tension and the development of the scene will add to the suspense. Dora knows him to be a moral coward. She has taken the long chance and has won.

Although the test question said to be brief and dramatic, many long solutions were offered. One, running 36 scenes, is offered by Robert M. Wilkes, who adds a fourth character, the man with whom Dora has agreed to elope. He works triple action showing Jim and Bowers coming to the house and Tom leaving the office early because he does not feel well. Jim is the first to arrive and starts to throttle Dora. The lover enters, but when he sees the state of affairs, he beats a hurried retreat. Later Tom comes and bests Jim, but the further development is left in the future and it does not appear that Jim betrays Dora's intentions of eloping.

Here, too, there is danger that Bowers' sudden flight may appeal to many as humorous. It is in moments of strong tension that the seemingly innocent action is most apt to gain a laugh, and the cowardly retreat might bring a roar of laughter. The introduction of the elopement might yield a good development, but it should be handled in such a way that there is no danger of a reaction.

It is in the matter of development that most of those having good ideas fail. If they hit upon a novel situation, they do not work it out. They merely sketch in the foundation and leave the rest to the director. They cannot handle their own action. This is possibly due to the present demand for "synopsis only," but even this is no excuse, for though a synopsis may be al that is wanted, the synopsis should be so worded as to suggest the fullest development of the idea and not merely hint at the possibilities. In this matter almost all of the scripts were a disappointment. The art of writing clean-cut, tense action, seems to be lost. Almost all of the work was slovenly and some of it downright rotten. The writers did not seem to have made even a slight effort to dig beneath the surface. They are content to merely write action. They do not seem to strive to make that action the best and strongest action possible to the situation.

Care.

Even though you know that a director will not follow your script, try and get out one that it is a shame not to follow. Don't get into his class and shirk your work.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready, and printed in neat booklet form; the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 170.

What, in your opinion, ought to be the limit of the number of reels used in an ordinary program for a five-cent house, and for a ten-cent house?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 162.

The Roll of Honor on question 162 consists of W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, and John W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo.

Neither of these gentlemen were right, but I have placed them on the Roll of Honor because they at least made an intelligent stab at answering.

Reply to Question No. 162.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

What would be the effect of connecting two rectifiers in series?

The Answer:

It would be theoretically possible to connect two mercury arc rectifiers in series, provided the arrangement be such that the two tubes tip at precisely the same instant of time, which might, or might not, be accomplished without a mechanical connection between the tilting arrangement of the two tubes.

The effect would be to double the secondary voltage, amperage remaining practically constant. In order to connect two rectifiers in series the regulating reactance should be set at the same value for each machine. They could not, of course, be connected in series for the purpose of producing projection current, because the voltage thus secured would be altogether too high—in fact just double what it ought to be.

Organizing New York.

On Thursday evening, December 7, occurred the first meeting of the series, already noted in this department, intended to perfect the organization of the operators of Greater New York. Unfortunately this meeting had, inadvertently, been set for the same evening on which occurred the ball of Hudson County Local Union No. 384, and inasmuch as the editor had been advertised as one of the speakers, and he had promised to attend the ball of Local 384, and inasmuch as Brother Ira Sherman past president of Local 385, had also been secured as one of the speakers, and he literally was compelled to be present at the ball, we were up against it. The fact had been advertised that we would be present, and Local 306 did not like the idea of not making its word good. Local 384 absolutely would not hear of our leaving until after the Grand March and as Sister Tapley could not arrive until 11 o'clock and the Grand March would not be finished until almost 1 o'clock, it required a considerable stretch of the imagination to suppose that the crowd would await our coming, it being between fifteen and twenty miles across the city from the ball to the hall in Brooklyn.

At last, however, we got away, and, chartering a deep sea going taxi, rode to the Tube Station, believing that would be quicker to take a tube train than to wait for a ferry. Alas, however, after Mr. Taxi had gone we discovered we would have to wait twenty-five minutes for a train. Then over in New York the only taxi we could find could not get its coffee grinder going, so we took a surface car across Brooklyn Bridge and got off at Sand street, where Hornstein, the villian, said we could get a taxi. Nothing doing. But a kind hearted officer said that we could get one at Borough Hall, whereupon Fred Stoffregen departed up the street at a fast gallop. He had only but faded away in the darkness, when down the street came a brown streak, which we recognized as an empty taxi. The combined voices of Hornstein, Sherman and Richardson were raised in a howl which startled the bats on top of the towers of Brooklyn Bridge. The chauffeur stopped and probably, as we catapulted into the vehicle, concluded he was being mobbed. We chased Fred up the street, hauled him into the depths of the machine and at 2:45 arrived at the place of meeting. It speaks well for the interest of Brooklyn operators that, whereas a few had become discouraged and left, the main body remained to listen to an outburst of oratory by Brothers Sherman, Stoffregen and the editor.

There was a goodly attendance, everything considered, and while I don't know how many applications were taken, I do know that at the close of the meeting several told me personally they were going to join. I hope and believe this series of meetings will result in thorough organization of the operators of this city. The men ought by all means to get busy and do their part; also I believe they will do so when the matter is properly presented to them.

Owe Him a Lot.

W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta, says:

> I enclose herewith a few questions for your consideration. I have tried to only include those which will interest the average operator. Personally, I would like to see you get out another book of questions similar to the other two. It is much better when one has the questions in advance. I carefully read Brother Solar's reply to my questions in November 4th issue. He certainly made the matter very clear and understandable. Operators and exhibitors, and in fact the whole industry, owe a lot to Brother Solar for what he has done in clearing up and making understandable matters pertaining to optics; also there are others, Griffiths and Martin for instance, who have nearly worked their heads off during the past year or two, and they are entitled to all kinds of thanks from the fraternity.

The questions, Brother Allen, have been given consideration, and some can be used, though most of them have already been asked, in one form or another, as you will discover by carefully looking back through the question booklets. In fact the questions have pretty well covered the entire ground, though there are, of course, many others which could be asked, and quite a number which will be, including some of your own.

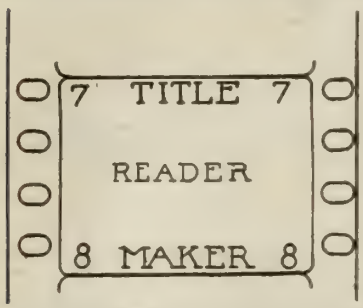
Looks Good.

William M. Hyde, New Haven, Conn., submits the following. On the face of it his change-over sign looks good. The number in the upper and lower corners would be a convenience to the operator, and to the exchange man as well; also it would not be conspicuous enough to offend the audience. It would, nevertheless, require a split sub-title, half being on one reel and half on the next. It seems to me, however, the split subtitle is the only practical thing although it might really call for some unnecessary titles. Still, after all, I don't believe this would be an insurmountable difficulty, and a title is the best thing in the world to change over on. As to Brother Hyde's figures on wasted leaders and tail pieces, why, while undoubtedly the loss in that respect is very large, I don't believe it would run to the enormous total of 624 reels per year. Friend Hyde says:



> Since the advent of the multiple reel film, operators have been subjected to severe criticism for punching holes in film at close of each reel. Since these punch holes serve as a warning to the operator that he may close the reel and start the succeeding one without any interruption to the picture, and since the film manufacturers continue to ignore the operators' request that they incorporate in their film a suitable warning, it is quite evident that the criticisms referred to are misplaced. This conclusion not only appears just, but, considering the figures I submit, it would appear that the manufacturers' indifference is by no means well taken.
> In producing two five-reel features a week, sixty prints each, on which each leader and trailer of four reels amounts to fifteen and ten feet respectively, we find the film wasted reaches a rather fair figure of 624,000 feet or 624 reels of film photographed, printed and developed, whose only purpose is to inconvenience the operator, it being necessary that he cut off these leaders and trailers before projecting, and replace them again at the conclusion of the feature's showing. (Not true unless two or three single reels are combined into one large one.—Ed.) In view of the fact that it is quite common for each reel to open with an insert, is it not quite reasonable to assume that the manufacturers should not only abandon their practice, but should seek to co-operate with the operator, rather than antagonize him with unnecessary labor? An enclosure is submitted which would not only serve to warn the operator of reels closing, but also contains all the necessary information, such as title of film, manufacturer, number of reel, and such insert as might occur at this portion of the feature. The suggested design, should it occur at the beginning of the reel, would show the reel to be the eighth and the preceding reel to be the seventh; or if at the close of the reel, it would show as ending of seventh reel, the following reel being the eighth. There is a numeral in each corner of the film picture. This arrangement, I think, is preferable, since observation ports are so arranged, or disarranged, that few operators have a full view of the screen.

Local Progressing Nicely.

Sherman, Texas, operators and stage hands have withdrawn from L. U. 280, which included Sherman and Dennison, organized a new union, hoisted a flag bearing number 468 to the mast-head, elected officers, and are now sailing the boundin' billows of unionism, not as pirates bold, but as brothers banded together for mutual benefit, with malice toward none and charity to all.

The following officers have been elected: President, James Shipton, Jr.; vice-president, O. J. Parker; financial secretary and treasurer, E. R. Keyes; recording secretary, Ed. Bonham; business agent, M. M. Moom. A letter from the new organization sets forth the foregoing facts, and says: "We are progressing rapidly and every member seems to be taking such interest in the work that we fully expect to gain a reputation for this city which it has never before had in the history of unionism." The letter closes with best wishes to the editor and the department.

The department wishes to the new Local all possible success. Its membership is of the "live wire" type, and success usually perches on the banner of an organization made up of that kind of men. Our compliments to Local 468, and may the future contain nothing but a fulfillment of her rosy dreams.

Wilmington, Del.

Recently I received a communication from the newly formed Moving Picture Operators' Local Union No. 473, Wilmington, Delaware, inviting me to attend a banquet to be held by that organization Sunday, December 10, the occasion being the installation of the officers and the obligation of its members into the I. A.

On the way down I visited the restaurant car and occupied one side of a "table made for two." The other side was presently taken by a gentleman with whom I entered into conversation. We talked for probably as much as an hour on various subjects. Before parting I handed him my card, whereupon he said: "I have no cards with me, but I am W. J. Harahan, president of the Seaboard Air Line." Huh! (business of swelling up). I had been hobnobbing with the president of a big railway system. Quite classy, my boy, quite classy.

In Wilmington I was met at the depot by Joseph Knopf, president, and Claude Guyer, secretary, of the Local, accompanied by Brother Leroy Bye, proud owner of one of Mr. Ford's gasoline buggies, and having projected ourselves into its depths, we went to the Victoria theater, where were assembled all the operators and some of the managers of the city, who for two hours listened to a lecture on practical projection, the managers at the end evincing their interest by asking several pertinent questions.

During the lecture Brother Lemaster, general organizer of the I. A., came marching down the aisle, he having but just arrived from New York whence he had journeyed, at the request of the local, to install the new officers.

After the lecture we adjourned to the union headquarters at 604 Market street, and there, with Brother Lemaster acting as toastmaster, enjoyed a banquet which was really one of the best it has been my good fortune to partake of in many years. It consisted of Delaware turkey with dressing, mashed potatoes, peas, celery, coffee, ice cream and several other things I have forgotten. It was not served in courses, but placed on the table in large dishes, and there was an abundance for everybody. The only thing which could possibly be criticised was the biscuits, and it was an open question whether even that would have been a just criticism, because when some one suggested that the room was not as warm as it might be, Lemaster tossed him a biscuit with the remark: "Chew on this awhile and you will break into a sweat." So you see that they had their good points.

Oh, yes, by the way, I almost forgot the installation of the officers, which took place in the Lodge Room prior to the banquet, Brother Lemaster officiating. Out of compliment he attempted to turn the job over to me, but met with hasty and determined declination. The boys had gotten him down there to do that particular job, and I knew they wanted nobody else but him to do it. Anyhow Lemaster is past master of the art of installation, whereas I would probably have gotten the thing so badly balled up that we would have had to send out for a crowbar to untangle it.

After the banquet there were speeches by Brother Lemaster, the president of the Wilmington State Federation, the editor of the Wilmington Labor Journal, and your humble servant, which was followed by story telling and a general good time, the toastmaster ruling that each man must tell a story, sing a song, or be fined one dollar. This resulted in some mighty funny yarns, some weird stories and a collection of eight perfectly good bones, which were duly added to the treasury of the union.

The following were present at the banquet: F. G. Lemaster, General Organizer, I. A. & S. E. & M. P. M. O., Toastmaster; F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department Moving Picture World; John H. Hickey, President Wilmington Central Labor Union; A. R. Saylor, Editor Wilmington Labor Herald; H. I. Bowles, Wilmington Morning News; Frank Poppy and A. N. Cole, Wilmington Stage Employes' Union (I. A.) No. 284, and the following members of the new Operators' Union: Joseph Knopf, President, operator Victoria theater; Lionel Miller, Vice-president, operator Victoria theater; Claude Guyer, Recording Secretary, operator Pickwick theater; Leroy Bye, Financial Secretary, operator Majestic theater; Jacon Gluck, Treasurer, operator Majestic theater; Walter Scott, Business Agent, operator Bijou theater; Joseph Lamanna, operator; Edward Veasey, operator; Albert Williams, operator Grand theater; James Crowe, operator Savoy theater; Linden Savage, operator Pickwick theater; Bruno Marks, Strand theater, Chester, Pa.; Harry Gross, Carney's Point theater, Carney's Point, N. J.; William Bankes, operator Polonia theater; Lee Washburn, operator Queen theater, and Leonard Wright, operator Queen theater.

The new local meets every Monday evening at present, but will probably change to semi-weekly later. It impresses us as being composed of level-headed men who will probably build up a successful organization. I would like, with all due respect to the Philadelphia Local, to suggest that they relinquish all claims to Chester, which lies on the dividing line between Philadelphia and Wilmington, and allow the Wilmington boys to organize the Chester men into their union. They need them much worse than does Philadelphia, because there are only sixteen operators in the new union, which represents the entire operating force of Wilmington, with the exception of two colored operators.

Don't Work Right.

From Parkersburg, W. Va., comes the following:

> Please find enclosed money order for latest edition of Handbook. Have intended to get it for quite some time, but was short of funds. At last, however, the Right Honorable Woodrow Wilson has consented to pay half—though he did not know it. You see it was like this: I bet on Wilson, so Wilson helped pay for the book, and I am mightily well satisfied with the result all the way round. I would like to have a photograph of yourself, as I want photographs of all great men. Now you think I am kidding you, don't you? Well, I am not, because I don't believe there is another man who can acceptably fill your position, meaning with regard to the department, Handbook, and betterment of projection. I sure am interested in the light-ray dope. Have lined my condensers and lamphouse according to table in October 16th issue, but it don't look right. Quite likely I had made a mistake, but if I don't find it when I receive the Handbook, you can look out for an S. O. S. call. By the way, I just received good news. My manager informed me that he has ordered two Power's Six B motor-driven machines, and you can bet your last pair of suspenders I'm wearing one big, wide smile today. In closing, I send best regards to yourself, the Moving Picture World, and the projection department.

Sorry, brother, but there is nothing doing in the photograph line. I have not got a decent one to my name. As to the lens dope, try tables and chart in November 4th issue. No, Parkersburg, I don't think I am a "great man." I am just trying to do my duty according to my lights, and do it as well as I can with what few brains the Creator endowed me with. I consider myself fortunate that I have been able to please and help such a large percentage of the operators and managers of this and other countries. I have done what I thought was right, roasting where I thought a roast was coming. I have not made use of my membership in the I. A. to further my own ends. In other words, I have been a tub which has literally "stood on its own bottom," and, by golly, I am proud of that fact.

It Cannot.

R. L. Choate, Millis, Mass., says:

> Can an arc light be run on 32 volts and 20 amperes D.C. for picture work, or is 32 volts too low to make a good arc? Can a nitrogen lamp of 32 volts and 750 watts be used? The generator is connected to the storage batteries all the time, and all current not being used while generator is running is sent into it, so thought the extra amperes for bulb could be taken from them. This size lamp is made by the General Electric Company. The generator is made by the Domestic Engineering Company, Dayton, Ohio, and may be seen at 18 Vesey street, New York City. What would be the practical size for a picture with this light?

No, Brother Choate, you cannot operate a D.C. projection arc on 32 volts. If you had a specially wouund generator you could maintain the arc with 32 volts, but it would be so very short that it would be useless for projection purposes. You may, however, operate an alternating current arc with some degree of success, even with as low a voltage as that, provided you had a generator so wound that no resistance would be necessary, and I doubt that this is practical with the alternating current arc. However, there is another thing to be considered unless the generator is specially wound, you would have to have resistance to form a cushion for the arc, and this would call for added voltage. Under that condition you would need at least 60 volts.

No, you could not use the nitrogen lamp successfully. Costly experiments have been underway for at least two years with that end in view. You have got to have a special lamp for projection purposes, and in conjunction therewith a special condenser. The ordinary nitrogen filled lamp would not be at all practical for the purpose of projection.

An instance has just been brought to my attention which is worthy of somewhat extended comment in the department, though it is necessary, for obvious reasons, to suppress names, except that of the city, which is Baltimore, Md. Down in Baltimore there is a theater seating, as I remember the statement of the narrator, about 500. Almost immediately across the street is another large, new theater seating approximately 1,000. Now the new theater is a very much more beautiful house than is its neighbor. It is more up-to-date in its appointments; it has conveniences for the comfort of its patrons, which the smaller house does not have. It screens the best of the Fox, Metro and one or two other high-class programs, whereas the smaller house uses only one, the Paramount. Yet, strange as it may seem, the smaller house "gets the crowd." And thereby hangs a tale.

In analysing the situation the gentlemen who related the facts in this case, a man, by the way, in whose judgment I have every confidence, says it is due to two factors, one of which is the personal popularity of the manager of the older house, and the second, and far greater equation, is found in the superior excellence of projection in the smaller house. He said: "I cannot for a moment believe that, important as the popularity of the manager with his patrons undoubtedly is, it can, will or does account for anything like the difference in popularity of the two houses. Certainly the popularity of a manager alone could not win out against the combination of a larger, more varied program, and a larger and better house, assuming the projection of the picture to be equal in both cases. I therefore conclude, after having viewed both pictures, that the superior excellence of projection in the smaller, older house is the big factor."

I very naturally would feel inclined to concede the correctness of my informant's views, but for a moment let us look at the matter as it lies. The older house has a high-class operator who is unhampered in his work by any speed 'em up orders, or unreasonable restrictions as to purchase of machine repairs, amperes of current, etc. His projection is brilliant, his machines, being in perfect repair, give an absolutely steady picture, except for such vibration as may be due to inaccuracies in film perforations. In fact his projection is about all that it could be. And what does that really mean? Why, first and foremost, aside from the item of steadiness, it means lack of eye strain and an evenly illuminated, brilliant picture. It also means that when the artist appears on the screen of the smaller theater his or her shadow form enacts the scene as it was originally conceived by the director and was originally acted by the artist in the flesh. The actors and actresses are not transformed into swift moving puppets, and made to act the scene according to the ideas of a theater manager who believes he can improve upon their work by speeding up the tempo of projection.

Did you ever stop, brother manager, and consider what an utterly ridiculous proposition it is, after all, to attempt to improve upon the work of the artists who appear on your screen? Don't you really, away down in the bottom of your soul believe it to be a rather absurd proposition to try to improve upon the work of Sarah Bernhardt, E. H. Sothern, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart and other artists of equal calibre? And when you change the tempo of projection, Mr. Manager —when you order your operator to over-speed in order to get in too many reels in a given time, or in order to put alleged "pep" into the show, that is precisely what you do.

It is utterly impossible that you can have high-class projection in your house, and at the same time alter the work of the artist in any degree from what it originally was. I have many times said, and say again: IN ORDINARY DRAMATIC FILMS ANY CHANGE OF SPEED FROM THE NORMAL CAMERA SPEED, OTHER THAN THAT NECESSARY TO COMPENSATE FOR ERRORS IN CAMERA SPEED, WHICH MUST BE LEFT TO THE JUDGMENT OF THE OPERATOR, OPERATES TO CHANGE OR ALTER THE WORK OF THE ARTISTS, THE IDEA OF THE DIRECTOR, AND TO DETRACT FROM AND INJURE THEIR WORK.

Personally, I don't believe in the over-speeding of even comedy films. The only thing that can be said is that over-speeding of comedy films is not usually nearly as bad as the over-speeding of dramatic films, by reason of the fact that the over-speeding of the comic film often sets up an element of absurdity which might add somewhat to the comedy, though taking the film as a whole it is, and always has been, my opinion that even the over-speeding of a comedy detracts more from some parts of the production than it can possibly add to other parts.

Loses Lower Loop.

St. Louis, Mo., propounds the following:

> I am having a great deal of trouble losing the lower loop on my Simplex machine. So far as I am able to tell, everything is all right; still there must be some fault, or this would not happen. Can you tell me what it is?

There are several possible reasons for losing the lower loop, St. Louis. First: It is quite possible that your take-up tension is too tight, and if it is it is pretty near a cinch the lower loop will be yanked out every time a bad splice or a bad set of sprocket holes goes through. The tension of your take-up should only be just barely sufficient to keep the reel in the lower magazine revolving until the entire film is rewound. Anything more than that is excessive. With most friction take-ups, however, even when set to operate at their best, there will be to some extent excessive tension at the beginning of the rewinding, due to the fact that the diameter of the reel is far less then, therefore the force exerted by the belt exerts a very much heavier pull on the film at the lower sprocket than it does later on. Study the matter for a moment and you will see this cannot be otherwise. You should be very careful in the adjustment of your take-up tension; also you should keep the bearing of the take-up spindle thoroughly oiled, because the pull of the belt is upward and the increased weight of the lower reel is downward; therefore the effect is to cant or tilt the shaft in its bearing, and this has a decided tendency to set up friction, particularly if the bearing is not well oiled. You will find this matter very fully dealt with in the Handbook. Another possible cause is the idler bracket spring weak or the idler improperly adjusted as to distance from sprocket. It should be twice the thickness of a film away from the sprocket. Sprocket out of line with operture is still another, or badly worn sprocket.

Operating Room.

George Betz, Osgood, Ind., writes:

> From the accompanying photograph of my operating room you will notice it is built of fire-proof material. The floor is of 5 inch solid concrete and the ceiling and side and rear walls are 9-inch concrete, with a 12-inch front wall. The room is equipped with latest model of Powers' Six B. The machine ports are 13x8 and the operator's port 8x8, both equipped with fire shutters. To the right you will note a 20-inch vent. Now come across, Brother Richardson, with your criticism. I am willing to improve anything you condemn, if I can. I wish the department all the good luck in the world.

Why, Brother Betz, the room seems to be all right, except that 8 inches is a little narrow for an observation port; it should have been 10. However, if the port flares out through the wall, 8 inches is not so bad. I don't like that vent on the right-hand side because apparently it lets in daylight, and lets it in in a very bad place. You could not see your screen very well at matinees unless you covered that vent in such way as to exclude daylight. Outside of that the room seems to be O. K., though apparently too small for two machines.

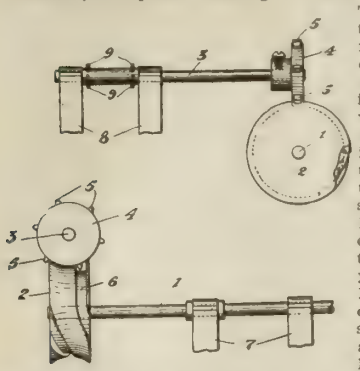
"Intermittent Movement."

L. Mattson, Everett, Washington, is the patentee of an intermittent movement, the patent drawings of which he sends for examination.



The editor would be unable to intelligently discuss the merits of this invention without first having seen a model, and even after having examined a model it would not be practical to pass judgment upon its merits until it had been actually tried out under a break-down test covering at least three to six months. I know that Nicholas Power experimented with a somewhat similar type of movement several years ago, and discarded it. However, Brother Power's experiment was in some respects not quite the same, and it is possible Friend Mattson has evolved a movement which will prove to be practical and will deliver the goods. Let us hope so. The picture shows very plainly how the movement works.

Wrong.

From Chicago, Ill., comes the following:

> Can you tell me the various ways of ascertaining voltage? I am informed that a man who applied for license in this city recently was asked this question among others. He gave the following methods, viz.: by using a voltmeter; by the use of 110 volt lamps, either singly or in series; by telephoning the power house; by spacing of switches and fuses; by the resistance used; by inserting fixed, known resistance in the circuit, together with an ammeter.
> He was refused a license, so he claims, because he could not name another way. Can you tell me of any other method?

Yes, there are other methods, such, for instance, as reading the tag on an incandescent lamp, or examining the name plate of motor, if any; or of transformer, if any; or of the generator, if any. It would, however, be quite absurd to refuse a man a license merely on the ground that he failed to name all the possible methods of ascertaining voltage. I might myself not name them all, but I would, nevertheless, undertake to make it reasonably interesting for any examining board who refused to issue me license, it not being the court of final resort. It would be quite within the range of possibility that I could not for the moment remember every one of the different methods of ascertaining voltage, there being quite a number. On the face of it the thing is so absurd that I am inclined to doubt that the Chicago examiner did any such thing, and if he did, and I was the applicant, I would take the matter into the courts so quick it would make his head swim. It is, however, quite possible that, whereas the applicant thought that was the cause of his being turned down, in reality a license was refused for very different reasons. The spacing of switch bars, or fuses is no proof of voltage, since a 250 switch, or even a 500 or 1,000 volt switch may be used on 110 volt current. As a matter of fact all switches in common use on 110 volt current are 220 volt switches, the same being true of fuse blacks. Also as a matter of fact there is not, so far as I know, a 110 volt switch or fuse black made, the lowest being 220, except for switches designed for use on battery circuits. The lamp test is, however, under all ordinary conditions, entirely practical and amply sufficient for safety. If one wishes to know the exact voltage, a voltmeter is the thing.

The editor of this department is in hearty accord with the limiting of the granting of license to operators who are thoroughly competent men, but he most decidedly is NOT in sympathy with the refusal to license men except for good and sufficient cause, and the cause in this case is neither good, nor is it sufficient. As a general proposition, however, examiners are too lax rather than too strict, and only occasionally has any real ground for complaint as to unjust severity developed. Whereas I have never had any very large opinion of the Chicago examination, still, in this instance, I believe the real cause for refusal to license was not what the applicant believed it to be.

What Do You Think?

John R. Jameson, Gatlan, Mo., says:

> What do you think of a theater manager who will take the electric fan away from his operator during the hottest period of the summer, the operating room being 6x8 feet, with no ventilation?

Why, Friend Jameson, I could be arrested for my thoughts on a proposition of this kind. Your town is pretty well south, and in the middle of summer that little sawed-off operating room, even though it had an ample vent flue, would be decidedly hot. Without ventilation and without a fan I would consider it as a very good substitute for the place that particular manager is going to inhabit some of these days if he don't watch out, though instead of the smell of brimstone there is the carbon gas, which, while not so unpleasant, still is decidedly unhealthy.

I would imagine that the best means of accomplishing a change in his views would be to put a good, strong lock on the operating room door, get him into the room on some pretext, then lock the door and throw the key out of the port hole, compelling him to remain in the room while the show is on for, say, two hours. At the end of that time if he is not converted, and ready to supply a fan, his case is utterly hopeless.

NOTE.—Before trying the aforesaid experiment, Brother Jameson, size the man up carefully, and don't lock the door unless you feel able to handle the situation.

Condenser Quality.

J. H., Johnson, Edenville, N. D., says:

> I have had a dispute with my manager. When I look through my condensing lenses edge-wise the glass is green, though they are clear enough when looked through flat-wise. The manager says the discoloration cuts no figure, and that the lens is a good one. Will you kindly give us your opinion on this point?

The manager, Brother Johnson, is full of stewed prunes on this particular proposition, but fortunately his opinion is injuring himself more than anyone else. If you can secure a perfectly white, clear condensing lens of the same focal length, break it as nearly as possible square across its center; also break one of the green lenses the same way, and put one half of each lens in the folder, either next the arc or farthest away from it, it matters not which. Project the white light to the screen and show him the difference. That will be the answer to your manager. The lens would have to be very bad indeed to show green when looked through flatwise. If it is not clear when looked through sidewise, discard it. It is not a good lens. The practical effect of discoloration in a lens is to cut the light brilliancy, and thus make the manager pay for something he is not getting. High grade condensing lenses are a good investment, always provided you use a modern condenser holder, such as the Preddy or Elbert mount, to prevent undue breakage.

More Talk Than Work.

There are a great many operators in this land of the alleged free who, while they are high class mechanics when it comes to to operating their talk machine, aren't half so high class in the item of screen results. Besides the air there is one thing in the United States which is free, and that is language. You know there are a great many people who will over-work anything that is free, just because it IS free, and sometimes when I look at the screen results and listen to the operator producing them, I am inclined to believe it would perhaps be beneficial if the use of language were to some extent curtailed, or made something less than free.

In a very great number of instances I have had an operator almost talk an arm off me explaining what a really high-class proposition he is, only to later view his work on the screen, without his knowledge, and be utterly amazed at mediocracy of result.

As a matter of fact, as a general proposition the man who produces really high class results on the screen don't do any large amount of talking about it. He is too busy studying his business to wear out his vocal organs in conversation. He does not have to tell what he can do. He simply says: "Old man, come around some time when I don't know it and look at my screen. I am not going to tell you what I can do, but am willing to show you." When a man talks that way to me I at once conclude he has got something to show. He is not a hot air merchant, but one who actually and really delivers the goods on the screen. The foregoing is not, of course, in any way intended to apply to the operator who describes his work, with due modesty, by letter. He has no opportunity for actual demonstration. I am hitting at the braggart who really has nothing but brag.

Motor Grease.

Theater men have experienced considerable difficulty through the grounding of fans and other small motors, due to a surplus of oil getting out of the bearings and smearing over around the windings.

Mr. Leonard A. Ruess, electrician for the Nicholas Power Company, has compounded a grease designed for lubricating small motors and fans without the aforenamed trouble.

The new lubricant is put up in cans, and is now on the market under the trade name "Leonard's grease." It has been thoroughly tested out and seems to fill the bill very well indeed. It can therefore be recommended to operators and managers for use on small motors. It is NOT designed for use on large motors using the oil ring system of lubrication.

Camera Specifications.

THE rapid growth of the motion picture industry has made it a difficult problem for manufactures of motion picture apparatus to keep pace with the growing demands of the industry. The manufacturing problems have paralleled in many respects those of the automobile industry, but have by no means kept pace with them. It was only with the standardization of parts, and with the adoption of a standard method of measurements and specifications, that the automobile industry was able to reach the development that it has today. The American Society of Automobile Engineers was probably the largest factor in bringing about the standards in use in the automobile industry. It has, every year since its formation, helped in the elimination of freak designs and in rendering obsolete the unnecessary duplication of parts in odd sizes. The old idea of a manufacturer who would compel a customer to replace every part of a car from parts manufactured in that particular factory by making as many of the parts as possible of a different size from that of any other manufacturer is one which has never met with the approval of the consumer. If a car owner wished to use a different spark plug or piston ring than that supplied by the manufacturer of his car it did not improve his state of mind to find that no other make of spark plug or piston ring would fit. No manufacturer ever benefited by this selfish attitude, for as soon as he had turned out enough of his odd sizes to make a market every other accessories maker turned to and made an odd size to fit it. This duplication of parts entailed more machinery, higher costs and, consequently, bigger prices for the consumer to pay.

Although it would seem at first inspection that the fact that the size of the film is practically an international standard and would, therefore, militate against an undue multiplication of parts in the film business, still we find on closer inspection that affairs are as bad or worse than they were at one time in the manufacture of gasoline vehicles. There has been incorporated recently the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. It is to be hoped that they may do the same service for the motion picture industry that the American Society of Automobile Engineers is doing for the automobile industry.

One of the first things to put in order out of the chaos of filmdom is a comprehensive and comprehensible list of specifications by which a camera may be described. No manufacturer of automobiles would think of issuing a catalogue describing his car without including a full and detailed list of specifications. Yet none of the camera manufacturers have seemed to think this necessary in the catalogues describing their cameras. They often elaborate to great extent on some one feature or another, but slide gracefully out of describing some of the essentials which they have left out of the catalogue, and generally left out of the camera also.

The following list is given as covering most of the more important points which a purchaser of a motion picture camera would expect to find listed in a catalogue:

Case: Kind and grade of materials used, with thickness of same; how seasoned and how joined together; whether separate or integral with mechanism; how removed for repairing mechanism. Under Case, which means the housing of the camera itself and not the carrying case, should be listed the following sub-heads:

Size: Interior and exterior dimensions.

Handle: Means for handling or carrying without case.

Doors: All doors, separable panels, etc., together with fittings, fastenings, latches, catches, should be accurately described, as well as the means by which light tightness is attained, whether by step, terrace or return grooves; felt or velvet packing or spring-controlled light traps. Many cameras have door fastenings which cannot be opened without a tool of some kind, such as a thin coin or a screwdriver; they are very inconvenient, to say the least.

Retorts or Magazines: These are the boxes which hold the film before and after taking. They should be described as exterior or interior, meaning whether inside or outside the case when threaded to the camera. The upper or feed retort contains the unexposed film and the take-up magazine receives the exposed film. In most makes of cameras the feed and take-up retorts are interchangeable, but this is not always so. A camera in which the retorts are not interchangeable must have twice the bulk of extra retorts that one with interchangeable retorts has. Non-interchangeable magazines are generally built en bloc; that is, fastened together, or they may be, as in the Edison camera, a single retort with two spindles, one for the feed and the other for the take-up. Magazines may be rectangular or round with separate, hinged, bayonet joint or screw top covers with various kinds of locks, catches and eccentric fastenings.

The material from which retorts are made is important. Wood, sheet metal, cast aluminum, Bakelite, alloy, brass, etc., are used by different makers.

Spindles and spools are important. If they are not strongly made they are liable to bend and get out of alignment, causing the camera to run hard and buckle. In most types of magazines the spindles are mounted in the magazines, and where the material is sheet metal, as in the Pathe Portable, a slight dent in the retort may tilt the spindle. In the De Brie and some other makes the arbor, or spindle, is built permanently in the camera and the retort, which has a hole in the center, is slipped onto this arbor, which at the same time receives the film spool. A small key, or projection, on the arbor engages a slot grooved within the film spool and causes it to revolve. The Universal and Akeley retorts are designed to use the regular wooden spools which the Eastman Company places in each roll that it sends out. As most regular sizes of retort spools are larger than the Eastman core, it is either necessary to try out a few feet of film from the center of the roll in order to slip the larger spool in place, or to rewind the film upon a special rewinder, which has a spindle of the same dimensions as that of the retort spindle. The rewinding wastes time and the other method wastes film, so that the spindles which take the regular core are generally preferable. The clips by which the end of the film is fastened to most types of spools are very inconvenient, many of them projecting so that they cause the first few turns of film to wind unevenly, thereby creating friction upon the sides of the retort, sometimes leading to buckling on account of the film roll sticking in the retort and refusing to turn. A slot cut diagonally into the spool for receiving the end of the film, or a wide collar of spring brass, as wide as the spool and nearly encircling it, permits the firm holding of the end and makes a smooth surface for the film to wind upon. Buckling and binding are more often caused by defective spool spindles than almost any other reason. Cameras should be so designed that the retorts are firmly held in alignment with the sprockets in one direction and the spool spindle on a center with the take-up arbor in the other. In cameras using retorts with individual spindles the spindle must engage with the take-up arbor by means of some sort of a flexible clutch. The one most generally used is that of a disc, or wheel, mounted upon the end of the take-up shaft and carrying two projections which engage in a slotted wheel or on opposite ends of a bar fastened to the outer end of the spool spindle. A retort slightly out of alignment may press upon the projections of the revolving disc of the take-up arbor, causing it to bind against the magazine.

Light Traps: Light traps are the slots in the magazines through which the film emerges or is taken up. These are usually mere slots covered with velvet and backed by one or more small rollers. Their construction is very important because the friction of the velvet generates static electricity under certain conditions. The purpose of the velvet is to exclude light from the interior of the magazine and to permit a smooth way for the passage of the film. As long as this velvet is kept clean there is no danger of the film being scratched by its passage across the cloth, but the pile, or nap, of the cloth wears away and catches very easily any particles or dust or grit which come in contact with it, often causing long longitudinal scratches on the film. The rollers just inside the light trap are intended to relieve as much as possible the pressure of the film against the velvet as it passes through. They, too, are often the cause of scratches, especially as they are at times prone to bind and do not revolve as they should. These rollers should be relieved in the center so that they bear only upon the perforated edges of the film. They should be looked after frequently to see that they revolve freely. On account of the danger of getting oil upon the film it is not wise to lubricate the small bearings upon which these rollers turn. In many of the later models of cameras the closing of the door of the camera causes a pressure upon a projecting catch which opens the light trap of the retort for a quarter of an inch or more, thereby permitting the film to feed freely through the trap without coming in contact with the velvet. This is a very desirable feature, indeed, since it eliminates at once a great deal of the danger of scratches and of static electrical markings.

Announcement.

ANY questions concerning music for the film, suitable instrumentation for motion picture theaters, questions relating to the pipe organ; in fact, any questions, criticisms or suggestions dealing with musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered by Mr. Stuckey through this department. Inquiries should be addressed to Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York City.

Victrola as Accompaniment for Pictures.

THIS is how a Kentucky exhibitor solved the particular musical problem by which she was confronted:

Musical Editor, Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir.—We have, in a town of 1,200, a small theater seating 250. At first we tried a player piano. The music for the picture falls on me, so I am deeply interested in seeing that each picture has as good a musical setting as I can get. The piano proved very unsatisfactory, as it took so long to re-wind the rolls, and we could not make changes quick enough. So, after a long time, I hit upon what I consider the next best to having a real good pianist (which is something we can't afford). I bought a Victrola.

Now, if you have never heard of a Victrola being used in a picture show, do not condemn it. You see I can get any kind of music I want in this way—from the popular airs, waltzes, marches, on up to grand opera and the classics, played by the world's best musicians and, of course, I only use instrumental music.

I play just as much of the record as it is necessary, or play it over if needed. I can make my changes from one record to another in just a second or two, and as I go over my picture when the reels come in the morning and select what suits the different scenes, writing down my cues, I do get real satisfactory results.

Yours very sincerely,
(Mrs.) A. N. MILES, Eminence, Kentucky.

Managers in other small towns will probably find this plan an excellent one, as it is often impossible to get a good pianist and often too expensive where the seating capacity is small. Attention must be given to the selection of suitable records, and the following list from the catalog of the Victor Talking Machine Company is suggested for managers or musicians interested in the Victrola as means of musical interpretation for the films:

Amarylis (Ghys), No. 67683. Andante from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, No. 35275. Apple Blossoms (Reviere), No. 35101. Badinage (Herbert), No. 70053). Blue Danube Waltz (Strauss), No. 31294. Casse Noisette (Nut Cracker Suite) (Tschaikowsky), No. 45053. Dance of the Hours from "Giaconda," No. 70070. Firefly Waltzes (Friml), No. 35278. Jewels of the Madonna Intermezzo, No. 35270. L'Arlesienne Prelude, Part I, No. 35461. L'Arlesienne Pastorale, Part I, No. 17660. Liebstraum (Liszt), No. 70046. Lohengrin, Prelude, No. 31779. March Militaire (Schubert), No. 35493. March Slave (Tschaikowsky), No. 70050. Intermezzo and Nocturne from "Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelsohn), No. 35527. Natoma Dagger Dance (Herbert), No. 70049. Peer Gynt Suite (Grieg), No. 35470. "Romeo and Juliet" (Gounod). Juliet's Slumber, No. 17866. Scenes Pittoresques "Angelus" Massenet, No. 35437. Traviata Prelude (Verdi), No. 68027. Woodland Sketches, "An Old Trysting Place," "To a Wild Rose," (MacDowell), No. 60053.

Additional numbers suitable for depicting screen action can be secured by addressing Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, also questions regarding the Victrola for interpreting moving pictures will be answered by letter or through this department.

Three Important Harmony Books.

A STUDY OF MODERN HARMONY, by Rene Lenormand, is an exhaustive presentation of the latest phases into which the art of composition has developed in France. This book is replete with musical examples taken from the works of Louis Aubert, Bruneau, Chabrier, Chausson, Debussy, Dukas, Dupont, Faure, d'Indy, Ravel, Satie, Florent Schmitt and others. The author shows the many harmonic innovations of these men, which might seem at times to be discords rather than to merit the term of "harmony," can still be explained, and have their roots in established and recognized chord forms. They follow an underlying principle as closely as did the music of older masters. It must be acknowledged that Mr. Lenormand has solved the problem in the most interesting manner, and that his lucid exposition forms highly enlightening material. It was not the author's plan to write a treatise upon how to write modern music. Nevertheless, one cannot but feel that this subject, so succinctly treated, teaches an inspiring lesson to every musician actively engaged in composition, and that it will dissipate many erroneous beliefs with regard to supposedly arbitrary practices of modern French writers. Particularly instructive chapters are those dealing with chords of the seventh and ninth, with the preparation of discords, and with the novel devices for ending a piece. It is only natural that in this book the whole tone scale receives its due consideration, as it was mainly through the Neo-French School that its legitimate effects and usage have been introduced. Published by the Boston Music Co.

MODERN HARMONY—ITS EXPLANATION AND APPLICATION.—By A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F. R. C. O. This work is intended, not to supplant, but to supplement the existing harmony books. Teachers, students and musicians will welcome this book, which is the first of its kind, dealing comprehensively with both the technical and aesthetic elucidation of modern music. It contains 400 examples from the works of Richard Strauss, Debussy, Stravinsky, Scriabine, Ravel, Schonberg, Albeniz, Dohnanyi, Korngold, Reger, Sibelius and of many other modern as well as earlier composers. In order to make the book interesting to the general reader, as well as useful to the student, a glossary of technical terms has been supplied for the convenience of the former, while the practical student may like to try his hand in the working out of some of the exercises appended to the volume. The book is attractively bound and contains 219 pages of actual text matter, besides handy indices. Published by the Boston Music Company.

MELODIES AND HOW TO HARMONIZE THEM.—By Edmonstoune Duncan. The aim of this book is chiefly practical. An average student finds it difficult to begin harmonizing melodies, and he is usually left to pick it up by himself, with what aid he may deprive from counterpoint and occasional remarks from his teacher. To such, the present treatise should appeal, while to the really gifted student (who finds melodies and basses offer no difference in degree of difficulty) benefit may accrue from a perusal of the examples, some of which are rare. Doubtless the most sensible method of employing the work will be to use it concurrently with a Manual on Harmony. As the best and most up-to-date in this line may be recommended the "Treatise on Harmony" by J. Humfrey Anger, with analytical keys for self-instruction. Published by the Boston Music Company.

Music Every Musician Should Know.

NOCTURNE OP. 27, NO. 2—Chopin.

This Nocturne in C-sharp minor belongs among the most poetical of Chopin's works. On account of its romantic character it rather eludes analysis. A poetical picture, suggested by this Nocturne, stirs our imagination, giving more color to our interpretations. Suppose we imagine in this Nocturne, a calm, silvery lake, on a misty night, moonlight shining softly through the clouds. A sweet melody is sung to the accompaniment of the gentle motion of the waves. Farther on there comes a gathering storm; the lovely melody is interrupted by cries of anguish, which soon reaches the climax of despair, amidst the restless tossing of the stormy waves. Suddenly there bursts a new note, and there we come back again to the calm and mist and moonlight.

THE FLATTERER—Chaminade.

Cecile Chaminade has become known all over the world for the daintiness and piquancy of her music. Her compositions, fresh and individual in style, are tuneful and attractive. Her harmonic changes are captivating in originality, and her work marked with grace that is extremely individual and at the same time distinctively French. "Lisonjera" is a Spanish word meaning flatterer, or cajoler. The piece should be played with humorous allurement and should be made very rhythmic, with full attention to rubato and all changes or tempo; and the pace should not be too languid.

A DREAM OF LOVE—Liszt.

This piece is the best known of a series of three Nocturnes written by Liszt, depicting the emotions suggested by certain love-poems by Uhland and Freiligrath. This Nocturne consists entirely of the development of a luscious melody of a rather sentimental character which is brought to a climax of effect culminating in one of those typical bravura passages that are so distinctly characteristic of Liszt's style.

There is only one real way to censor pictures. Punish the man who makes them, just as the publisher of a forbidden book is punished. No new laws are necessary for this, merely persistent enforcement of existing legislation. Were it possible to ship film through the mails, it is probable that Atlanta would already be housing some examples, but the law against obscene matter does not apply solely to matter in the mails.

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

CONNESS, Robert. Born in La Salle County, Illinois. Irish ancestry. Is 5 feet 11½ inches tall and weighs 175 pounds. Black hair, blue eyes and dark complexion. Mr. Conness made his stage debut in 1898 and has been leading man for Blanche Walsh, Mary Mannering, Francis Wilson and other prominent stars and was featured in the Irish drama, Robert Emmett. In 1910 he left the stage to join the Edison players and made his debut in July of that year in the first of the Van Bibber series, playing the part of Van Bibber in numerous plays founded upon the stories of the late Richard Harding Davis. He soon became one of the Edison favorites and was seen in a long line of parts, the most notable being the name part in The Martyrdom of Philip Strong, conceeded to be one of the best Edisons produced. He is now connected with the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

GISH, Dorothy Elizabeth. Born in Dayton, Ohio. American parentage. Is 5 feet, 2 inches tall and weighs 105 pounds. Blonde hair and blue eyes, light complexion. Miss Gish went to the dramatic stage when almost a baby, and has trod the boards since 1903, which seems a long time ago to her. In 1912 she joined the Biograph company, appearing first in July of that year in An Unseen Enemy. She has always been under the stage management of David W. Griffith and when he went to the Reliance, later to become the Fine Arts, she was one of those who followed him to his new connection. Since then she has had a long line of star characterizations, of which her favorites are Jordan Is a Hard Road and Betty of Greystone. Miss Gish writes that her work is both her fad and her pleasure as well as occupation, but probably were she pressed she would admit to a fondness for automobiling.

HART, William S. Born in Newburg, N. Y., of English-Irish parentage. Is six feet one, and weighs 190 pounds, dark complexion, blue eyes and brown hair. He went on the stage in 1889 and rapidly forged to the front. He was leading man with Mme. Modjeska for a time, and has played in many notable productions, including the original Ben Hur cast. He went west in 1914 to play in Ince pictures and made his screen debut in May of that year in The Bargain. He jumped into almost immediate popularity with the fans and now he has almost a copyright on bad-men characters. He can look and act like a full-grown man, and it is his robust personality and virile forces, as well as his finished acting, that have made him one of the real screen stars. Among his best roles might be mentioned The Ayrian, Hell's Hinges, The Disciple and a score of plays of that type.

MAYO, Edna. Born in Philadelphia. American parentage. Five feet, three inches, weighs 120 pounds. Light hair, blue eyes. Has been on the legitimate stage in such hits as Madame X, Excuse Me and Help Wanted, but finds a greater scope in pictures. She has been with Pathe and The Famous Players, but for two or three years past she has been with the Essanay company and has appeared with Henry Walthall as his co-star in several notable productions and has been featured in The Return of Eve, The Blindness of Virtue, had the lead in The Misleading Lady and The Chaperone. Her picture debut was made in Pathe's The Quest of the Sacred. Instead of the long list of fads and fancies, Miss Mayo delights in doing humane work and is the staunch friend of homeless cats and dogs, abused horses. She is also clever at modeling. She has covered a wide range of characters.

LOVELY, Louise. Born in Sydney, Australia. French-Swiss parentage. Five feet, two inches tall, weighs 125 pounds. Light hair and blue-grey eyes. Miss Lovely, professionally known in Australia as Louise Carbasse, made her stage debut in 1903 as Little Eva in Uncle Tom's Cabin, but returned to Australia, where she starred in The Warning, Camille, Nell Gwynne and other plays and was featured in vaudeville. She made her picture debut in Australia with the Australian Biograph Co. in Colleen Bawn, and was featured in many five reelers such as The Bush Girl and A Daughter of Australia. In America she made her film debut with the Universal in Father and the Boys and has been featured in Bluebird and other Universal plays such as Bobbie of the Ballet, Bettina Loved a Soldier and The Gilded Spider. Like most visitors from "down under" she likes outdoors.

DREW, Sidney. Born in New York City of Irish-English parentage, Mr. Drew is that rara avis, a "real" New Yorker. He is 5 feet, 7 inches, weighs 149 pounds, has light brown hair, blue eyes and a light complexion. He made his stage debut in November, 1882, and for thirty years he played in drama and vaudeville, his last starring appearance being in Billy, an amplification of an earlier vaudeville sketch. He was one of the first of the dramatic actors to enter vaudeville and he remained in that field long after the novelty of a name ceased to draw, for he made good. He went to the Vitagraph in August, 1913, and made his screen debut in The Still Voice. For a time he played any leading part for which he might be cast, either dramatic or comedy, but his forte was comedy and he soon specialized in this. Under the Metro banner he has still further developed his ideas.

"The Value of Venom."

"REEL Life No. 35" contains a comprehensive illustration of how venom is obtained. The opening scenes show the actual catching and boxing of venomous snakes in Brazil. Scenes at the Sao Paulo Institute in Brazil show how poisonous snakes are kept and classified. It is interesting to note the garden surrounded by high walls and water where all sorts of poisonous snakes are allowed to glide at large. The actual extraction of venom from the poison sac connected with the fang of the snake is also shown. Each of these snakes, we are told, yields on an average 30 centigrams of venom, which is found to be effective in treating cases of paralysis, epilepsy, etc., and also in the treatment of snake bites.

"The Most Unique Basket."

Many of our readers may not be familiar with one of the uses to which that queer little animal, the armadillo, is put. On a Texas farm are kept 10,000 armadillos, which at maturity are killed and their shell backs made into attractive baskets. These shells, after being scraped clean of the edible meat, and the head and tail joined to form a handle, are varnished, dried, and frequently lined with vari-colored silks before being shipped to the market. This subject is also found in "Reel Life No. 35."

"The Olive Industry."

We learn through "Reel Life No. 35" that California, into which state the olive industry was introduced in the 17th century by Catholic padres, has now in the neighborhood of 1,500,000 olive trees. One olive farm near Los Angeles, which we are given glimpses of in this picture, consists of 1,500 acres, and contains 140,000 trees. We are allowed in this film to witness the picking of the olives, green and ripe, the grading and assorting, the removal of pits in the preparation of stuffed olives, after which the pits are replaced by a Chili pepper filling, and the bottling of the olives, which is done by hand.

"A Ramble 'Round Luchon."

This beautiful scenic is found in "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 8," and takes us via an electric railway to a height of 5,400 feet in the Pyrenees mountains at a location near the French and Spanish border line. From here we are enabled to gain a charming view of the little town of Luchon as it nestles in the valley below. One of the lovely sights in the mountains is Lake Oc, fed by the mountain streams that flow into it through various falls and cascades.

"Rio de Janeiro."

Some excellent views of the wonderful South American city, Rio de Janeiro, are shown in "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 8." These views include a panoramic view of the city and harbor, with Sugar Loaf mountain in the distance, a close view of the harbor with the Sierra da Cariora mountains which encircle it, the Mangrove canal and the famous avenue of palms.

A New and Portentous Venture

Collegiate Film Producing and Distributing Company Being Whipped Into Shape for Active Service.

THE NEWEST development in the educational field presents what seems to be a solid front—a substantial foundation, in other words. The Collegiate Film Producing and Distributing Company is the outcome of six years of careful investigation and purposeful meditation on that phase of the future of the educational film which has received little serious consideration. The question of the proper supply of the class rooms of schools, colleges and universities with films adequate to their needs in quality as well as quantity, and also the illustration of biblical history and parables and the International Sunday School Lessons, is the problem upon which the Collegiate Film Producing and Distributing Company is focusing its efforts.

This new venture, not yet in actual working shape, but which has had already subscribed for its needs among those directly interested in its organization in the neighborhood of a half million dollars, expects to commence work on the producing end shortly after the opening of Spring. The project owes its birth to Samuel H. Wandell, a well-known lawyer of 2 Rector street, New York City, and George Vivian, manager of the Punch and Judy theater, and has its headquarters for the present at the offices of Mr. Wandell.

The general construction of this concern is somewhat different from that of other organizations in the field. It consists of two executive boards, one a board of directors composed of men actively engaged in the business enterprise, and the other a board of founders composed of prominent educators and well-known citizens picked from different parts of the country, who will pass upon the class of films to be manufactured.

The problem of preparing a market which will insure the success of the project will be attacked by approaching individually boards of education and governmental staffs of universities throughout the country on the question of the illustration of school curriculums. Mr. Vivian, who is well known in educational and theatrical circles, and who managed the Ben Greet tours in this country and also those of the Philharmonic Orchestra, is unusually well equipped to handle at least a portion of this work. In addition to his American enterprises he occupied for some time the chair of English at the Culver Military Academy, and made his greatest success in this and the teaching of dramatic interpretation through a method of visualization which he practised in conjunction with his class work. It was in this way, we learn, that Mr. Vivian became inspired with the idea of film visualization in schools, which he later blended with the long contemplated scheme of Mr. Wandell.

Some estimate of the careful manner in which the founders of this organization have sounded the possibilities of their market can be obtained from the following figures supplied by them. They state that in the United States and Canada there are approximately 600 colleges and universities, 1,700 professional schools, 10,000 high schools and preparatory schools, 120,000 common schools, 120,000 church buildings, and 150,000 Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and other social and fraternal organization branch buildings, with 20,000,000 children attending the public schools.

In addition to the actual manufacture of films covering such subjects as history, literature, zoology, geology, biology, forestry, geography, science, hygiene, agriculture, industries.

political science, national defense, etc., a special service which will eliminate the usual system of renting through exchanges, and whereby educational institutions can be supplied direct, will be maintained. It is further planned to issue with each subject a scenario for the use of students, with notes properly compiled by prominent educators. These scenarios are intended to serve the purpose of text books, and are to be used in conjunction with the films in class room work.

While the manufacture of biblical films is but a branch of this gigantic enterprise, it is none the less important, and is likely to be greeted with enthusiasm by clergymen and church workers throughout the country. A theater service for educational films is also contemplated, and by the seal of approval set on all films issued by the Collegiate Film Producing and Distributing Co., by the educators and well-known citizens composing the board of founders, compunctions with regard to censorship will be set aside.

In the face of the fact that the present enterprise is ponderous beyond anything in this line that has actually been attempted before, we extend our heartiest good wishes for its success, feeling that the care with which each detail of procedure has been weighed, and the close acquaintanceship with the majority of colleges and universities throughout the land enjoyed by at least one of its founders, Mr. Vivian, should win for the enterprise the success which it deserves.

FOR PURE FOOD INTERESTS.

An industrial film, 700 feet long and showing how "Stockinette" hams of the Red Star brand are produced by Armour & Company for the trade, is forming an interesting feature of the bill at the Stone Opera House this week.

Pigs in a field of clover on stock farms from which Armour & Company obtain the porkers or their celebrated hams are shown in the first part of the picture. The pigs are given the best of care on the farms. When ready for shipment they are herded up and become passengers in large, comfortable stock-cars. The unloading process in the Chicago stockyards is shown. The pigs are then given baths and prepared for slaughter. After being killed and dissected, the parts used for hams are placed in vats containing boiling water, then scrubbed and cleaned, then put on wide belts and moved to a place where a Government officer inspects the pork.

The next process shown is that of placing the parts in "Stockinettes." This work is done by machinery. The "Stockinettes" are then hung on ham trees and run into the smoke houses. After being smoked, the hams are labeled and delivery trucks haul them to market. The final scene is that of a home around a dining room table in which is gathered a family enjoying Armour brand ham served as an item on the menu.

"OUT OF DARKNESS," OR PROGRESS.

A motion picture is to be presented in the New Auditorium theater, Friday night, which will have a special interest for Dayton people.

The title of the picture is "Out of Darkness." It is the story of the happiness that comes to a farm family through the introduction into their home of modern conveniences of all kinds, and its particular interest for Dayton people lies in the fact that a Delco Light electric light and power plant is the means of bringing the modern conveniences to this farm home. The story is interesting and entertaining.

The film is one of many which will be sent to 2,000 motion picture theaters in towns and villages all over the country. The purpose of this series of films is to present to the people, in the form of an entertaining story, the possibilities of successful farming in some of the undeveloped sections of the country, the value of the latest and most improved farming methods and the practical and social value of equipping every farm home with modern comforts and conveniences.

This tour, which will cover New England and Northeastern New York, opened at Schenectady on Jan. 3. Jan. 4 saw Miss Peck at Albany, Jan. 6 at Glen Falls, Jan. 8 at Troy and Jan. 9 at Burlington, Vt. Following these dates she will speak in Springfield, Mass., on Jan. 11, Boston and Salem, Mass., Jan. 15 and 17, in Portland, Me., on Jan. 22, Providence, R. Miss Peck's campaign work is being conducted, as most of our readers know, in co-operation with the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures). We wish Miss Peck the same satisfactory results experienced in her recent tour of the middle western states.

Japan Likes American Pictures

Popularity of Our Productions Rises Rapidly Within the Past Two Years—Supersede All Other Imported Films.

IN "Commerce Reports," U. S. Vice-Consul William R. Langdon, Yokohama, says that the past two years have seen American motion pictures rise rapidly in popularity and practically supersede all other imported films in Japan. Italian pictures are about the only other foreign products commonly exhibited in Japan, but they are steadily losing ground in competition with the productions of American studios.

Tokio has 120 motion picture theaters and Yokohama has about 50. In Tokio the six largest and in Yokohama the two largest show foreign films exclusively, while the houses with a limited seating capacity usually have a mixed program of Japanese and foreign pictures. It is in the poorest and smallest theaters that only Japanese films are used.

The Japanese are developing into enthusiastic "movie fans," especially the laboring and servant classes, with whom well-known American film actors are becoming great favorites.

Motion picture houses in Tokio and Yokohama seat from 500 to 1,000 persons. The price of admission ranges from 5 to 15 cents, and one house in Yokohama charges 30 cents per "special" seat. Double prices are charged when the program contains some especially good or expensive film. The cheapest seats consist of rows of hard wooden benches on the ground floor, and the first-class and second-class seats are always in the gallery. The usual performance lasts three hours, and in most cases consists of two or three single-reel comedies, one instructive or scenic film, and a few "episodes" from a serial or a two-act or three-act "sensational" drama. The market for American cameras, projectors, and accessories is poor, as these articles are made in Japan and there is a 50 per cent. ad valorem import duty on them.

The average rental for film is two cents per foot a day, regardless of the quality or cost of production. Importers invariably lose money when they buy and import a high-priced feature film from the United States, for they can rent it for no more than is paid for cheap productions, so they are abandoning the practice of buying American films outright. Importers can afford to purchase only cheap new or second-hand, but originally expensive, films.

The United States Vice-Consul at Dairen, Manchuria, A. A. Williamson, writes that Dairen has three motion picture houses with an average seating capacity of 500. Admission prices are 15 sen and 30 sen (about 7½ and 15 cents) for two of them, and 5 and 10 sen (2¾ and 5 cents) for the third. One place is run by the South Manchuria Railway in connection with an amusement park. This house uses foreign films only—scenic, dramatic, comic, and miscellaneous. It is the cheapest of the three, but as it is situated outside the town proper the attendance is smaller. It is inaccessible to vehicles and is closed during stormy weather. It is the only house that buys films, though some that it shows are rented.

The remaining two houses rent pictures or subscribe to services maintained by syndicates in Japan. The films supplied are made by Ambrosia (Italian), Pathe (French), Keystone, and one or two other American companies.

Dairen is a free port, and there is no duty to pay on imports, but the local houses find it advantageous to subscribe to a "circuit," and American manufacturers would find it best to get in touch with the companies in Japan supplying these "circuits." Their addresses may be obtained from the consulate general at Yokohama.

Australian Notes

OWING to the political crisis over the Conscription Referendum the Federal Treasurer (Mr. Higgs) has resigned. The Amusement Tax, constructed by Mr. Higgs, and which was to take effect on November 1st, has been indefinitely postponed until a successor is appointed.

The state tax in Southern Australia on amusements has, however, taken effect. Playgoers and picture patrons in that state will, if the Federal tax is carried in its present form, have to meet a 33 per cent. increase on the existing admission rate. It does not require great imaginative powers to realize what the result of this will be. It spells certain disaster to many showmen now wavering between success and failure, and will mean the ruin of hundreds of small investors, while the big managers will also find their financial resources strained to the breaking point. The Showmen's Association has advised the members to put the facts of the situation before each Federal member of Parliament, and urge that the tax be modified to an extent that will make it bearable.

It has been pointed out to the Government that the revenue benefits by £100,000 yearly by the duty on imported film, and that the picture business and the legitimate theaters annually distribute £2,000,000. One picture organization alone distributes annually the following amounts: Orchestras, £30,000; lighting, £30,000; staff, £50,000; rents, £50,000; advertising, £30,000; rates and taxes, £16,000.

A Sydney film exchange is releasing so-called "Chaplin Revues," being scraps of old Keystone and Essanay releases joined together in more or less story form.

Two of the latest of these films are entitled "Charlie's Picnic" and "Charlie, the Gang Leader."

An advertisement of the Universal subject, "Where Are My Children," strikes an unconsciously funny note. In the advertisement appearing in the Sydney papers a physician's open ledger is shown, in which is an entry headed "Mrs. Toad," which is really a very unfortunate name to choose. Taken in conjunction with the title of the picture, a ribald mind would suggest rather "Where Are My Tadpoles?"

The Australian rights of the Willard-Moran fight films have been secured by the Fox Film Corporation and have been released in Sydney last week.

Owing to the new war tax on profits, very little is likely to be attempted in the picture production line in this country for some time to come. One producer says that he could make only 8 per cent. profit if he was to produce a photoplay with the present state of affairs.

"The Pioneers," a six-part adaptation of the prize Australian novel by Kathryn Susannah Pritchard, was released this week at the Broadway Theater. The production was made by Franklyn Barrett, assisted by Martyn Keith. Mr. Barrett also having adapted the story and photographed the picture. On the whole, it is one of the best attempts at production in this country for some time. It is a typically Australian story, not absolutely original, but very appealing. A fine variety of scenery has been obtained—all within forty miles of Sydney, by the way. The photography is a special feature, Mr. Barrett doing some very fine work. He has also introduced a new tint for outdoor scenes, a kind of bluish green, which is very natural and effective. A number of prominent Australians have leading parts in the cast, but one outstanding characterization is given by Winter Hall, who left Australia last month to try his luck in the picture game in California. Although he has not appeared in any other film besides "The Pioneers," he acts with restraint, and is a commanding figure on the screen at all times. He should be a big asset to the company availing itself of his services.

Franklyn Barrett is well known in the eastern states of the U. S. A., having been buying representative there a few years ago from Fraser Films, Ltd., of this city.

Horse racing may well be called the national sport of Australia. The Melbourne Cup is the biggest racing attraction of the year, and is run regularly on the first Tuesday of November each year. Of this event the Australian Gazette prints no less than twenty-six copies, which is a record for this country.

Perhaps no picture yet shown in Sydney has proved such a good drawing card as "Where Are My Children," the Universal feature, which has been screened each day at the Theater Royal for the past two weeks. The attendance for this time has been in excess of 73,000, four shows being given each day, to packed houses. The picture received, unconsciously, a good advertisement, when the Chief Secretary (Mr. George Mack) prohibited any person under the age of sixteen years of age from seeing the picture. It has, of course, had the effect of drawing many over that age to see what it was all about.

When Australasian Films, Ltd., announced some time ago that they had secured Australasian rights for the Mutual-Chaplin comedies, know-alls in this city shook their heads and declared that Chaplin was no longer a boom, and that Australasian Films would certainly find that they had made a bad venture.

However, time has shown that all the opinions were far from right. Charlie still proves as good a drawing power as ever, and the Mutual subjects are therefore put on for the first week at Sydney at two of the largest theaters controlled by Union Theaters, Ltd., the Triangle-Lyceum and the Crystal Palace, the former seating over two thousand and the latter one thousand. In spite of this seating capacity, huge crowds are found outside the theaters waiting for admission every night of the screenings. The accompanying flashlight photograph shows portion of a crowd waiting to get into the Crystal Palace to see "The Fireman." It also shows a small part of the elaborate lobby display, which was made under the supervision of C. L. Yearsley, publicity manager for Australasian Films, Ltd. It may also be mentioned that Mr. Yearsley is an American, hailing from Spokane, Washington. After a week's run at the above theaters, the comedies are transferred to the Lyric and Empress theaters, both also controlled by Union Theaters, Ltd. These shows have a joint seating capacity of over three thousand. It will be easily seen from this that Chaplin is still holding his own in Australia. His comedies released here to date are "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "One A. M.," "The Pawnshop," and "The Count."

BURNET-KUHN PLAYS SANTA CLAUS.

Following a custom long prevalent among successful organizations the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company, 39 South Lasalle street, Chicago, distributed golden eagles among their employes as Christmas remembrances, each gold piece being accompanied by a letter of appreciation for services rendered and wishing each recipient a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Every one, from department heads down to office boys and stenographers was remembered and Santa Claus in his corporate guise was voted a royal good fellow.

When one starts out with false and misleading claims, it usually becomes increasingly difficult to fulfill the expectations thus created. Empty promises of value that can never be fulfilled to either exhibitors or advertisers does not beget the confidence, at least of those who think for themselves.

British Notes

AFTER a protracted illness the death took place last week of Mr. Alexander Redford, the first president of the voluntary form of censorship we have at present for the motion picture industry here, namely the British Board of Film Censors. Previous to 1911 Mr. Redford was examiner of plays in the office of the Lord Chamberlain. Upon many occasions Mr. Redford's duties were far from pleasant, but the tact and diplomacy with which he maintained the equilibrium between contending factions won him many admirers and his demise is sincerely mourned by all who knew him.

Meanwhile our friends across the channel appear to be faring worse. Notwithstanding extra taxation, motion picture theaters in Paris are to close down one day per week.

A striking contribution to the already illustrious list of official films of different phases of the great war was sent by special messenger last week from Rome to the New Gallery Kinema to be screened at a special performance attended by Queen Alexandra and a large number of royal and diplomatic personages in aid of the Italian Red Cross funds. The title is "Adamello," and the subject embraces a complete pictorial record of the Italian mountain warfare. Hauling heavy artillery across marshy ground is difficult, but the pictures in this film of the heaviest field pieces going up perpendicular Alpine slopes are almost beyond belief.

I hear that the negatives of the Shackleton Antarctic expedition which, it will be remembered, met with two-fold disaster, show promise of some of the most wonderful polar pictures yet seen. The Triangle subject, "The Despoiler," was screened at a trade show at the Alhambra, London, last week. The recent superfluity of war dramas has to a certain extent made the exhibitor shy at subjects professing similarity or comparison to the present struggle in France and Belgium. "Our patrons get enough war," said one to the writer, "in their newspapers and conversations. When they come to 'the pictures' give them something to take their thoughts clean away from it if you want to retain their patronage. The only exception made to this rule," he added, "was in the case of 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' and the only one likely to be at present is 'The Despoiler.'" The subject had an enthusiastic reception at the private view and like "Macbeth" will be handled by Mr. Winik as a separate attraction to the regular weekly program.

American Pictures Popular in Switzerland

But Only the Less Expensive Subjects Are Seen—130 Photoplay Theaters in the Country.

SWISS dealers in motion pictures purchase them on their own account, chiefly against cash, and rent them in turn to the picture theaters, of which there are about 130 in the country, including 25 in the Berne consular district, says U. S. Consul Walter H. Schultz at Berne, Switzerland, in a late issue of "Commerce Reports." The average seating capacity of the Swiss motion picture houses is 120, and the average admission fee, $0.18. The most important of these dealers is the Schweiz; Filmgesellschaft, with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, and a branch at Zürich, Switzerland. Another important concern is the Pathé Film-Verleihgesellschaft, Gerbergasse 2, Zürich, which buys and rents films of the French Pathé Society. A third dealer is the World Company, of Geneva.

The demand for American films in Switzerland seems good. Most theaters produce them. Unfortunately, however, only the less expensive pictures of American manufacture are seen here. The films on the market are 25 per cent. German, 20 per cent. French, and 25 per cent. Italian. Before the war French films predominated. They had about 50 per cent. of the trade. Italian films are well liked at present. Swedish pictures are also shown. The American films most widely used in Switzerland are devoted to comic and dramatic subjects. The usual program in Berne calls for two and one-half to three hours of entertainment, consisting of two long films and three or four short ones.

Some of the American film companies have branch offices at Paris. It is claimed that American films meet with greatest success in those sections of Switzerland where French is spoken. This is explained by the love of the French-Swiss for American detective plays, Indian, and wild West pictures. A local motion-picture man suggests that such plays probably would succeed in the German sections, and adds that the titles and subtitles should appear in both the French and German languages. French authorities, however, since the war began have not permitted to pass over French soil those with descriptions in German. Swiss film dealers consequently are compelled to change the French stories into German.

The average rental prices of films are about $0.07 to $0.10 per meter. A dramatic film of 4 acts costs the theaters about $155 per week. Swiss dealers pay from $0.15 to $0.60 per meter, according to quality. The duty on finished films, used or new, according to the Swiss customs tariff, is $5.79 per 220 pounds.

IRENE HOWLEY CO-STAR WITH LIONEL BARRYMORE.

Irene Howley will appear as co-star with Lionel Barrymore in his forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production, "Making Good," from the pen of Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. "Making Good" is a five-act comedy drama which George D. Baker is directing. It was placed in production the day after Christmas.

Miss Howley co-starred with Mr. Barrymore in one of the strongest productions he has ever made for the screen, the Metro-Columbia masterpiece, "A Yellow Streak," and Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe and Columbia studios, decided to repeat this winning combination in "Making Good." Among Miss Howley's other appearances in Metro wonderplays have been "Life's Shadows," in which she was co-star with William Nigh, and "The Purple Lady," in which she shared honors with Ralph Herz. Noted for her versatility, this young star will have another opportunity to display it in the Pollock and Wolf story.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

IN THE Allston district of the Hub is a well established picture theater, also a fine large club for women, many of whom patronize said theater. Recently they had to listen to a male speaker tell of "Famous Actors, Old and New." He was quoted in the press as saying "if these actors were compelled to pose before the screen they would have died of a broken heart." I could scarcely credit this statement made by a professional man in this progressive age. Pretty narrow views and I commend a reading of the late Hugo Muensterberg's book, "The Photo Play." Well, methods in the old days differed from now and so do audiences. What are the facts anyhow. Here we have in this generation players the equal of many in earlier days. How about Sir Herbert Tree, Sir Forbes-Robertson, E. H. Sothern, Robert Mantell, Cyril Maude, Frederick Warde, to say nothing of the imperishable Bernhardt, Ellen Terry, dear Mrs. Whiffen, Nazimova, Bertha Kalisch and scores of great artists who have all appeared before the screen, so that their art is immortalized. I wonder if that speaker has seen "The Shine Girl," "The Light at Dusk," "My Old Dutch," "The Beloved Vagabond," "Little Mary Sunshine," and like plays which are gems and preach wider sermons and more lasting than those emanating from the pulpit.

The Mutuals gave us a private view of "Charity" at the Fenway theater and a notably large audience enjoyed it to the utmost. The Rev. Herbert Johnson, one of the Hub's "live wire" clergymen, made a little speech endorsing the picture which he had seen and urging all to pay attention to its lesson. The house was made up largely of persons interested in the pictures as well as the spoken drama, and it applauded the production. Two young fans, who had been following Creighton Hale in a serial, did not like his part, but to the adults competent to judge it seemed his very best work. Mrs. Griffith, whom many there knew to be the wife of David W. Griffith, as well as author of the play, certainly made a hit and disclosed artistic ability. There is a Dickens atmosphere in "Charity," reminding one of old Squeer's school in "Nicholas Nickleby." I liked particularly the indictment of misplaced charity and its effect on the indifferent, apathetic individual who sniffs the air and says "Oh, those things are never so." Pretty good propaganda for Linda Griffith to give out.

What have I seen lately? So many pictures and so many good ones that I clamor for space to do them justice. "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie" gave pleasure owing to the improved acting of Ethel Barrymore and the wonderful child David, done so well by Maury Stewart. The story being familiar, it was easy to follow the action with few titles. Ethel Barrymore's motherly touches and the complete renunciation of the heroine as interpreted by her caused gulps in the throat. In this play she resembled her mother, Georgia Drew Barrymore startlingly. Another Metro offering, "The Black Butterfly," was good in spots, yet was a disappointment on the whole, though Mme. Petrova struggled bravely to look old enough to play the mother. I look for bigger things from Petrova later and for better plays from the pen of Mrs. L. Case Russell. "All Man" I saw twice and like it better than at the run-off. This is an ancient plot but as worked out with "Bob" Warwick's personality pervading it am sure it will be a popular offering. "He deserved his salary," whispered my neighbor when "Bob" had his horse stunts to do. Another World Film picture, with Alice Brady, "A Woman Alone," directed by Harry Davenport, was excellent and disclosed a side of life not overdone by playwrights, that of the young women isolated from civilization outside the animated railway trains stopping at lonely stations. Frances Marion has done well in bringing to light the existence of such conditions. There was a dandy happy endng.

The Hub colony of film exchanges is three minutes' walk from the Public Garden and a most interesting place to visit. There are now 25 exchanges, all in a small area, and every New England exhibitor knows the six short streets—Pleasant, Church, Piedmont, Melrose, Winchester and Ferdinand—rather better than the down town ones. Only two exchanges are still by themselves—the Universal's on Stanhope street, quite near, and the Mutual's at the end of Boylston street. Near the colony is the armory of the First Corps of Cadets, built with the earnings of the corps through its annual shows—the first called "1492," written by "Bob" Barnet, who played "Queen Isabella." He was inspired to write it from the fact that the three streets bounding the armory are Ferdinand, Isabella and Columbus—the fourth being the railroad headed toward New York.

There was a private showing of "The Pride of the Clan" given by the Artcraft Corporation at the Exeter Street theater on Saturday morning last. For some inexcusable reason only a handful were present in this spacious theater and the special pianist engaged pounded the instrument atrociously, detracting from our enjoyment. About the play? Well, it certainly has atmosphere to burn and it does full justice to our rockbound Marblehead, where it was staged. Someone asked me who Jamie was and when I said it was Matt Moore she exclaimed "about time she played with her husband." The dear thing was quite hurt to learn that the hero was only Mary's brother-in-law. Kathryn Browne-Decker, who at times resembles Mrs. Sidney Drew, and who has been seen in so many pretentious pictures, made a distinctly fine impression, as did Warren Cook, the husband. The close-ups of Mary Pickford were up to the standard, the scenes so familiar to all here were well photographed and over all was the skill of Maurice Taurneur, the dependable.

A compliment has been paid us by Milwaukee, which has taken over bodily the program of instruction and entertainment by means of historical pictures for school center work as here. A well established system was put into effect some time ago by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, Mr. Warren Dunham Foster, president. He is aided in this by Mr. and Mrs. William Horton Foster (Edith Dunham), David K. Niles and C. A. Bowles. Their headquarters are at 142 Berkeley street, and the projection room is on Winchester street, where they select the pictures suitable to their needs. They do not make any. Mrs. Foster is a capable motherly woman, well educated and trained for the work. Literature is sent broadcast and is invaluable to wideawake school committees and teachers desiring to interest and hold the attention of pupils. Wasn't it Edison who said: "Give me a two-reel picture and I can teach more geography in fifteen minutes than can be gained from the printed book in a week."

I dropped into the Park yesterday and saw a delightful short reeler, "Three Christmases," which proved good propaganda work for the Christmas Clubs being formed in various places—and rightly. William Courtleigh, Sr., and dainty Violet Heming played the leads. Here, too, I noticed an improvement about the stage, the artificial floral stuff all removed, disclosing the white colonial columns. A three-foot high ornamental balustrade separates the orchestral players from the footlights. Back of it is a floral painted border on which colored lights are used with effect. Here we get Brady-made first run features, Metro and other good pictures and always hear good music with a professional soloist.

Sharon, a somewhat exclusive town—the summer home of many Hub residents—is to have a factory with a capacity for making 3,000,000 feet of films a week. Though the date for its completion is set for April 1, we are told that it is no joke, that a bona fide company has been organized—the Bay State Film Co. Another bit of news! As a result of the interest taken by summer visitors in the Mary Pickford invasion at Marblehead last summer, several wideawake Hub men are to erect a picture playhouse there to be ready the coming season. William Terhune, a Boston merchant, is one to realize the value in any community of a clean place of amusement for all.

Mr. Frank Stanton, former manager of the Fenway theater, is connected with the Modern in Providence, where a private view of "Patria" was given for many guests, among them the elite of the city. Considerable publicity was given it in the local press. Like New York, this live city in Rhode Island, does things properly and invites the right persons. The first three reels were shown here at the cosy Copley theater recently but I saw few familiar faces there and little publicity was given it later. Mrs. Castle has a following because of her dancing but her stunts in this picture thus far do not appeal and the house did not take it seriously for some reason. As a serial it will be a "go." Morton Sils and the villains had much to do and it looks as if the International had a good thing here for those who dote on melodrama.

The "Featurette" Prominent on Mutual Program

John R. Freuler, Mutual's President, Gives an Interesting Interview on the Outlook for 1917.

THE "featurette," a word coined by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, and meaning one and two-reel subjects in which prominent stars appear, will figure prominently in Mutual programs during 1917, as learned during a recent interview with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Marie Dressler and her company, which she is now organizing, will begin the production of two-reel comedies the first week in January. The George Ovey's short comedies, now in big demand, will be continued, and the Vogue comedies also will be released indefinitely on account of their wide popularity.

Another well known star comedienne, whose name is withheld for the present, will engage in the production of refined comedies, in two reels, early in the year. Mr. Freuler is now negotiating with three other well known Broadway stars to appear in one and two reel dramas.

"The featurettes will be held just as highly important by Mutual as the big star features, so far as the attention and care bestowed on their production is concerned," said Mr. Freuler.

"I feel that Mutual will open the year 1917 under exceptional auspices, as the largest distributing organization in the business, with executive offices in Chicago. As you know, Mutual also maintains in New York an executive office for the booking of stars as well as a distributing agency.

"The transfer of the general offices of the Mutual to Chicago has been a great success. This is so for several important reasons. First, we can reach from Chicago 65 per cent. of our exchanges overnight. Again considerable saving is made in express rates, and we are in close touch with our sales managers throughout the country. Moreover, the financial backing in Chicago is less speculative than in New York, being conducted on a more solid business basis.

"One thing that will surely come in 1917 is the settlement of the moving picture business on a more stable foundation. Investments will be reduced to legitimate transactions strictly, and bankers will have become so thoroughly conversant with the business that they will be able to arrive at true values. There will be no more wildcat schemes.

"Another important change that may be reasonably looked for in 1917 will be the reduction of distributing agencies, now so numerous and costing the business such high overhead expenses. Mutual, for instance, will be in a position to handle a constantly increasing volume of the product, because of its high standing and its well known superior facilities."

George K. Spoor Mentions Some of Essanay's Activities.

Max Linder completed his first comedy for Essanay last week. It is 2,000 feet in length and bears the title, "Max Comes Across." The release date has not yet been definitely fixed, but it will be some time in the latter part of this month.

Mr. Linder began work on his second comedy (also in two reels) Monday, Jan. 8. It will be entitled "Max Wants a Divorce."

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, wishes to contradict a statement, which has appeared in several papers, to the effect that Mr. Linder is suffering from a dearth of suitable stories. "On the contrary," says Mr. Spoor, "he has no less than 20 in readiness at the present time, any one of which is eminently suited to his needs."

Essanay has just purchased exclusive picture rights to "The Trufflers" from the Bobbs-Merrill Co., of Cincinnati. This story recently appeared in the Cosmopolitan. The photoplay adapted from it will be in five reels under the direction of Fred E. Wright, with Nell Craig in the title role. The cast will be of exceptional strength, Mr. Spoor states, as the story has a number of particularly well defined characters.

The Loyalty of Employes Holding Responsible Positions in the Film Business a Prime Requisite.

In a recent conversation with a man prominent and widely known in the film business, the evils attending the indiscreet resignations of employes holding important positions in the various departments of the trade were discussed.

Instances were cited where people of ability, for whom the future held bright promise, had been seized by a mania to change their old positions for new ones, at an increase of salary. Following these cases it developed that frequent changing of positions became a habit, and that the merely selfish work rendered precluded these people from growing up with a business and sharing in its success.

In other words it would appear that efficiency alone fails to achieve success, and that it must be supported by zeal and loyalty.

During our conversation the transcript from a letter written by this prominent film man to an applicant for a position was handed me. This applicant, it seemed, appeared to take great pleasure in reciting the numerous changes he had made recently, and the successes he had met with—always at an increased salary. The transcript, which follows, will show how his letter impressed the man of long experience and success in business:

"Acknowledging the receipt of your recent letter, and speaking frankly, the changes that you have made indicate a degree of restlessness which is one of the basic troubles of the film business both in manufacturing and distributing. I look for that stability in our organization which can only come if our staff is energetic and ambitious and satisfied to take its chances by sticking.

"I have laid down a rule that no employe working in my distributing business will be re-engaged, if he resigns voluntarily to take another position. It is every man's right to better himself when he has the chance; but responsible positions in the film business have been given up too lightly in the past for a betterment (which is in many cases fancied), and to make the return to a former position easy by placing a premium on inconsiderate resignations.

"In passing upon applications for positions, a similar line of reasoning prompts me to think that a man who has changed positions lightly in the past will not form a permanent attachment with us."

Chicago Film Brevities.

The wide publicity given recently to the unauthorized and false statement that "The Garden of Allah" had been purchased by Sherman & Elliott, Inc., has been severely condemned by William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., who owns the big film.

"'The Garden of Allah' is my property, and no one has the right to announce its sale until confirmation has been made from my offices in Chicago," said Mr. Selig to the writer on Thursday, Jan. 4.

"The sale as yet has not been consummated, and the contrary statement which has been issued from Sherman & Elliott's New York office had no foundation in fact, and was an unwarranted encroachment on my business rights. When the sale is made, I shall make timely announcement of the fact from my offices in Chicago."

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, was seen last week and informed me that his company is confining its operations solely, at present, to the production of big features—5,000 feet and upwards in length.

Abou the middle of the present month the American will have five directors and five different producing companies at work in Santa Barbara. Each company will have its own star, the list including Richard Bennett, Marguerite Fischer, Gail Kane, Mary Miles Minter, William Russell, Kolb & Dill

(in five-reel comedies) and others whose names are withheld for the present.

Later on Mr. Hutchinson will have some interesting statements to make about the increased activities of the Signal Film Corporation and Helen Holmes.

Lubliner & Trinz have added another theater to their chain in Chicago. This is the Michigan, at Michigan and Garfield Boulevards. It was opened Wednesday, Dec. 27, with "Civilization," which had a run of four days. The house seats 1,500 people. Ten and 15 cents admission is charged for programs of the Triangle, World, Greater Vitagraph and other makes. A fifteen-piece orchestra and a pipe organ accompany the pictures.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, came on to this city for the opening of "A Daughter of the Gods," which took place at the Studebaker Saturday evening, Dec. 30. He remained in the city for nearly a week and then returned to New York highly pleased with the run of the fine spectacle and its prospects. Harry Leonhardt, western representative for the Fox organization, is also to be complimented on the successful opening, as he also devoted much of his time to its success. Crowded houses have been the rule during the opening week at the Studebaker, notwithstanding that the prices are 25, 50, 75 cents and $1, with a few seats at $1.50 and $2. The Chicago press devoted much space to laudatory reviews and also warmly welcomed the return of Annette Kellermann, who made such a great hit some time ago at the Fine Arts in "Neptune's Daughter."

It is promised that Miss Kellermann will arrive in Chicago on Saturday, Jan. 6, in time to attend the children's presentation at the Studebaker. She will come from New York, and must return to that city for a rehearsal at the New York Hippodrome on Sunday, Jan. 7. It is said that Miss Kellermann has been placed under contract by the Fox Film Corporation for the years 1917, 1918 and 1919 at a large figure.

Miss Enid Bennett, the new Ince star, made a brief stopover in this city on her way from Los Angeles to New York, Sunday, Dec. 31. She was accompanied by a younger sister, who recently arrived from Australia.

Dwight Elmendorf, widely known as a veteran lecturer and travelogue producer, will begin his regular annual season at Orchestra Hall, January 10. The course will extend over five successive Wednesday and Friday evenings and five Saturday afternoons. Five Sunday afternoons will also be taken up by extra topics announced by him. The subjects for the regular course are "Mexico, Yesterday and Today," "Spain and the Moors," "Children and Flowers From Many Lands," "Old German Towns—a Musical Journey," and "The Sahara Desert—a Caravan Journey."

In the Superior Court last week, Judge Heard overruled a demurrer of the city in the suit filed by David W. Griffith concerning "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Griffith's suit was brought against the city on account of the refusal of the city censor board to allow children to see the spectacle. Judge Heard ruled that Mr. Griffith's contention must be decided on its merits. This would seem to hold that the Chicago moving picture board of censors has not the power to make a final decision in ruling what pictures the people of Chicago may see, and that the rulings of the board may be reviewed by the courts and overruled. Judge Heard's ruling means that Mr. Griffith had cause for action, and that the court must hear the case and decide on its merits.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., announces the following releases through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service: "The Princess of Patches," which will be released Monday, Jan. 22; "The Heart of Texas Ryan," released Monday, Feb. 12, and "The Little Lost Sister," released Monday, March 12.

It will be remembered that Vivian Reed and Charles Le Moyne are the stars in the first mentioned feature and that Director Al Green escorted a company of Selig players to Greenwood, Miss., in order to secure the proper atmosphere for the southern plantation scenes in the story.

"The Heart of Texas Ryan" was written by Gilson Willets, who resided for several years in Texas and Mexico. A strong cast, which includes George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton and Frank Campeau, will be seen in the photoplay. A forest fire in this feature is said to be very realistic, as is also a hand-to-hand struggle between two men.

Director Al. Green has already started work on the production of the "Little Lost Sister." The story and the photoplay for this feature have also been written by Gilson Willets, and a carefully selected company of players has been engaged for the production.

Each of these features will be in five reels.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Colonial—"Intolerance" (D. W. Griffith) breaking all records.

Studebaker—Second week of Annette Kellermann in "A Daughter of the Gods." This picture is being shown to crowded houses since its opening, Dec. 30.

Ziegfeld—Lillian Walker in "Indiscretion" (Vitagraph), and the third episode of Vitagraph's serial, "The Secret Kingdom."

La Salle—Second and last week of Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan" (Artcraft). Kitty Gordon in "Vera, the Medium" (Selznick) opens at this theater Saturday, Jan. 13th.

The Ascher Brothers announce the opening of their Metropolitan theater, Grand Boulevard and Forty-seventh street, Saturday evening, Jan. 20. The Metropolitan has a seating capacity of 1,700, and Nathan Ascher claims that it is the finest moving picture theater in the world. There will be 3,400 lights on the front, giving a splendid display of colors. An eight-piece orchestra and a pipe organ will furnish the music, and an admission of 15 cents will be charged, the programs to consist of Triangle, Paramount, Metro, Fox, Clara Kimball Young and other features. Harry Ascher will have charge of the management of this theater. The Chateau theater, at Broadway and Grace street, and the Milford, at Milwaukee and Crawford avenues, are also under construction, and will be opened early next month. The former will seat 2,200 people, and the latter 1,350. This will make 15 theaters on the Ascher circuit.

M. G. Watkins, manager of the Chicago office of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, and popularly known in the trade, is joyfully heralding the arrival of a fine baby boy at his home. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have the hearty congratulations of the staff of the Chicago office on the happy event. Mr. Watkins, while secretary of the Reel Fellows' Club, won the title of being the best secretary the club ever had, and I can heartily join with the members in awarding him that distinction. At the recent election Mr. Watkins was elected one of the new vice-presidents of that organization.

It is said that the Michigan rights to "Civilization" for five years were sold Wednesday, Jan. 3, for $22,000, J. B. Granger representing Thomas Ince in the transaction. The name of the purchaser could not be ascertained at the time of writing. The price paid is the largest ever offered for the state of Michigan for any moving picture.

No action since my last letter has been taken by the Cook County board of commissioners or the license committee of the city council of Chicago regarding "Intolerance." Some very bitter editorials have appeared in the Chicago Tribune concerning "Intolerance," about which I shall have something to say in my next letter.

William Sievers, president of the New Grand Central Amusement Co., St. Louis, and manager of the New Grand Central theater, has sent me a bundle of St. Louis newspapers, which paid glowing tributes to the premiere of "The Crisis" at his theater, Sunday, Dec. 24. The big picture is having a most successful run in St. Louis and is winning praise on all sides.

The Parkway theater, North Clark street and Diversey Boulevard, reopened Saturday, Jan. 6, after being closed for several weeks. H. C. Siebert, owner of the theater, will be the manager. Mr. Siebert's policy will be to give carefully selected features and strong programs.

SENATORIAL FILM PROBERS NAMED.

Elon R. Brown, leader of New York's State Senate, has named three senators who, with five assemblymen, are to investigate the motion picture industry in the state with a view to determining what it will stand in the way of increased taxation. The three are John Knight of Wyoming, chairman; James W. Yelverton of Schenectady, and James J. Walker of New York. The committee is scheduled to make its report and recommendations by February 15.

Kalem Company Expands on the Coast

Acquires Ten-Acre Site in Glendale—Will Build Large Indoor Studio and Operate Five Companies on the Coast.

WILLIAM WRIGHT, the energetic and genial secretary-treasurer of the Kalem Company, arrived in Los Angeles on December 23. He was accompanied by Directors Howard M. Mitchell, Harry K. Hackett and Robert B. Johnson and Technical Director Storm V. Boyd.

We had the pleasure of meeting our old friend "Bill Kalem" at the Hotel Alexandria the other night, in company with Phil Lang and others of the Kalem forces. Kalem contemplates considerable activity on the coast and has recently acquired a ten-acre tract of land adjoining the Glendale Studios. Glendale is to be the producing headquarters of the Kalem Company and a large indoor studio will be erected on the newly acquired site within a very short time. Storm V. Boyd, the technical director, has been appointed superintendent of the construction work and will be the manager of the combined studios. Phil Lang, for more than six years scenario editor for the Kalem Company, will have charge of production.

True Boardman as Stingaree.

Upon the completion of the new studio the "Ham" comedy company and "The Hazards of Helen" company now operating at Hollywood will be transferred to Glendale. The Hollywood studio will be closed. In the early spring the Kalem company in Jacksonville, Florida, producing "Grant, Police Reporter," will come to Glendale. This will make five producing companies for Kalem on the coast.

Director Howard M. Mitchell is in charge of the fourth Kalem company, and has started production this week on the new "Stingaree" series. These stories by E. W. Hornung have proven so popular among the exhibitors that the Kalem Company induced the celebrated author to write fifteen new original stories, exclusively for Kaem production. These fifteen new episodes have all been delivered and every completed episode will be carefully gone over before being released by the company, to be sure that no detail has been overlooked.

"Mr. Mitchell came out to produce 'Stingaree,'" said Mr. Wright, "because we decided to run 'The Girl from Frisco' series indefinitely under the able direction of James W. Horne. Robert Welles Ritchie, the well known author, supplied the first twenty-five episodes and the series now is being written by Frederick R. Bechdolt.

"Regarding other productions to be made here," continued Mr. Wright, "you soon may expect an interesting announcement. It is well known that we specialize on feature series in one and two reels. In fact, we are paying more for our one and two reel stories than many are paying for their five-reelers. You may be assured, therefore, that the new pictures will be artistic interpretations of the work of well known authors—authors whom we engage because of their qualifications for the particular work required. With E. W. Hornung, Robert Welles Ritchie and Frederick R. Bechdolt on our staff of contributing authors, you may know that the next names we announce will be of equal importance to the industry."

Fifty-five Kalemites celebrated Christmas in the banquet hall of the Hotel Alexandria, Tuesday night, December 26. The eight-course dinner was especially prepared by Mr. Nagel, Maitre de Hotel, of the famous hostelry, and a cabaret of seven performers furnished the entertainment.

William Wright acted as host and toastmaster. The guests of honor were William H. Clune and Theodore Newman of the Clune company, Mr. Cree, local manager of the General Film Company; J. C. Jessen of the Motion Picture News, Mabel Condon of the Mirror, and G. P. Von Harleman of the Moving Picture World.

When the speech making began it was seen that the dominating thought of the evening was "co-operation." Many of those present had grown up with Kalem and there were numerous reminiscences and enthusiastic prophecies for the future. That Kalem is centering activities on the Pacific Coast and is here to do big things was apparent in the speeches of the representatives of the different departments.

The Kalem employes present were Storm V. Boyd, for many years technical director and now in charge of the Kalem studios; Phil Lang, for six years editor and now general manager of production; James W. Horne, director of "The Girl from Frisco," and his players, Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson, R. E. Bradbury, Hart Hoxie and Karl Formes; Howard Mitchell, director of "Stingaree" and his two principals, True Boardman and James Farley; Directors Harry K. Hackett and Robert B. Johnson; Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan, and their fellow players, Ethel Teare, Henry Murdoch, H. Thorpe and R. Curbison; Assistant Director H. Schenck; Walter Morton, director of "The Hazards of Helen," Helen Gibson, G. A. Williams, Wm. Grow, E. Haller, Tom Whitlaw, Ed. Gibson and G. Routh; Miss M. E. M. Gibsone, business manager at Hollywood; H. M. Oswald, Thos. J. Galligan, Ned Figurola, A. C. Gage, M. J. Murchison, Frank Howard Clark, Thos. C. Gillett, S. L. Arnold, W. F. Church, James Jensen, T. K. Taylor, N. H. Palmer, G. W. Wilkins, Joe Simkins, Jack Lavell, F. Stuckey, F. Rice, R. Jones, P. Clancy, K. Linkoff, C. Ball, H. Stokes, Robt. Logan, James Burkett and H. J. Thompson.

Two Large Picture Theatres for Los Angeles

Sid Grauman of San Francisco Signs Ten-Year Lease on Theater in New Stability Building—J. A. Quinn Comes Back With Large Playhouse on Broadway.

ONE OF the largest theater deals in the West was consummated this week when Sid Grauman, a well known San Francisco exhibitor and amusement promoter, signed a ten-year lease with R. A. Rownan & Co., for the auditorium in the twelve-story theater and studio building now being erected by the Stability Building Co. at Third and Broadway. This theater promises to be one of the most elaborate playhouses west of Chicago and will have a seating capacity of 2,400. The total rental for the ten years is approximately $400,000, and we are informed that Mr. Grauman and those interested with him will spend over $100,000 in fitting up the theater. Interested with Mr. Grauman in the conduct of the theater will be his father, D. J. Grauman of San Francisco, and the theatrical firm of Ackerman & Harris, which owns a string of vaudeville houses in the West. The theater leased by Mr. Grauman and his associates will occupy the ground floor of the great Spanish renaissance pile now rising at Third and Broadway. Its lobby will open from the latter thoroughfare through an old Spanish doorway that will rise to the height of several stories, forming a dominating architectural feature of the building. Bronze, marble and stucco will be used in the treatment of the lobby, foyer and stair-hall, the walls of which will be lavishly decorated.

The stage will be of a size to adapt it to presentation of plays and spectacles of magnitude, but it is the intention of the lessees to confine the use of the auditorium to pictures, at least for a year or two. The orchestra pit will accommodate 50 pieces. A $40,000 pipe organ will be installed. There will be rest rooms, a tea room and a day nursery for small children. The lighting scheme calls for special interior and exterior effects. It is estimated that the building, when completed, together with the value of the ground, will total in cost more than $1,000,000, and that nearly one-third of this amount is being spent in making the theater portion of the structure one of the most beautiful playhouses in the United States. Architect A. C. Martin, who is completing the working plans for the new theater building, recently has returned from an eastern trip, where he studied various styles of architecture in theater buildings before perfecting the plans of the Grauman theater. A novel feature of the structure is the absence of posts to obstruct the view. There is but one balcony in the theater, and this has a large steel span running the full width of the building. The theater will be ready, it is expected, about October 1, 1917.

Another large theater enterprise has been launched this week by our old friend, J. A. Quinn, who does not need any introduction. Readers of The Moving Picture World will remember Mr. Quinn's successful presentation of "Damaged Goods," "Hypocrites," and other sensational features in his Los Angeles theaters during the two years past. This latest enterprise of Mr. Quinn is a large theater project on Broadway involving a lease amounting to approximately $500,000. The theater will be called "Quinn's Rialto," and will be located on 810-814 South Broadway. The house will have a seating capacity of about 900 and will be ready for occupancy by April 15, 1917. Negotiations for the construction of the theater were completed this week by Seymour & Batchelder, Hollingsworth building, representing both Mr. Quinn and F. P. Fay, the owner of the property. The construction work will be started at once.

Lesser Gets Alcazar Theater

Secures San Francisco Downtown Stock House for Presentation of "War Brides" and "Civilization."

SOL L. LESSER, president of the All-Star Features Distributors of San Francisco, who recently purchased the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to Herbert Brenon's gigantic presentation of Nazimova in "War Brides," by Marion Craig Wentworth, and Thomas H. Ince's big spectacle, "Civilization," has secured the Alcazar theater from George Davis, manager for Messrs. Belasco and Mayer, for the presentation of his two big film spectacles.

The Alcazar theater has had a country-wide reputation as a dramatic stock theater. This house has produced many stars of the legitimate stage and has long been recognized as the leading stock theater of America.

"War Brides" will open at the Alcazar theater on Monday, January 15, for an indefinite engagement. This production will be presented with an augmented orchestra of eighteen pieces to interpret the beautiful music score by Robert Hood Bowers, written especially for this production.

The "War Brides" engagement will be followed by Thos. H. Ince's "Civilization," which will also be presented in a high class manner.

FOX STUDIOS AT HOLLYWOOD BEING REBUILT.

William Fox's Hollywood studios, recently destroyed by fire, are fast being rebuilt. One side of the building, that facing Western avenue, is now so far completed that it has been possible for several offices to be re-established in it while work on the rest of the place is progressing.

General Representative A. Carlos and the heads of several of the more important departments have moved into this part of the structure and resumed the work which the flames disrupted temporarily.

The new studios will be one of the most fully equipped and thoroughly appointed in the motion picture industry. It will take the form of a hollow quadrangle, with offices along the sides, and the centre filled with enormous stages.

The front end will house the main departments, the rear will be used for scenic department and properties, and the two sides will contain offices for stars, dressing rooms and minor bureaus.

ACTOR HEARN IS PROUD FATHER.

Edward Hearn, one of the leading actors at Universal City, arrived at the studios a few days ago with the announcement that an eleven-pound son had been born early that morning. Mrs. Hearn formerly was Tina Saidon, of Chehalis, Washington.

L-KO FUN MAKERS.

THE accompanying illustrations show three of the artists responsible for many of the laughable situations in the well known L-Ko Komedies. Miss Marjorie Ray was born in Kansas City, her father being a wealthy western cattle owner. In order to develop her musical talent she went to New York at eighteen years of age. Eventually she was attracted to moving picture work and is making a name for herself in the L-Ko productions.

Frank Voss is the fat comedian of the company, weighing in the neighborhood of 300 pounds. He graduated from the Madison, Wisconsin, High School and came to Columbia, New York, for his college work. He appeared in some of the college theatricals and attracted the attention of George M. Cohan. At the close of his junior year he left college and entered the theatrical field under the direction of Mr. Cohan, with whom he gained considerable experience in fun making. He has now been with the L-Ko Company for two and a half years.

Danny Russell.

Danny Russell, the third member of the L-Ko staff here represented, was born in Dublin, Ireland. He has been with the company over two years, previous to which time he had many years' experience on the legitimate stage with many of the best known companies. The height of his ambition when he came to this country was to be a policeman and in the many parts he has played he has been a stage policeman frequently.

STOWELL JOINS UNIVERSAL.

William H. Stowell has signed a long term contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to appear in a series of feature productions to be made at Universal City. Mr. Stowell is an actor of note who has had long experience in the picture field. He has played with many of the leading producing companies and was recently with the American Film Co., Inc., where he played heavy leads.

The rainy weather the last week has interfered to a great extent with work at the western studios of William Fox. No new pictures have been begun and none have been finished, except Richard Stanton's latest production starring Gladys Brockwell.

The set erected on Winna Brown's ranch near Los Angeles for the new Gladys Brockwell picture will be used as a permanent location by Tom Mix and his company in making Foxfilm comedies. This is said to be the most complete representation of a western mining camp for moving picture work.

At the Signal Studios plans are being made for the building of a new row of dressing rooms for the players. The new rooms will be twenty in number and will be large and comfortable, with windows on two sides and hot and cold running water installed in each room. The building of these new rooms will permit the tearing down of the old ones which will increase the studio space nearly one hundred per cent. In addition to these improvements, the original stage is to be torn out and a new one built in a more suitable portion of the grounds. The new stage will be somewhat larger than the old one and will be so constructed that it can be converted into an indoor studio for use during rainy weather.

Upon the completion of the present serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," the Helen Holmes Company will start production of another railroad serial of similar length. Arrangements have now been concluded for the story from which this serial will be made, and the work of preparing the scenario will begin within a short time. A title for the new production has not as yet been chosen.

Samuel Cummins of the Phax Pictures

Former Newspaper Man Makes Good as a Feature Film Promoter.

SAMUEL CUMMINS, who has been less than a year in the film business, now heads a new film company known as the Phax Pictures Company, with offices at 220 West 42d street, New York, having exclusive rights to the sensational photo play "Race Suicide." The policy of this company is to promote big feature pictures throughout the eastern states on an extensive scale.

Samuel Cummins.

Mr. Cummins, in the short time he has been in the film business, has controlled and exploited the world rights of the sensational film "Germany's Battles at Verdun," which he operated himself throughout the country with great success. At the outbreak of the Mexican trouble recently he promoted a Mexican picture which also played throughout the East on big vaudeville circuits and picture houses.

Several months ago, with N. H. Spitzer, also well known in the film world, he formed the Cummins-Spitzer Feature Company in Washington, D. C., and purchased "War's Women" for the southern states.

Samuel Cummins, after promoting this picture ("War's Women"), giving it considerable publicity and booking it in large theaters, sold it at a considerable profit to the Hy-Art Masterplays Company of Washington, D. C. After selling this picture he returned to New York to promote the Phax Pictures Company and its sensational picture, "Race Suicide."

He has just passed the quarter century mark and devoted all his life previous to entering the film business, eight months ago, to newspaper work. His last connection was with the New York Tribune. Previous to that he was employed by the Morning Telegraph, Evening Mail, New York Press, the Variety and a few small mediums. In recent years he specialized in theatrical work on the papers. Through his unusual and unique ways of handling his publicity and promotion work he has been successful in putting his features over despite keen competition. His friendship among the newspapers and magazines has been a great aid to him. In promoting all his pictures he did all the booking of his pictures himself. Cummins has received his education at the New York University and the St. Lawrence University, from which he has received a degree of Batchelor of Law.

The intention of the Phax Pictures Company is to send out ten road shows through the state, which will be directly in charge of Mr. Cummins.

CLAIRE ALEXANDER RECOVERED

After an absence of several weeks, due to illness, Claire Alexander is back in the cast of Cub Comedies as leading woman for George Ovey. Goldie Colwell, who assumed her place, will appear in the same picture in which Miss Alexander marks her return, but after that will play in another brand of David Horsley productions.

HOWARD ESTABROOK TO DIRECT VIVIAN MARTIN

Howard Estabrook, who has won an enviable reputation on the stage and on the screen as a leading man, has been engaged by Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in the capacity of director and will supervise Vivian Martin's next production following "The Wax Model," which is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program in February.

Maxine Elliott Joins Goldwyn

MAXINE ELLIOTT, the internationally famous actress, has signed a contract to appear in Goldwyn Pictures. Abandoning for a time her relief hospital on the banks of the Yser Canal, the world-wide-known beauty has capitulated to the call of the screen. The services of Miss Elliott have long been sought by producers of motion pictures, but until persuaded to join the forces of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation she has steadfastly refused to appear in pictures. The announcement that she will soon make her screen debut under the Goldwyn banner will be welcomed by thousands of her admirers.

Maxine Elliott.

Miss Elliott began her stage career at the age of sixteen. Her first appearance was made with E. S. Willard. She played minor roles until the following year, when she was given more important parts in "A Fool's Paradise" and "The Professor's Double."

Following her early experience Miss Elliott ascended the ladder of stage fame until she reached the topmost rung. Since attaining that place Miss Elliott's position has never wavered. She has added constantly to the long line of successes to her credit, and is known in every part of the world.

For several years Miss Elliott has devoted herself more and more to social life abroad. She became one of the chief workers in hospital relief at the outbreak of the present war, and her work in that direction has carved her name in uneradicable letters of mercy in the hearts not only of those whom she has personally benefited, but of those who know of her efforts.

For this work she has received signal honors and decorations both from the British and French Governments and her undertakings have received the fullest measure of official co-operation and approval. Among the many who made an inspection of her work in the relief hospital were King George, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Prince Alexander of Teck, King Albert of Belgium, and countless army and navy officers of high rank.

Miss Elliott is now at the height of her very remarkable career and her entry into motion pictures as a star for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will result in the making of millions of new admirers both here and abroad. Announcement of the director to produce Miss Elliott's first picture will soon be made.

COLLEEN MOORE, TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS INGENUE

The most recent addition to the Triangle-Fine Arts Company is Colleen Moore, a pretty Irish maid from Chicago, who will be given roles that were designed for Mildred Harris before it was decided to send Miss Harris east with Douglas Fairbanks.

Miss Moore was sent from the Windy City to Los Angeles by a well-known director of the Fine Arts Company, who met her at a social function and was so favorably impressed by her beauty and personality that he recommended her to the managers of the Fine Arts. She is a graduate of a Southern convent and is an accomplished musician.

MORE TALENT FOR FOX.

William Fox acquired one new director, another film star, and several more photoplayers in the course of the last week. The director is William Nigh, lately with the Metro forces; the star is Miriam Cooper, who has the leading feminine part in "The Honor System," the big ten-part Fox photodrama; and the new players include Ned Finley, Pearl Palmer, Ruth Thorp and Edward Roseman, who will be in the first Nigh production, and Florence Crawford and Francis Carpenter.

Essanay to Film "The Trufflers"

Samuel Merwin's Tales of Bohemia—Work Started on Cohan Plays.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Trufflers," Samuel Merwin's great novel. Its picturization is being prepared now at the Essanay studios. The film will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, March 4. Nell Craig will be seen as the star.

"The Trufflers" first ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine as a series of short stories. They met with such spectacular success that the author readjusted them into one story, which was issued in novel form and was one of the "best sellers" of the year just closed.

"The Trufflers" refers to the colony of artists at Greenwich Village, New York. It is here that practically all the great painters, illustrators, sculptors and writers of Manhattan Isle reside. Mr. Merwin has laid his scenes in Greenwich Village and has given a vivid portrayal of the Bohemian life of its residents.

The story has to do with a modern Trilby. She is an artist's model—a gay, carefree, beautiful young woman who is the idol of "The Trufflers." A love affair tears her down from her pedestal and brings her face to face with famine. In the consummation of the plot the author has achieved a wonderful bit of pathos intermixed with thrilling adventure.

The story is replete with excellent material for scenic effects. The lavish parties for which "The Trufflers" of real life are noted—Bohemian affairs—are portrayed with vivid reality. The picturization, revealing this strange life, should hold a fascinating interest for photoplay patrons.

Fred E. Wrights is arranging the story for the camera and will direct its production.

Director James K. Young has started work on the filming of the first of the three Cohan & Harris stage hits which President Spoor has purchased for picturization by Essanay. These plays, all of which were Broadway successes, are "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," "Young America," and "On Trial."

Douglas Fairbanks was the star in the first. The plot presented a daring young American in a series of adventures in a mythical kingdom. "Young America" is an intensely human story built around a boy's affection for his dog. Few dramatic offerings of the past decade have met with the success of "On Trial." It portrays a courtroom wherein a woman is on trial for murder. It grips the audience from start to finish.

The success of these plays on the speaking stage, it is believed, will guarantee them a hit on the screen. The approximate screen time for each will be one hour, fifteen minutes.

FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER AUTHOR OF "SLAVE MARKET."

Frederic Arnold Kummer, well known writer, is the author of the Famous Players' production, "The Slave Market," in which Pauline Frederick stars on the Paramount Program. The photoplay version of this story of the Spanish Main was prepared for the screen by Clara S. Beranger. This is the second of Mr. Kummer's stories to be produced by the Famous Players, "The Brute" having been released by that company prior to the formation of the Paramount Picture Corporation.

Mr. Kummer, who is also the author of the recent Lasky release, "The Yellow Pawn," in which Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely co-starred, has won an enviable reputation as a writer, though he has devoted himself to literary work for only nine years, having won an international name as a novelist, short story writer, dramatist and photodramatist.

HANCOCK, NEW YORK MANAGER FOR MUTUAL.

H. C. Hancock has been appointed manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's New York Exchange. He is in charge of the Twenty-third street exchange and its subordinate branches, serving a large and important territory. Mr. Hancock is widely experienced in the motion picture industry, having held various important offices under different film corporations, including that of manager of the General Film Company Exchange in New York, and similarly important positions with the Vitagraph Company and the Kinetograph Company. Mr. Hancock has served as manager of the Forty-sixth street office of the Mutual and as assistant manager of the Twenty-third street office, so that he is familiar with the requirements of both.

Joe Kaufman to Direct George M. Cohan

THE actual production of the initial George M. Cohan screen subject for Artcraft has been assigned to Joseph Kaufman, the well known director of many Famous Players successes, including such subjects as "Ashes of Embers," "The World's Great Snare," "The Traveling Salesman," and many others.

Mr. Kaufman's most recent work was evidenced in Frank McIntyre's first screen production, "The Traveling Salesman," which scored an instantaneous hit. The successful manner in which Mr. Kaufman put over this well known stage comedian's initial motion picture vehicle, together with the fact that the director was formerly associated with George M. Cohan in his theatrical activities for many years and is probably more intimately familiar with the talents of the famous stage star than any other motion picture director, prompted Artcraft to secure the services of Mr. Kaufman in connection with the production of the first Cohan screen offering.

Joseph Kaufman.

On the stage Mr. Kaufman met with considerable success during the twenty years he spent behind the footlights. Under such managements as Cohan and Harris, Frohman and Henry B. Harris he appeared in many metropolitan hits on Broadway and throughout the country, playing important roles with Willie Collier, Maude Adams, John Drew, Virginia Harned and others of equal prominence. His characterization of the original operator in "Via Wireless," which had a remarkable run at the Liberty Theater, New York, and other cities, will well be remembered. In motion pictures Mr. Kaufman first appeared as an actor. His wide knowledge of the drama and many valuable suggestions in the staging of scenes soon resulted in his being appointed director of his company and for some three years he produced Ethel Clayton subjects, the most recent of which, "Dollars and the Woman," won his wide recognition. Later at the Famous Players' studios his chief work was devoted to the production of Pauline Frederick pictures and proved an important factor in the great success achieved by this star as a screen favorite. Mr. Kaufman is now actively engaged in the preparation of the elaborate sets for "Broadway Jones" and plans to leave shortly for Florida with George M. Cohan, Marguerite Snow and the remainder of the company to stage some exteriors.

AMERICAN SIGNS GAIL KANE.

Gail Kane, celebrated star of the screen and the speaking stage, has signed a long term contract to appear in American Film Company productions for Mutual distribution. The contract and all formal legal agreements were closed Friday, December 23, by the signature of Samuel Sheffield Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, in Chicago—thus ending long negotiations which were opened through the Mutual's New York office.

Miss Kane is now preparing for her departure for Santa Barbara, where she will begin work at the American's western studios about January 22. She is now appearing with important success in "The Harp of Life" at the Globe theater in New York.

BUTTERFIELD COMES TO NEW YORK.

W. S. Butterfield, head of the Michigan circuit of theatres, arrived in New York on January 7. While here Mr. Butterfield will look over the big feature pictures and vaudeville productions for future bookings in his big string of theaters throughout the Middle West. A full month's consecutive bookings are available for Butterfield for the big de luxe picture productions.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"GOD'S CRUCIBLE (Bluebird).

The Bluebird release for Jan. 22 was written and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds, who has given to the same program "The Girl of Lost Lake," "The End of the Rainbow" and "The Secret of the Swamp." George Hernandez, Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul, who are featured in the announcements, have all appeared in the earlier Reynolds' Bluebirds, and the presenting company is practically the same as previously seen in all of the Reynolds productions.

Originally the piece was called "The Man With the Peanut Soul," a title that fully expressed the nature of the story.

Scene from "God's Crucible" (Bluebird).

George Hernandez plays the role of the modern Scrooge, who is transformed at Christmastide by the touch of childish longing for Santa Claus in a locality where travel is difficult—for the party is snowbound in the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

Lynn Reynolds has made a specialty of nature-setting for all of his Bluebirds, the redwood forests of California having hitherto furnished the scenes for his photo-actors. In going to the Grand Canyon of the Arizona the Reynolds company has found settings of impressive grandeur for the action of most of the story. The Grand Canyon is one of nature's wonder-spots and Reynolds has taken his pick of its most wondrous vistas.

The attendant illustration gives an idea of what may be expected in "God's Crucible." The scene is taken on the trail leading to the Colorado river, deep down in the canyon. At the left are shown some of the ancient cliff dwellings; in the distance the marvelous rock formations—more than fifteen miles from where the horseman-actor is standing. Bluebird believes that exhibitors and the public will agree that "God's Crucible" is the most beautiful of all productions in the series

"ENLIGHTEN THY DAUGHTER" SELLS FOR $125,000.

After refusing a number of alluring offers from several theater managers for extended runs on Broadway for his latest picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," Ivan Abramson, author and director, disposed of the world's rights thereon this week to Winik-Brock for a sum aggregating $125,000. The production will be exploited throughout the world as a first class attraction, with the United States and Canadian territory to be disposed of on state right basis.

Within an hour after the deal between Abramson and Henry Brock was consummated, the New York, Northern New Jersey and New England rights were purchased by the Merit Film Corporation, at a figure close to $40,000.

The production will be handled in a special way, apart from the Winik-Brock enterprises, and under the name of Enlightenment Film Corporation. An advertising campaign of unusual effectiveness is to be instituted at once by Harry Reichenbach.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" is in seven reels and will, if present negotiations go through, open on Broadway within a few weeks as a high class attraction at a two-dollar scale of prices.

OHIO PASSES "THE TRUANT SOUL."

Ohio's board of censors has finally admitted Henry B. Walthall's Essanay superfeature, "The Truant Soul," to the screen in that state, after having held up the film for two weeks.

The objections to the picture were based on the fact that it depicts a famous surgeon as a victim of narcotics. There are several intensely dramatic scenes in which Mr. Walthall is seen in the throes of this great menace to humanity. It was at first claimed that to show the results of the drug vice as vividly as they are portrayed in "The Truant Soul" was a bad influence on the community. It was on account of these protests that the board of censors ordered the picture held up pending an investigation.

The result of this investigation proved startling to the objectors. Noted ministers of Ohio, civic workers, clubwomen and finally federal internal revenue agents in charge of the government's crusade to stop the use of drugs and enforce the Harrison anti-narcotic act, were called in to view the picture and render their verdicts on its prospective influence on the community.

Their verdict was unanimous that such a picture would be a great moral lesson in aiding the government and communities at large in halting the death dealing strokes of drugs. In showing the public how terrible is the effect of narcotics, the picture has a good, rather than a bad influence. On this verdict the censors placed their O. K. on "The Truant Soul."

STOLEN CAMERA LENS.

Some one, Friday night, Dec. 29, removed a Carl Zeiss, lens number 182325 M.M., from the title camera in the laboratories of the Harvard Film Corporation, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. The case has been put in the hands of the local detective bureau, who are investigating the stolen article. Anyone offering this lens for sale should be held, and the Harvard notified immediately.

"THE WIDE, WRONG WAY" (Essanay).

This is the fifth unit of the series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" and is declared to be one of the most powerful dramas of this cycle of matrimonial complications. The problem presented is that of a stern father who refuses to allow his daughters the social pleasures to which they are justly entitled. The results of this intolerance are depicted in tensely dramatic style with a double climax at the close, which holds the audience thrilled from start to finish. Essanay's stock company appears in the cast, including such notable screen stars as Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth and Thomas Commerford. The film is released through the General Film Service, Jan. 13, the screen time being twenty-eight minutes.

Metro Sets Fast Pace

Its Program for January Contains a Number of Highly Interesting Subjects.

FIVE important releases will be presented during January by Metro Pictures Corporation on its regular program. Besides this, five chapters of "The Great Secret," the great serial starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be offered to the public, and five one-act comedies will be released—three Drew comedies and two starring Ralph Herz.

The year 1917 opens with the release of "Vanity," a Popular Plays and Players production starring Emmy Wehlen, written by Aaron Hoffman and directed by John B. O'Brien. "Vanity" has the advantage of combining the youth and beauty of Miss Wehlen with a story of unusual power. Paul Gordon, Edward Martindel, W. W. Black and Thomas O'Keefe are prominent in her support.

"A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro as star, is scheduled for the second week in January. "A Wife by Proxy" has an Irish setting, and Miss Taliaferro is seen as a sweet Irish lassie. The play was written by John B. Clymer and Charles Logue, and was directed by John H. Collins. Columbia Pictures Corporation produced it for the Metro program. Norton Burbeck is played by Robert Walker, seen with Viola Dana in "The Light of Happiness" and "Gates of Eden." Sally Crute has a part to her liking as Beatrice Gaden, the adventuress, and Yale Benner, Ricca Allen and Fred Jones are also in the cast.

The celebrated star, Ethel Barrymore, will be seen Jan. 15 in "The White Raven," her first production completed since her announcement that she had abandoned the speaking stage to appear in Metro wonderplays. "The White Raven," directed by George D. Baker, is from the pen of Charles A. Logue and produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Its widely contrasting scenes are laid in Alaska and in New York city, metropolitan life being varied by that of the frontier. Miss Barrymore plays the part of "Nightingale Nan," a girl delicately reared, who, finding herself stranded in Alaska, becomes a dancehall singer.

William B. Davidson has the part of "The Stranger," who has a claim on Nan's future. Walter Hitchcock, one of the screen's best known "villains," also is a member of the cast. Ethel Dayton, who will be seen in Lionel Barrymore's support in "The End of the Tour," plays the ingenue, and other players are George A. Wright and Viola Fortescue, daughter of the late George K. Fortescue, who, in the part of Mrs. Smithson, makes her debut on the screen.

Viola Dana in "Threads of Fate" is the Jan. 22 release. This feature photodrama is built around the struggle between labor and capital, and many of its important scenes are laid among the coal mines of Pennsylvania. Anti-vivisection furnishes a counterplot to "Threads of Fate," which was written by Richard Barry, adapted by June Mathis, and directed by Eugene Newland, the producing company being Columbia Pictures Corporation.

Metro's final regular release for January will be "Bridges Burned," with Mme. Petrova as star. Mme. Petrova herself is the author of "Bridges Burned," the scenario having been prepared by Wallace C. Clifton. Perry Vekroff directed the production, made by Popular Plays and Players, for the Metro program. The star will be seen in an Irish part in this fascinating photoplay, and further interest is furnished by its war setting. Mary Randal (Mme. Petrova), is one of those progressive, great minded women of the type so prominent in the Ireland of the present day, the type that has helped to bring about the Celtic Renaissance in literature and other arts. Mary organizes an Uplift Club in the mill in which she works and it is cited all through Ireland as a model. The romantic incidents of Mary's life form the material for the five absorbing acts of "Bridges Burned."

In this production the star is supported by Mahlon Hamilton, Robert Broderick, little Maury Steuart, Mrs. Mathilde Brundage and Thomas Cameron.

The Metro comedy releases of the month are "The Matinee Idol," with Ralph Herz; "Cave Man's Buff" (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew); "His Perfect Day." (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew); "Married, but Single" (Ralph Herz), and "The Pest" (Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew).

Metro thus sets a brisk pace, which will be kept up during the entire year.

PHILADELPHIANS APPLAUD MRS. CASTLE AND "PATRIA."

A private showing recently at the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, of International's patriotic photoplay, "Patria," was a society event of the first order. The great ballroom was filled to capacity with prominent people. The brilliant audience was plainly delighted with Mrs. Vernon Castle as a screen star. Mrs. Castle's gowns also came in for a large share of admiration, and the unanimous opinion of the photoplay was one of commendation.

Among those occupying boxes were ex-Governor Tener and Mrs. Tener, Mrs. A. J. Drexel-Biddle and Mr. and Mrs. George W. Urquhart. Mrs. Urquhart is one of the most active of Philadelphia women in the national preparedness movement, and was, therefore, particularly delighted with "Patria," which has "Preparedness" for its theme.

The leading release of Friday is the Universal Screen Magazine, No. 5. "Facing Death," the fourth episode of "The Purple Mask," which will appear this week, carries Francis Ford and Grace Cunard through further thrilling adventures. This is the best episode so far in this serial, which is proving the most popular ever presented by the Universal.

"BILL" HART BEGINS KAY BEE FEATURE.

In place of the hard riding, hard fighting cowpuncher of the longhorn country, William S. Hart will, in his next Triangle-Kay Bee feature, impersonate an old-time prospector. Although the details of this new play are at present being very carefully guarded by Hart's own company at Culver City, every indication points to this being a play of a most striking character. The story is the work of Martin Brown, and from it Lambert Hillayer has made the version in which Hart will appear. It is a play of action and vigor, and some unusual situations arise in which Hart succeeds in doing some remarkable and spectacular phases of work.

Margery Wilson, who last played with Hart in "The Primal Lure" and "The Return of Draw Egan," will reappear as his leading woman. She has what is declared to be an appealing part, with some comedy touches. Among others who will support Hart are Jack Livingstone and J. P. Lockney.

NEW TITLES FOR NEXT RUSSELL SUBJECT.

The title of William Russell's next Mutual Star production, which was announced as "A Son of Battle," has been changed to "My Fighting Gentleman." The story is by Nell Shipman, the picture player. It will introduce Francella Billington as a leading woman for Mr. Russell. Its setting is in the romantic southland during the reconstruction period. In this picture Jack Vosburgh is seen in the "heavy" role. Sidney Algier is assisting Edward Sloman in the directing.

Bluebird's Birthday

Has Fulfilled Its Announced Purpose During Its First Year of Service.

WITH the presentation of "Her Soul's Aspiration," featuring Ella Hall, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., ends, on Jan. 15, its first year of usefulness to exhibitors as a producing organization. For the purpose of recapitulating what has been accomplished and to forecast what exhibitors and their public may expect of the Bluebird program during its second year, General Manager M. H. Hoffman has issued a statement, embodying the policy and purposes of the organization.

"Bluebird came into a field that was at once well equipped and at the same time lacking in the essentials Bluebird has contributed," says Mr. Hoffman. "There were plenty of feature organizations extant when Bluebird started, but in few of them could be found exactly the combination of plays, players, equipment and production that we pledged ourselves to supply. Stars there were—but they were seldom presented in plays best adapted to their talents. Plays there were—but the stars that shone in them were not always equal to the emergency. Productions there were—but stars and the plays themselves were not always worthy of the money invested.

Ella Hall.

"Bluebird pledged itself to offer a composite of plays, players and production as nearly perfect as human ingenuity and money could provide. We started with a clean slate. We had no expensive stars on our hands to cater to; no high-salaried directors to run our business for us, and no fancy-priced contracts with anybody to fulfill. We were free to hire whom we chose, buy our productions in the open market or take them from the best equipped production plant on the face of the earth — Universal City. We are thoroughly convinced that Bluebird has proven, in its first year, that we have filled the proverbial long-felt want.

"To be perfectly sure that we would gauge the desires of the public, we started off with the biggest name the 'star system' ever boasted—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, in 'Jeanne Dore.' Although we soon abandoned the method of usual procedure and confessed the Shakespearean dogma—'The Play's the Thing'—we have presented some of the best stars the screen has ever reflected — Helen Ware, Tyrone Power, Carter De Haven, Jane Gail, Florence Lawrence, Mary Fuller, Cleo Madison, Violet Mersereau, Hobart Bosworth, Rupert Julian, Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, Harry Carey; not because they were stars but because they were best suited by the highest tests of requirements to play the roles assigned to them.

Violet Mersereau.

"We believe we have in a very important way enriched the screen by developing talent that, without Bluebird, would have gone on indefinitely unrecognized. Because we had certain plays to be screened we cast about for the best players to enact the leading roles, and thus have we featured men and women who had never previously been named in large type upon show-bills. When we needed a girl to fit the leading role in 'Shoes,' the producer of the play, Lois Weber, selected Mary MacLaren—a girl who had been playing 'maids' up to that time. We made Mary a star.

"From Australia, about the time Bluebird started, came a girl unknown to American fame. Because she exactly fitted certain roles that must be played in Bluebirds we were preparing, we named the girl Louise Lovely, and everybody has agreed that we can pick names for players as well as we can pick plays to present them in. Ella Hall was elevated to prominence early in our series and she has since become an attraction and an embellishment to Bluebirds. Myrtle Gonzalez, Dorothy Phillips, George Hernandez, Val Paul, Ruth Stonehouse, Franklyn Farnum—all these players have fitted the roles they played and have been featured with credit to themselves and Bluebirds.

"We believe that our directors have certified their capacity for making good pictures, because our releases have proven it. Such names as Lois Weber, Rupert Julian, Lynn F. Reynolds, Jack Conway, Joseph De Grasse, Rex Ingram and Edwin Stevens, have appeared in Bluebird announcements, and their pictures have registered their abilities. And all the time, since we decided that the public wanted a composite of play, player, director, and production, the play itself has been 'the thing,' and it is the play that has made Bluebird successful to a degree that has met our every expectation in the fullest and proven the wisdom of Bluebird's policy.

"We have performed the usual thing in an unusual manner, building as much for theater managers as we have for ourselves. We have gone behind Bluebird exhibitors with an advertising campaign of national scope that is but fairly well started. We have made a Bluebird franchise a valuable asset, and as time goes on its value will be enhanced—for we know that the way to make money for ourselves is to make it for the exhibitor.

"Better plays and still better plays; better productions and more skillful players, an unstinted investment of money, properly directed, and the maintenance of a reputation we have been at great expense to establish," concludes Mr. Hoffman, "are what the exhibitor may expect, with confidence, during Bluebird's second year."

"WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN" (International).

Jane Grey, star of the International's new Golden Eagle feature, "When My Ship Comes In," soon to be released, lives up to the reputation she has won in legitimate drama, and fully justifies the claim she made for success as a screen artist in "The Flower of Faith," also an International feature. Silver Sands is a sweet, innocent, inexperienced country girl, but with intent dramatic powers and aspirations undreamed of by her or her doting parents. These are recognized by an unscrupulous theatrical genius, who, captivated by her beauty and charm, resolves to give her the leading part in a play he is about to produce.

Transported suddenly to New York from the little New England village where all her life has been spent, and given carte blanche at milliners and modistes, the simple country girl does what most of her sisters with or without experience would do—goes the limit of extravagance and awakes to find herself financially at the mercy of the unscrupulous manager who planned it all. How she circumvents the villain without the loss of her innocence and wins justice for her sweetheart is graphically told in the photoplay; but it is Miss Grey's splendid dramatic art which gives the pictures their absorbing interest.

Her transition from the New England maid to the woman of fashion, from the simple inexperienced country girl to the leading woman in a Broadway production, is done easily, gracefully and without violence to one's sense of proportion. To accomplish it requires dramatic ability of the first order, and this Miss Grey possesses up to an unusual degree.

MUTUAL GETS NEW COMEDY SERIES.

The Mutual Film Corporation has contracted with the Monogram Films of Los Angeles for the release of a series of fifteen two-reel dramas under the general title of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," the first of which, entitled "Shorty Hamilton and the Yellow Ring," will be released on Jan. 15. This new series is to be put out by the Mutual as one of its "Featurette" star productions, just announced by President John R. Freuler.

Claude Slater, who closed the contract with Mr. Freuler for the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" a few days ago, is an old Mutual man and an excellent judge of high class material. He returned to Los Angeles after making the contract, and is now engaged with Mr. Hamilton, who is an ex-officer of the United States army, in the staging of the fifth play in the series.

John Hamilton, or "The Loot," as he is called by his intimates, is one of the best known motion picture stars in the country. He served six years in the United States cavalry and became associated with film enterprises four years ago, registering an immediate success in western character parts because of the precise local color he was able to inject into cowboy and western types generally. Mr. Hamilton was for five years a cowboy working on the plains of Montana and Texas. He had a distinguished career under Thomas H. Ince, being featured in "The Great Smash" with special success.

"The Little Lost Sister" will be filmed as a Selig Red Seal Play, for release in K-E-S-E. Much of the production work will be done at the Selig studios, Chicago. An all-star cast will be employed, probably headed by George Fawcett.

Kolb and Dill Head Mutuals

Program for Week of January 15 Carries "Beloved Rogue" and Other Good Features.

KOLB & DILL in a five-part production entitled "Beloved Rogue" tops the Mutual Film Corporation's schedule of releases for the week of Jan. 15. This production comes from the American Film Company's Santa Barbara studios, where it was produced under the direction of Al Santell, the director of the entire sucessful series of Kolb & Dill productions.

The picture offers several points of special value to the exhibitor. The cast includes a number of actors of independent drawing power and personal standing in the eyes of the motion picture patron. Miss May Cloy, the pretty young blonde person who has figured in all of the K. and D.'s, is prominently cast in "Beloved Rogue." Harry Von Meter and Clarence Burton also have important parts.

This is the first and probably the last chance of the exhibitor to book a picture in which the celebrated William Russell appears as an "extra." Mr. Russell being an interested spectator in the filming of this portion of "Beloved Rogue" declared himself "in on the picture" in the crowd scenes, just as a bit of sport. This drew in also George Periolat, Franklyn Ritchie and Ashton Dearholt.

Mr. Kolb appears in this production in the role of one "Louie Vandergrif" and his partner in crime, Max Dill, as "Mike Amsterdammer"—a pair of goodhearted blundering rascals. The plot unfolds their system of "doing others as they do you," with various attendant complications like prison terms and other sundries of fate. There is a swift interplay of humor and pathos, with a general pleasantry calculated to give genuine entertainment. "Beloved Rogue" has the distinctive flavor which has given Kolb and Dill productions an interesting history of growing success—a success pointed by some notable long runs in metropolitan theaters.

First of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton."

"Shorty and the Yellow Ring," scheduled for release Jan. 15, is the first of the series of special Mutual "Featurettes" to be put out under the general title of "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton." There will be fifteen of these two-reel Hamilton productions in the series just announced. The booking of this series of "featurettes" gives the exhibitor something worth advertising in short length film. "Shorty and the Yellow Ring" is a tale of borderland daring in which the athletic and resourceful Mr. Hamilton appears as the knight-errant protector and guardian of the young woman secret service agent engaged in breaking up a plot for smuggling Chinese into the United States. The production includes a number of snappy encounters, several hot thrills and a happy ending, being rather of the sure fire type of picture, with a tinge of western atmosphere and a lot of detective drama. "Shorty" will be remembered by exhibitors from a number of Ince productions and the once famous line of "Bronchos."

"Tours Around the World," the Gaumont-Mutual travel reel for the week, takes the spectator for a trip from famous Gibraltar, guardian gate of the Mediterranean, to Algiers, through Tunis and bits of other North African territory. This is the land of some famed chapters of ancient history. This particular travel reel is worthy of special promotion with a view to interesting high school teachers and their pupils. There is a war tangle, too, since the British grip on Gibraltar is of such potent significance in Mediterranean history.

Coming back home we have "See America First" for the week of Jan. 15, presenting a trip up Mount Lowe, Cal., picturing by the way, a thrilling piece of mountain railway construction—this a split reel concluded with Harry Palmer's weekly cartoon comic.

George Ovey, the comical Mutual "Cub," appears on Thursday of the week in "Jerry's Winning Way," a typical Ovey picture. cleanly funny.

"A Jack Tar in the Making," the third of the Mutual's interesting series of "Uncle Sam's Defenders," is available on Friday of this week. This release shows the steps in the making of a landlubber into a full fledged sailor, described in nautical terms as "an able seaman."

Rube Miller and Owen Evans appear in a two-part Vogue comedy released Sunday, Jan. 21, under the title of "Tailor's Trimmings." The comedy plot is sufficiently extravagant for the whimsical outbursts of the riotous Mr. Miller—being an affair of hold-ups, trolley car chases, accidents various and plenty and a violent ending.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in films, for the week pictures orange growing in California, discusses "the Air" and "the Hydro."

The week's Mutual schedule is also rich in serial and serial productions with Chapter 13 of the Signal-Mutual photonovel "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring, of course, the dauntless Helen Holmes; the eighth of the Gaumont Company's "The Vampires" stories under the title of "The Poison Man," and "Ace High," the third of the Niagara-Mutual's series of newspaper stories featuring Helen Greene, released under the general title of "Perils of Our Girl Reporters."

"THE GREAT GREEN EYE" (Metro-Rolfe).

Lionel Barrymore began work this week on his new Metro-Rolfe production, "The Great Green Eye," the joint product of Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. George D. Baker is directing this five-act feature photo-drama. assisted by Charles Hunt, and John Arnold is doing the photographic work. Irene Howley, co-starred with Mr. Barrymore in "A Yellow Streak," with Ralph Herz in "The Purple Lady," and with William Nigh in "Life's Shadows," all Metro features, shares stellar honors with Mr. Barrymore in "The Great Green Eye."

The cast of the new Pollock and Wolf screen play comprises a galaxy of screen favorites. Mr. Barrymore and Miss Howley are two of the most popular Metro stars, and associated with them are Ilean Hume, Frank Currier, Charles Eldridge, Hugh Jeffrey, George A. Wright, Florence Natol and Marien Dennis.

SPITZER SELLS OUT IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

N. H. Spitzer, who recently organized the Cummins Spitzer Feature Company in Washington to exploit big features, one of which was "War's Women," which he has promoted to an exceptional big success in the middle eastern states with an office in Washington, has sold his interests and that of Mr. Cummins to the Hy Art Masterplays Company of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Spitzer is well known in the film world, being organizer of the Bluebird exchanges, and recently was associated in selling the franchises of Clara Kimball Young for the Selznick. Spitzer is back in New York looking around for a new venture. The success he had with "War's Women" through the southern territory is phenomenal.

NEW K-E-S-E MANAGER AT BUFFALO.

Louis Green, widely known throughout New York as a wideawake film salesman and exchange manager, has been placed in charge of the K-E-S-E branch at Buffalo and is expected to make things hum in that district for his new employers.

Mr. Green was formerly connected with Fox, World and Selznick Film Companies, working in and near Buffalo, and he is highly regarded by exhibitors upstate. With Mr. Green in charge of the Buffalo office and Homer Howard traveling out of Buffalo for the same interest, K-E-S-E will doubtless get a full share of business in that territory.

VIRGINIA PEARSON IN "BITTER TRUTH."

A film drama of unusual intensity, with a great sacrifice for a strong climax, is "Bitter Truth," the statuesque Virginia Pearson's recently completed photoplay for William Fox.

The scenario for Miss Pearson's new screen play was written by Mary Murillo, and the direction was in charge of Kenean Buell.

Prominent in the supporting cast are Jack Hopkins and William H. Tooker. Mr. Hopkins is new to Fox films, but Mr. Tooker is remembered for his excellent work in previous motion pictures under the Fox banner. Alice May and Sidney D'Albrook are also in the company.

"THE VAMPIRES" (Gaumont).

The Vampires, those terrible arch-criminals of Paris, play their last cards in "The Terrible Wedding," the final episode of the sensational photo-novel, Jan. 18.

Remarkable adventures bring to a close the activities of the Vampires. Philip Guard's wife and her maid are abducted by the arch criminals; Normandin foils the midnight plot of the Vampires to asphyxiate Mr. and Mrs. Guard; Philip Guard pays a perilous visit to the place where his wife is held a prisoner; and finally takes a hand under the direction of the newspaper reporter and brings about the final denouement. The death of Irma Vep is one of the most exciting big moments in a photo-novel that is replete with sensations. Exhibitors who have not shown "Fantomas," and who are soon to finish with "The Vampires," are already booking the former.

Co-Stars in Paramount for January 15

Fanny Ward, With Dean and Neill, Appear in First Subject, Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore in Second.

TWO gripping dramas of highest consistent quality. "Betty to the Rescue" and "A Girl Like That," produced by Lasky and Famous Players, respectively, will be the features on the Paramount program for the week of Jan. 15. In the former Fanhie Ward, supported by Jack Dean and James Neill, will play the leading role, while the latter, Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore will co-star.

This is Miss Ward's first appearance on the Paramount program since her success in "The Years of the Locust," prior to which this versatile Lasky star created a sensation in "Witchcraft" and "The Cheat." The story was written especially for Miss Ward by Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osman, and is a story especially adapted for Miss Ward. However, it is unlike anything in which she has appeared before. Instead of the society matron, as she was seen in "The Years of the Locust," the star is now a romping hoydenish tomboy with tousled hair, bare feet, and is clad frequently in a dilapidated pair of overalls. Supporting Miss Ward in the cast are Jack Dean, James Neill, Charles West, Lillian Leighton and Ted Duncan.

Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore have a most attractive drama in "A Girl Like That," which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson. The story tells of a female crook whose father is the leader of a gang of safe blowers, which gang, in order to get a line on a wealthy country bank, runs across the young man who is the cashier, and whom they cannot persuade to enter into any sort of an indiscriminate deal. To obtain their end, they send the crook's beautiful daughter to the town, and she, after becoming his bookkeeper, falls dead in love with him, thereby refusing to allow them to rob the bank. During the brawl that follows between the leader and his gangsters, the girl's father is shot. The girl is placed in a tremendous predicament, and the dramatic climax is reached when she succeeds, by the aid of the young cashier, in rounding up the thieves in their attempt to play a doublecross game.

Surrounding the program for this week for the exhibitor, Paramount will release three exceptional short reel features; the forty-ninth edition of the magazine-on-the-screen; the fiftieth of the series of "Weekly Trips Around the World," personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he shows "Montreal, Old and New," and a one-reel Klever Komedy, in which Victor Moore is starred, entitled "Did It Ever Happen to You?"

"THE BLACK DOOR" (Mutual).

"The Black Door," second of the thrilling series of fifteen complete newspaper stories, released by the Mutual Film Corporation under "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," is one of the most gruesome and at the same time one of the most fascinating motion picture plays ever produced.

Helen Greene, who plays the leading role—that of Isabel Ralston, a young newspaper reporter on the staff of a great metropolitan daily—is projected by the order of her managing editor into the middle of a mystery that recalls Poe's "Murders of the Rue Morgue," and throughout the story there is that element of criminal shadowland which defies analysis but is potent to send a shudder through the human system whenever it is encountered.

Constructively and pictorially "The Black Door" is a remarkable drama. Based on an old southern superstition, to wit, that the front door of a house occupied by one family for more than a century, turned black when any occupant died, it has been built up by Mrs. Tupper into a play so thrilling that it rivets attention from the first moment to the last.

Earle Metcalfe, leading heavy of the cast, and Miss Greene, are both afforded an opportunity for some fine acting when they enter the house of mystery.

That night scene in the rambling old halls and rooms of the ancient mansion is one that lives in the memory, because the mysterious comings and goings of the murderous gang that watches every move of the visitors. One can almost hear the windows rattle in the fierce gusts that drive torrents of rain against them.

The attraction of the piece, aside from its engrossing mystery, consists largely in the faithfulness with which the part of the newspaper reporter is played by Miss Greene, who adopts none of the old time stage devices to signify that she is a newspaper woman.

Triangle January 28 Releases

Douglas Fairbanks and Dorothy Dalton Each Lead in Separate Productions.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS and Dorothy Dalton are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for January 28th. Fairbanks appears in a serio-comic drama of brave hearts and thrilling deeds entitled "The Americano," which was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos from Eugene P. Lyle's novel, "Blaze Derringer." The direction is by John Emerson. Dorothy Dalton has a vehicle excellently suited to her personality in "Chicken Casey," a play of theatrical and literary life by J. G. Hawks, directed by Raymond B. West.

As "The Americano" Douglas Fairbanks takes the part of a devil-may-care young American engineer who goes to the Republic of Paragonia in Central America to take charge of the national mines. He has fallen in love with Juana, the daughter of the Presidente of Paragonia, in New York, but when he arrives in the country he is amazed to find Presidente Castalar in prison, and his family held under guard in their home. Salze Espada, the treacherous minister of war, is responsible for this unhappy state of affairs. How Blaze Derringer, the Americano, thwarts the villainous Espada, releases the persecuted Presidente, and finally marries the beautiful Juana furnish the big thrills in one of the strongest screen plays that Fairbanks has yet appeared in.

Dorothy Dalton's part in "Chicken Casey" is that of Mavis Marberry, a well known actress. Her manager reads a successful novel by a young author named Everett Hale, who has made the heroine of his book a waif of the underworld named "Rags," despite the fact that he knows practically nothing about life in the slums. Mavis and Hale meet at the manager's office, in connection with the dramatization of the novel, and Mavis demands the leading part in the stage version, but is rejected by Hale, who does not consider her fitted to do a "tough" type. Mavis stages a surprise for Hale, and is introduced to him as "Chicken Casey," a dance hall ingenue in one of the most notorious Bowery dives. The author is completely taken in. He decides to reform the girl and arrange to have her play "Rags." This is brought about, and, of course, Mavis registers a big hit in the part. Hale learns of the trick that has been put over on him and leaves the theater hurt and indignant. Mavis, however, has fallen in love with him and finds a way to win his forgiveness so that a happy future is assured them both.

Picture House Near Boston Slum

New $60,000 Theater for Poor People in Congested District of Boston's West End —A First Venture of This Kind and It Will be Watched With Interest—House to Be Ready This February.

By J. J. Philliph, Boston Traveler and Herald.

BOSTON, MASS.—Moving picture men and real estate promoters will watch with interest an experiment undertaken by a group of men organized as the Lancaster Trust in erecting a picture house at 31-37 Lancaster street, West End, on the fringe of one of the congested tenement house districts of the city. This is the first time that any such venture has been developed to such a stage, but for years overtures have been made at City Hall for the erection of such building in the North End, or the making over of old buildings for that purpose. All such proposals, however, were turned down until the present West End enterprise was projected and passed upon by the mayor.

This building is a pretentious structure for that locality. The plans were drawn by Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, and the contract was awarded to the Haynes Construction Company. The building, built of steel, brick and concrete, two stories high, with a frontage of 118 feet and a clear depth of 65 feet, will cost approximately $60,000. It will be of first-class construction, equipped with sprinkler service and hand extinguishers, with iron stairways enclosed in terra cotta, and will have a seating capacity of 1,200.

The house will be ready for business by the middle of February. When the building is ready for occupancy, a formal application to conduct a moving picture house will be submitted, and the license granted.

Theatrical people have said that it would seem good judgment on the part of the promoters to erect a building suitable for regular theater business in case the moving picture venture failed. No stage for theatrical productions appears in the plans, however.

The nearest moving picture house to the Lancaster street building is in Bowdoin square, which the immediate neighborhood of Lancaster street, which runs from causeway. That this is a strong moving picture district the moving picture men of Bowdoin square well know, yet the city authorities do not recall an application for the establishment of a house there before the Lancaster street proposition was broached. Years ago a move was made to operate a picture house on Canal street, but it was rejected. Various plans have been projected for the crowded North End, only to fall, through the opposition of school and church authorities. Year by year amusement interests have found it harder to locate their enterprises in residential districts.

Express Company Loses Appeal

Dominion Theater at Victoria, B. C., Wins Second Verdict in Fight to Recover Damages from Express Company Consequent on Delayed Delivery of Films—The Amount Involved Is Small, But the Principle Is Important.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Although the amount involved was comparatively small, a question of great importance to the film industry in British Columbia was involved in a case which came up recently in the Court of Appeals, in which the Dominion Express Company appealed against a judgment awarding $194 damages to the Victoria Dominion Theatre Company for loss of profits through the failure of the express company to deliver a film in time for the performances scheduled for a certain Monday. As recorded in the Moving Picture World at the time, the theater could not be opened on that day, and President J. R. Muir immediately ordered that suit be brought against the express company.

In appealing from the judgment of the lower court, the latter contended that it should only be obliged to pay damages to the amount of $50 (the amount at which the film was valued in the form of contract between the parties), but the appeal was unanimously dismissed, and the original judgment affirmed.

In the evidence it was brought out that for three years on the last boat leaving Vancouver for Victoria on each Wednesday and Saturday night, a film had been sent to the Dominion theater; and while the express company showed that on the night in question there was no special admonition to "rush" the shipment, the theater people proved that instead of being sent to Victoria the film was started for the east, and the express company only discovered its mistake in time to get the film back to Vancouver to be shipped over to Victoria for the Tuesday matinee.

Chief Justice Macdonald said that the question was whether the contracting parties could be reasonably held to have in contemplation the loss which was claimed when the contract was made. There was no direct evidence upon that point at all. Nothing was said with regard to the need for urgency, but when one looked at all the circumstances and the nature of the business conducted by the plaintiffs, he was unable to say that the trial judge had drawn the wrong inference when he came to the conclusion that the shipper must reasonably have had in contemplation that this film was needed for the Monday performance.

Mr. Justice Martin concurred, but was inclined to think that the express company's counsel had shown that an express company could not be held liable for failure to deliver a casual consignment expeditiously.

In his judgment Mr. Justice McPhillips stated that the Dominion Express Company in Canada enjoyed peculiar privileges. They were extensive and very great, and the public were to a very large extent in the hands of the company for all express business. He thought that they should expect from it the highest form of expedition in handling its business, and he would expect that the courts of law would at all times hold them to expedition in the completest sense. That is, an express company must at once forward an article consigned to it by the first available method of transportation.

Metro Transfer in Western Canada.

Vancouver, B. C.—One of the most important developments in the Canadian exchange field in recent months is brought about through the transfer of Metro features from the Standard Film Service, Ltd., of which A. H. Sawyer is president, to the Specialty Film Import, Limited, L. E. Ouimet's organization, which controls the Pathe output in Canada. Although the change has not actually been made in western Canada at this writing, it is stated that all details will be completed within a few days.

Andrew P. Keegan, Pathe general manager for western Canada, and in temporary charge of the Calgary office, has arrived in Vancouver to assist Local Manager Charles Barnard in completing the necessary arrangements, and Bert Lubin, Calgary manager for Metro, also came on to join Manager A. E. Smith of the local Standard branch.

At the Metro office doubt was expressed that the change would be made, while at the Pathe headquarters various legal documents were displayed in proof that it would be made.

N. W. Davidson has just been appointed manager of the Pathe office in Calgary.

Santa Clauses in Dominion Theaters.

Edmonton, Alberta.—John Hazza, manager of the Empress theater, carried out the children's share of the Christmas season in good style, and on Christmas day had Santa Claus himself stationed before a big fireplace which had been erected in the lobby of the theater, passing our bags of candy to all children who came in. Each was given an opportunity of shaking hands with old Santa Claus, and thanking him for what the previous night had brought forth. Mr. Hazza should be a popular personage with the juvenile element from now on, if they get to thinking he is Santa Claus' friend and principal backer.

Calgary, Alberta.—A real Santa Claus was on hand at the Regent theater at the Saturday morning children's matinee preceding Christmas, and each child attending the performance was given a present. Needless to say, many children were present.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager Hector Quagliotti of the Colonial theater had an especially pretty lobby and foyer for the Christmas holidays, which was realistic enough to give one the shivers. Ropes of evergreens were festooned about, and resting on the top of these was cotton "snow," sprinkled with this glistening stuff—you know what I mean.

Winnipeg Theater Get First Run World Films.

Winnipeg, Man.—M. J. Williamson of the National theater has secured first run of all the new World Film pictures, which are being distributed in Canada by the newly-formed Regal Films, Ltd. The first picture under the arrangement was "Camille," with Clara Kimball Young, which was shown for an entire week. Evening prices were 20 and 35 cents.

Seats at Rex Show for Patriotic Fund.

Vancouver, B. C.—Through the kindness of Manager W. P. Dewees of the Rex theater, the members of the Connaught Chapters of the Daughters of the Empire raised a considerable amount to add to their fund for purchasing socks and other comforts for soldiers on active service. Mr. Dewees gave to the ladies fifteen hundred of his regular 15-cent tickets, and 120 box-seat tickets, and they were allowed to retain the full amount secured from the sale of them. The tickets were good for admission on either of two days during the week.

Mission City, B. C.—Manager Bannister of the Victor theater showed the British government's official pictures of "The Battle of the Somme" on two nights recently, and handled the affair in a manner which won the enthusiastic approval of the entire town.

MORE SEATTLE NOTES.

Seattle Exchange Managers Hold Second Meeting.

Seattle, Wash.—The exchange managers held their second weekly meeting Tuesday, Dec. 19. Fred C. Quimby, Pathe's northwest manager, was appointed temporary chairman to perfect the organization. Mr. Quimby says that he has already gone to work on the matter of a movie ball, which film men hope to make the biggest event of the season. The plans are to get Pearl White or Mabel Normand up from Los Angeles to lead the grand march. Tuesday's meeting adjourned in order that the managers might go to the court house in a body to lend their moral support to Mr. Smyth in his case against the city.

"It is the object of the exchange managers' association to fight such actions by the city, in order to effect better conditions for the film industry, and to bring us in closer touch with the Exhibitors' League," said Mr. Quimby, "as it really is our desire to assist and co-operate with the directors."

Taxes on Signs in Baltimore

New Department of Minor Privileges Has Prepared a Schedule of Charges and It Is Now In Force—New Applications Needed for Old Signs—Some of the Privileges and Charges for Them.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—H. Walter Johenning, chief of the new department of Minor Privileges, has prepared a new schedule of charges and it is now in operation in Baltimore, having been approved by the Board of Estimates on Friday, December 29. Application for permission of continuing special grants must be made by all, who, before January 1st, were enjoying them. About $300,000, it is estimated, will be added to the revenue.

The following is a list of those privileges and their costs which will probably be of interest to moving picture theater owners and managers: Notices and advertisements of theatrical attractions, boxing matches, etc., which are usually posted during the night by "snipers," on buildings, poles, boxes, piles of lumber, building materials and the like will be charged $100 a year, and will be prohibited from "billing" or "posting" houses and other structures that are permanent.

"For rent" and "for sale" signs exceeding 50 square feet in size will be taxed $2.50 a year. Another tax, similar to this is provided for signs and advertisements imbedded in cement sidewalks.

Firms, corporations and individuals who rent canopies used in front of churches, theaters, halls and private residences for weddings, parties or other purposes must pay $5 a year for each canopy.

Clocks which are attached to buildings will be taxed at a rate of from 10 cents to $1 a square foot, according to the location.

Signs flat against a building will cost nothing if less than four feet long. Placard signs made of tin will cost $1 to $5 each; signs constructed in footways, $2.50 each; standard movable signs, which formerly were charged for at the rate of $2 each will cost $5 each. The charge for electric signs in the centre of the city was increased from 10 to 30 cents a square foot to from 10 cents to $1.

For the privilege of maintaining penny-in-the-slot weighing scales and chewing gum machines in front of buildings the owners must pay $5 each per annum.

Arc, incandescent or nitrogen lamps for advertising purposes, from $2.50 to $5 each.

The tax for vaults will be based on the assessed valuation of the ground, capitalized at 5 per cent. of one-half the valuation.

Gasoline tanks under footways will cost $5 for the first barrel the container holds and $1 for each additional barrel.

Building Inspector Makes Annual Visits.

Baltimore, Md.—Before issuing the annual licenses, on January 1st, for moving picture theaters, Building Inspector J. J. Byrne, of this city had his inspectors go over the field thoroughly to take notes on what was needed in the operating rooms and in the matter of exits and other requirements of these houses. The investigation was carried on by this corps of men at night and it is understood that all reports were favorable.

Film Opera at Parkway.

Baltimore, Md.—On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week, great throngs attacked the doors of the Parkway theater, 3-9 W. North avenue, due to the fact that Manager Bernard Depkin, Jr., held one of the most exclusive performances that has yet been in Baltimore. For the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, the whole second act of the opera "Carmen" was acted on the screen by the leading songbirds of the day and their voices rang out clear and distinct in every part of the house. Whether this is the last word in the way of synchronization, George R. Webb, the inventor, has yet to determine; but to say the least, he has made wonderful strides since he first introduced his invention several years ago in this city.

Garden Theater Entertains Newsies.

Baltimore, Md.—Held under the auspices of The Baltimore News and through the courtesy of George Schneider, manager of the Garden theater, on Lexington street at Park avenue, the little fellows who carry "poipers" were given a fine entertainment at this house on Friday morning, December 29. The number that attended is estimated at about 2,000.

Patron Sues for Injuries.

Baltimore, Md.—In the Superior Court on Saturday, December 30, through E. W. White, attorney, Leofil and Lilly Chrul brought suit against Martha L. Miles, owner of the Family theater, 518 South Broadway, and its manager, B. Cluster, for injuries sustained on October 27 last, when a chair collapsed. The amounts of the suit are for $5,000 and $2,000.

Children's Matinee at Gertrude McCoy.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the activities of Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy theater, Fulton avenue at Baker street, a special matinee was given on New Year's morning for the children and as a special attraction, the fairy tale entitled "Rumpelslitskin" was shown.

Manager C. L. Bradfield Retires from Family

Philadelphia Picture Theater on Market Street Has Had Ten Years' Success as a Five Cent House—Site Has Become Valuable.

By F. V. Armato, 1441 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—C. L. Bradfield of the Family theater, 1311 Market street, will shortly retire from the management of the house (but not from filmdom) with a record of which few, if any, exhibitors can boast. Ten years of successful business at five cents admissions, in a house located on the most expensive business street in the third largest city of the country is a record of which any man might be proud. Mr. Bradfield is justly so. His policy of three reels a day has justified itself in spite of five-reel features, ten-reel super-photoplays, 20-reel serials and all the other innovations which the film business has seen in the last few years. Only because the property in which his theater is located has become so immensely valuable that a rent destructive of all profit is asked for its renewal does the film veteran relinquish the house.

C. L. Bradfield.

The Family was opened in 1906 as the Bijou Dream, a name then shared with five other houses under the management of J. P. Harris of the Western Amusement Company, which were at that time distributed along the main thoroughfares in the central part of the city. Each in turn was disposed of, or converted to other uses, until the remaining one at 1311 Market street was the sole survivor. This house in 1911 was completely overhauled, redecorated and painted and supplied with a new front. At that time it was rechristened "The Family."

However, the original admission of five cents was retained, which provided ample returns on the investment. Shows were continuous from 8:30 a. m. to 12 p. m.

The General Film Company's service has been used exclusively in the theater since the corporation was started, and Mr. Bradfield has never found reason to change it. The first three pictures shown in the house on October 19, 1906, were "Rubberneck Reuben," "Mishaps of a Baby Carriage" and "The Amateur Detective."

"Intolerance" a Great Hit.

Philadelphia, Pa.—David Wark Griffith's "Intolerance" is shattering all records for attendance at the Chestnut Street opera house. The combination of the holiday season and an attraction of such unusual merit has resulted in the happy state of affairs, from a managerial standpoint, that tickets must be reserved at least three days in advance. Manager J. J. McSween even hopes to see the house sold out for a solid week in advance.

A big choir of trained voices, the augmented orchestra and the special decorations, create an effective and atmospheric setting for the display of the picture. Commencing on New Year's Day the orchestra has been, and will continue to be, under the direction of Frederick Arundel, general musical director of Mr. Griffith's film spectacles. His presence has had the immediate result of increasing the potency and poignancy of the musical setting at least fifty per cent. His wide experience in directing music for pictures and his intimate appreciation of the requirements of synchronization, coupled with his knowledge of Mr. Griffith's purposes in arranging to supplement sight with sound, account for this happy result.

Washington Children's Shows Begin

First Matinees of the Series Designed for Children by Federation of Women's Clubs Have Now Been Held—First Shows Were Given Freely—Some Reflections on the Way Movement Is Carried on.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The first of the series of children's matinees given under the auspices of the Federation of Women's Clubs of the District of Columbia were held on Friday and Saturday, December 29 and 30, at the various Washington motion picture theaters that have agreed to aid the Federation in its work to interest the children in attending matinees to be given each week. The ladies of the organization have declared that the ordinary shows given here are totally unsuited to the children. and that there should be times when they could go with their parents or alone and see "pure" pictures. It may, however, be said in passing that when some 1,500 children of the city were invited, and the invitation was largely accepted, to attend on Christmas morning the exhibition at one of Washington's legitimate theaters of a gigantic spectacle in the way of motion pictures, admittedly filled with love scenes of a type best suited to more mature minds, the Federation made absolutely no protest.

These two matinees, with those two of the coming week are free. Boy Scouts in uniform were in attendance at the houses as ushers, while members of the organization served as chaperons. The theaters and the programs offered were as follows:

Friday afternoon, from 2 to 5 o'clock—Avenue Grand, 645 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, "Little Mary Sunshine"; Empire, 913 H street northeast, "Dawn of Freedom"; Home, 1230 C street northeast, "Let Katie Do It"; Lyric, 3108 14th street northwest, "Youth's Endearing Charms"; Olympic. 1431 U street northwest, "The Crippled Hand"; Victoria, 505 Seventh street southwest, "The Patriot," and Howard (colored), 620 T street northwest, "Rumpelstiltskin."

Saturday afternoon, from 2 to 5 o'clock—Masonic Temple Auditorium, Thirteenth street and New York avenue northwest, "Shadows and Sunshine"; Circle, 2105 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, "Dawn of Freedom"; Dumbarton, 1349 Wisconsin avenue northwest, "Little Mademoiselle"; Truxton, North Capitol street and Florida avenue, "The Crippled Hand," and Blue Mouse (colored) 1209 Twenty-sixth street northwest, "The Patchwork Girl of Oz."

The committee in charge of selecting the films informed the public that in offering the pictures named it has been governed by the fact that there are but a limited number of suitable pictures for children on the market. and the technicalities of the motion picture business, which has caused uncertainty as to the days when "clean" pictures would be at liberty for these matinees.

"We realize," said a member of the committee, "that it will not be possible to please every one with our selections. We are not entirely satisfied ourselves, but we are endeavoring to create such a demand for pictures suitable for children that it will be worth while for all producers to strive for our standard, which means the best for children."

A number of the exchange managers and exhibitors are strong in their condemnation of these women who are seemingly working for their own ends. The publicity sought by their chairwoman is of a type open to criticism. She avows her opposition to censorship, yet she in many ways censors pictures. She declares that the pictures shown are unclean some times, but when it serves her purpose, the reverse is the case. She rushes into print so often, with her name always appended, corralling all kinds of publicity, that she has hurt rather than helped her cause so far as the industry is concerned.

Earle E. Reese to Handle Selznick Pictures.

Washington, D. C.—Earle E. Reese, a well-known Washington film man, has joined the sales force of Sidney B. Lust and will handle the Selznick productions and the other films carried by Mr. Lust s exchange through the territory. Mr. Reese was with the International Film from the opening of the Washington office until its business was taken over by the Pathe. By reason of his long connection with the business here, he needs no further introduction.

General Film Takes Space in Newspapers.

Washington, D. C.—Something of a surprise was sprung in Washington last week when it was learned that the General Film Company had contracted with the Washington Times and the Baltimore News for space in those papers as a part of an extensive advertising campaign in which the company is about to enter. It is said that the advertisements will be three columns wide and ten inches deep, will come along fairly often and will be signed by the company.

A. J. Nelson, charge of the Washington territory of the General Film, has returned from a short visit to headquarters. In speaking of his visit Mr. Nelson told of having witnessed the screen exhibition of the British war pictures which will shortly be released in seven installments, each of 2,000 feet. These, with the other series of pictures now being handled by this exchange, has necessitated the increasing of the office force, and Mr. Nelson has arranged to take on three new men to handle this business.

The President to See "War Brides."

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust has just completed arrangements for the showing of "War Brides," the Herbert Brenon picture featuring Mme. Nazimova, at the White House before President and Mrs. Wilson and their guests. Louis J. Selznick, who controls the picture, and others who are associated with him, are coming from New York for the occasion.

Arthur Melvin Comes to Local Lair.

Washington, D. C.—Arthur Melvin is the latest addition to the sales force of the Fox Film in this city. He was for several months assistant manager of the Philadelphia exchange of the Mutual, and for a year and a half had been manager for George Kleine in Kansas City. Prior to that time he was assistant manager for a little more than a year in the Philadelphia office of the World Film. He comes to Washington well recommended as being a capital fellow, well liked by all those managers whom he has served.

Gardner Mack Leaves City.

Washington. D. C.—"Gardner Mack" (Albert F. Ferguson), the first dramatic editor in this section to establish an independent motion picture department, with daily comment, in a newspaper, after a service of nearly twenty years, is leaving the field to become executive secretary of a civic organization in Duluth, Minn.

Mr. Ferguson is one of the best-known newspaper men in Washington. He was particularly friendly with the motion picture interests and his column in the Washington Times was very often of great help to them. He was a worker for the best that is in the motion picture business. Washington exhibitors are expressing a great deal of regret at his determination to leave the city, for they looked upon him as an ally and appreciated his efforts voiced through his column in the paper.

Whooping Cough Prevalent Again.

Washington, D. C.—It is reported that whooping cough is again prevalent in the District of Columbia, and that in December there were nearly 500 cases under treatment. Exhibitors should bear in mind the fact that a good-sized fine is provided for him who may be prosecuted and convicted under the health laws for permitting a child afflicted with whooping cough to enter a theater. It is also unlawful for a parent to allow a child with the cough to attend a public performance.

Greater Vitagraph May Move.

Washington, D. C.—The Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchange, it is rumored about the city, is on the point of closing negotiations with the owners of the property on Eleventh street northwest, formerly occupied by the International Film Service, taken over by Pathe. The Vitagraph people have for a considerable length of time been looking for larger quarters, for in their present home at 811 E street northwest, they are badly cramped.

Pennington Gets "Around the World."

Lynchburg, Va.—J. B. Pennington, a well-known film man, has just purchased the rights for Jules Verne's play, "Around the World in Eighty Days," for Virginia and North Carolina. The picture will take to the road January 1, playing legit. and picture theaters in the above territory.

Old Rut and New Idea in the Film Business

Manager Mann Has a Few Pertinent Remarks for the Good of the New Year's Business—Will Interest Exhibitors.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Creative genius is highly desirable in the management of a motion picture theater according to George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players exchange. "There are a great many exhibitors today," said Mr. Mann, "that are letting custom and tradition keep them in a rut. Just because an idea, a certain method or plan was successful a few years ago is no reason it will win out today.

"Each day in this business old records are broken and old methods cast in the shade by the searchlight of new thoughts—by modern efficient methods of advertising and running of theaters. If you're in a rut, get out as quickly as possible. Don't stick to the trodden path that carries you around in circles, but forge ahead to where the bright lights spell SUCCESS.

"Fearless independence combined with deep study and originality in the method of the running of theaters has won thousands of successes, where sticking to tradition has only collected barnacles and cobwebs. The exhibitor of motion pictures who creates ideas, and then carries them out, builds about him that great mental fortification which competitors dare not enter, while the copyist survives only long enough to prove to the originator of his ideas that his territory is a fertile field upon which to build that house which will gobble up the profits of the less active competitor, by establishing a theater backed by the creative brain of its promoter."

M. M. Roth Buys Orpheum.

McDonald, Pa.—The Orpheum theater, McDonald, was recently taken over by M. M. Roth, who is carrying out a number of improvements in the house. The former owner was Lewis Sucatgky, who has retired from the exhibiting business.

Mr. Shearer, treasurer of the League, looked after affairs during Mr. Delves' absence.

The party witnessed the Metro production "The Brand of Cowardice," in which are featured Miss Valentine and Lionel Barrymore.

The latest Mary Pickford production, "The Pride of the Clan," will be shown at the Liberty the entire week of January 8. The unusual interest displayed in "The Pride of the Clan" justifies a longer run than has been given any offering at the Rowland & Clark theaters for some time, the management states. It will be shown from January 15 to 23 at the other Rowland & Clark houses.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The musical programme for the Buffalo Screen Club ball at Elmwood music hall on the evening of January 29 will be on an elaborate scale. The orchestra of forty men will be under the direction of Joseph A. Ball, musical director of Shea's theater. The Buffalo Park band has also been engaged for the evening. C. A. Harry Marsey, chairman of the decoration committee, announces that the hall will be transformed into a Japanese garden. The boxes will be beautifully decorated.

Constance Denison Almy, a ten-year-old prodigy, will play the harp and interpret Graecian dances. Another feature will be the staging a film success. A director, cameraman, special lights, settings and other paraphernalia will be supplied at the ball by one of the large producing companies.

Shoes to Advertise "Shoes."

Buffalo. N. Y.—Two hundred pairs of shoes recently decorated the lobby of the Linden theater, Buffalo, when the Bluebird feature, "Shoes," was played at that house. L. E. Barger, manager of the Linden, co-operated with a local shoe dealer to supply the footwear. The word "Shoes," made of large pasteboard letters, was placed on each entrance of the theater. A big banner was used in front of the house. The enterprise of Manager Barger was rewarded with a good attendance.

Cincinnati Film Doings

By Kenneth Crain, 610 First Natl. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Orphans See "Snow White."

CINCINNATI, O.—A unique New Year's party was held on January 1 at the Strand theater, with the management and Howard Saxby, a well-known Cincinnati writer, as hosts, and a thousand Cincinnati orphans as guests, to see the film presentation of "Snow White," featuring Marguerite Clark, and some Burton Holmes moving picture travelogues. The youngsters thoroughly enjoyed their big party, which was one of the largest of its sort ever held in a local theater, and the Strand management and Mr. Saxby congratulated themselves on having started the New Year in the best possible way.

Big Audience Watch for New Year.

Cincinnati, O.—Many of the large downtown picture houses, following a lead set by the vaudeville theaters for some years, and by some of the picture houses last year, gave an extra midnight show on New Year's Eve, beginning at 10:30 o'clock, and nearly all had large houses, consisting of those who desired to be downtown for the celebration of the New Year at the earliest possible moment. All of the Libson houses, the Strand, the Walnut and the Family, adopted this plan, and the size of the audiences indicated the approval of the public very effectually. Marguerite Clark in "Snow White" at the Strand, Clara Kimball Young in "The Foolish Virgin" at the Walnut, and "The Female of the Species," a Triangle attraction, with the first installment of the new Bushman-Bayne serial, "The Great Secret," at the Family, were attractions of holiday caliber.

Botzum Bros. to Build Big Theater.

Canton, O.—The construction of one of the largest moving picture houses in the city is planned by Botzum Brothers, in connection with the remodeling of the property at Market avenue and Second street. The theater will occupy the north half of the property, extending 120 feet deep, and the plans contemplate its equipment and decoration in the most modern style. It will have a large seating capacity, making it a leading house in that respect.

Massillon's New Tax.

Massillon, O.—The City Council of Massillon has passed an ordinance fixing $20 as the minimum annual tax upon moving picture theaters, and $40 as the maximum, applicable to the larger houses. There are four theaters in the city, all of which are covered by the new ordinance, the Lincoln, the Grand, the Dreamland and the Lyric.

Auditorium Theater's Xmas Tree.

Dayton, O.—Manager Gil Burrows and the employes of the Auditorium theater were given a truly "Merry Christmas" on the great holiday, which was, as usual, one of big business for the popular house. Mr. Burrows and his staff gathered for their celebration at a Christmas tree, on the invitation of President Elmer Rauh, anticipating the usual remembrances in the way of small gifts, and Mr. Rauh gave each employe a five-dollar gold piece, Mr. Burrows receiving a larger cash evidence of the company's appreciation of his services.

High Prices in Piqua.

Piqua, O.—The prices charged by May's opera house for the engagement of "Civilization" for three days beginning January 1, set a record, in all probability, for the smaller cities of Ohio, and certainly for Piqua itself. The Ince production showed at one dollar for the better seats, and large reservations indicated that the public was not afraid to spend its money at that rate for so famous an attraction. A large orchestra, with a special musical program.

Regal Films' Canadian Forces.

TORONTO.—Regal Films, Limited, Canadian distributors of World Brady-Made pictures, with headquarters in Toronto, have been consolidating its Canadian territory. According to S. B. Taube, the Ontario branch manager, the Regal business has opened up better than expected and it is on a good, substantial basis in his opinion.

The Montreal branch crew consists of Manager Charles Berman, formerly of Toronto who previously held the World franchise in the Dominion; Ed. English and Pat Doyle. The latter, who is calling on Quebec theater managers, is also well known in Toronto.

The Winnipeg branch is managed by Les Kauffman, who is assisted by H. Nathanson. Sam Fine, a popular Toronto road man, worked through northern Ontario for the Regal and finally reached Winnipeg, where he has been temporarily attached to the local Regal staff.

M. Kauffman and Jack Berman are working on the road from the Toronto office.

Executive matters, to a considerable extent, are in the hands of A. Aronson, secretary of Regal Films, Limited, who is a New Yorker.

The Regal company has secured "War As It Really Is," the war feature taken by Donald C. Thompson, for Canada. The first Canadian showing of this picture was at the Toronto Regent during the week of January 1.

The Regal company will also distribute the releases of the Educational Film Company in the Dominion. When the Regal opened its office doors a few weeks ago, it had more than 500 reels in stock in the Toronto branch, nearly all of which was new stuff for Canada.

The president of Regal Films, Limited, is E. L. Ruddy of Toronto, who is also the owner of the new Toronto Regent theater. It was therefore natural that the Regent would use World attractions. The first release was seen during the week of January 8 in "La Boheme."

Notes About Universal.

Toronto, Ont.—The headquarters of the Canadian Universal in Toronto were visited between the holidays by Manager Hanna of the Winnipeg Universal office and Manager Finch of the Vancouver branch.

During the closing hours of 1916, the employes of the shipping and poster department of the Universal head office here presented cigarette cases and cigarettes to General Manager Clair Hague and Ontario Manager Bud Lennon as tokens of their appreciation of treatment received.

Harry Price, formerly Blue Bird representative in the Canadian West, has rejoined the Famous Players' organization and has been sent to Montreal.

Bill Bach, Canadian publicity manager for the Universal, has started preliminary advertising work for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

"Intolerance" in Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—Basil S. Courtney of Toronto, who controls the "Birth of a Nation" throughout Canada, has secured the Canadian rights of D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance." The premier presentation of the latter feature in the Dominion will take place in Toronto late in January and, in the meantime, a special road company is being organized for its showing from Coast to Coast. This company will include a twenty-piece orchestra, choir, operators, mechanics, etc.

"Daughter of Gods" Coming.

Election Now Safe, "Nation" Film Can Show

Nova Scotia Authorities Lift Ban on Griffith Spectacle Imposed Before Election at Request of Negro Voters.

From Frederick F. Sully, 68 Lansdowne Ave., St. John, N. B.

HALIFAX, N. S.—Another triumph of the moving picture industry over the whims and fancies of a certain portion of the public mind is being revealed here this month with the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation," for two weeks at the Academy of Music, beginning January 15. Something more than a year ago, following a protest from the colored population of the province, exhibitors were refused permission to screen the picture in any portion of Nova Scotia. This was just previous to the provincial election. The then incumbent officers were running for re-election, and as the colored population represented a vote of about 5,000 in the province, the compliance with their request was deemed expedient at the time. Now that election is over and the present office holders will rule supreme for four years, the ban has been lifted and "The Birth of a Nation" will have a triumphal procession into the city from Winnipeg, a jump of almost the breadth of the continent.

Nova Scotia is the last of the provinces to accept the great American war picture. Theaters in New Brunswick, Ontario and the West have played and are still continuing to play to capacity houses at the original admission charges. These prices will still hold in Halifax. The general policy of the Academy of Music has been stock company, but Manager J. F. O'Connell has closed negotiations with Walter C. McKay of the St. John opera house for a two-weeks' engagement of the Academy of Music Stock Company while "The Birth of a Nation" is being shown in Halifax.

The colored population of Nova Scotia is almost super-sensitive. Through the Halifax papers and other publications they are continually voicing a protest against the issuing of literature or other material that may in any way reflect on the race.

Changes at Academy of Music.

St. John, N. B.—With the completion of the engagement of the Academy of Music stock company at the St. John opera house, January 27, the auditorium will be shut down for two or three weeks, while the new lessee, J. M. Franklin of Halifax, is expending $10,000 on general improvements. The entire orchestra floor will be torn out, the rear lowered and the front elevated. New folding opera chairs will be installed, and the seating capacity will be increased from 1,050 to 1,200.

Walter C. McKay, who has been resident manager for Fred G. Spencer for the past three years, and a theatrical executive of wide experience, will remain in the same capacity for Mr. Franklin, who will devote his time to the management of the Strand in Halifax. Mr. McKay has been actively connected with motion picture and theatrical enterprises for the last fifteen years. He was resident manager for a large house in Lowell, Mass., and for several years was general manager for the Thompson & Woods attractions, with headquarters in Boston. During his stay in St. John he has made a wealth of friends, who are glad to know he is to remain.

Fred J. Spencer's New Strand Details.

St. John, N. B.—A Boston architect arrived in St. John last week to further arrange details with Fred G. Spencer for the new $100,000 Strand theater, ground for which is to be broken on King's Square, opposite B. F. Keith's new Imperial, in April. The Strand, which is to Star Now Charges 10 Cents.

St. John, N. B.—A. B. Farmer, who has had the distinction to hold to the five-cent admission longer than any other exhibitor in the Maritime Provinces, has finally fallen in line and accepted the doctrines of the high cost of living. The Star, which is the oldest motion picture hall in the city, changed its policy from five to ten cents admission on January 1. Mr. Farmer promises a bill that will compare favorably with any other theater in the city. Children under fourteen are admitted for five cents, and matinees will be five cents to all.

Toronto, Ont.—The Columbia theater, St. Thomas, Ont., formerly the Columbia Hotel in old wet days, has been opened by its owner and manager, Mr. Maclean. He reported that business in the North Country was permanently good. He contracted for two Paramounts weekly while here.

Stratford, Ont.—W. I. Kemp, Classic theater, Stratford, Ont., enjoyed a patronage of 1,400 in a six-hundred-seat house on a recent Saturday. The magnet was "The Yellow Menace," he reports.

Louis Rosenfeld Comes Here.

Toronto, Ont.—Louis Rosenfeld, for several years the Famous Players branch manager in St. John, N. B., has been transferred to Toronto where, it is announced, he will manage the local office for Ontario. Mitchell S. Bernstein, of the home office, has been sent to take charge of the St. John branch.

Children's Matinee at the Regent.

Toronto, Ont.—The first children's matinee to be held in a downtown theater of Toronto was the special performance given at the Regent theater on Saturday, December 30, starting at 11 a. m. The attraction was the Paramount release, "Oliver Twist," with Marie Doro in the leading role. The venture was such a success that Manager Roberts has decided to hold Saturday morning shows regularly in future. The performance brought out many of the better class of children who were accompanied by parents or other adults.

Censorship Unintelligent Says Editor

E. C. Hopwood of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Makes Noteworthy Speech Before the Screen Club—"Yellow" Papers and Pictures.

By M. A. Malaney, 616 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Comparing the present condition of the film industry to the situation in which the newspapers found themselves some years ago, when the so-called "yellow pages" were first circulated, E. C. Hopwood, managing editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, delivered a ringing speech before the Cleveland Screen Club last week, that will long be remembered.

Mr. Hopwood said:

"I judge the motion picture industry is in the same condition as the daily papers were during the "yellow" period. Newspapers, conservative or otherwise, thought they had to be yellow to compete with the "yellows." The papers gradually saw ahead of themselves and they are down to a sound basis now, with the yellow generally forgotten.

"Without criticising the picture business, I think the average theater manager feels that he must show certain pictures to compete with success. This may go on, for some time, but the public, in the final analysis, is the critic. There must be some credence placed in the statements of many that audiences are tiring of plays with the problems of sex and the social evil dragged through them."

Mr. Hopwood then stated that, in his opinion, there must eventually come an agreement between producers as regards the high salaries paid stars, declaring they seem to be out of all proportion to the services rendered. He also gave his views of the censorship question.

"I regard it first of all, as un-American. Public opinion is quite powerful. This is true as far as newspapers are concerned, and should be the same towards the motion pictures. You cannot expect patrons to make many return visits to your theaters if the plays you show are disgusting. You quickly get the indication of their sentiments at the box office.

Detroit's Minutes of the Year

Michigan Exhibitors and Exchange Men Have Prospered—State League Has Not Come Up to Expectations, But Hopes for a Better Record of Usefulness in the Year to Come—New Theaters and Improvements Contemplated.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, Mich.—With a New Year staring us in the face it is well at this particular time to look over the "minutes" of the past year. The year 1916 has been a prosperous one for Detroit's exhibitors and exchanges, as well as for exhibitors scattered throughout the state. The class of pictures have been an improvement over previous years, prices have been higher, a better class of men have come into the business, theaters themselves have been materially improved and in other ways there have been improvements, in the handling of theaters and in the various transactions that enter into the conduct of this industry.

Exhibitors' State League.

True, the state association of exhibitors has not prospered as much as it should; but there is no use in crying over spilt milk. We can only take the facts and try to make a better showing in 1917. Every exhibitor realizes the importance of a strong state organization, and especially during 1917, owing to the meetings of the State Legislature.

Just suppose that a number of drastic and unreasonable bills are introduced into the State Legislature. To you, Mr. Individual Exhibitor, if you are not a member of the state organization, what will you do to have those bills rejected? Are you just going to growl about them and take your medicine? You can't stop fanatics from introducing unreasonable and unjust bills into the Legislature, but you can have them "killed" by proper protests, which should be of the co-operative nature. The bill stands a much better chance of going by defeat if the exhibitors in the north, south, east and west sections of Michigan are ORGANIZED.

New and Modern Theaters.

Many new theaters have been erected during 1916, and they have all been of the modern and progressive type, with every attention given to ventilating, heating, fresh air, conveniences, etc., for its patrons. A number of theaters are in course of construction for 1917, and we find that they are being made larger and even finer than those of 1916.

So each year we become a little more progressive—a little more friendly with our competitors—and more thoughtful of the comfort and satety of our theater patrons.

In this particular time we also desire to call attention to the fact that Mr. Jacob Smith, with offices at 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, continues as our Michigan correspondent. He has served this paper and the exhibitors of Michigan well during the past year, and we are assured that he will keep up the good work in the twelve months to come. Exhibitors, exchange managers and anyone interested in the motion picture business, are always welcome at the office of Mr. Smith and he will be only too glad to serve them in any way he can.

Two Splendid New Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—Christmas week was an important one for two Detroit enterprises—the Rialto Theater Company and the Del-The Amusement Company. The Rialto theater opened Dec. 21 at Gratiot and Mt. Elliott avenues and is doing a splendid business. It is Detroit's second amphitheater—it seats about 1,600 and is certainly beautiful. J. C. Ritter, proprietor of the Boulevard theater, is president and general manager, while Arthur Hoganson is house manager and assistant to Mr. Ritter.

The Del-The theater is at Mack and Holcomb avenues, seats 1,200 and is also a beautiful playhouse for motion pictures. Space at this time will not permit full technical descriptions of these theaters, but you can expect to see them soon in the columns of the trade's greatest weekly, The Moving Picture World.

Detroit Business Notes.

Detroit, Mich.—The Enterprise Theater Equipment Company, Detroit, celebrates its first anniversary this month. Ray J. Branch is proprietor and he reports a splendid business. During the year he installed thirty-seven Motiographs, twenty-three Hertner transverters and six Powers machines. He says prospects are great for 1917.

Grant Heth, who is the sales agent in Michigan for Minusa screens, says that for the past thirty days he has been busy installing twenty-six Minusa screens throughout the state. The latest installation was made at the new Del-The Theater, owned by Fred De Lodder.

Bert M. Graham, for the past two years special representative for the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Detroit branch of the Tri-State Film Exchange, agents for Art Drama productions.

"Daughter of the Gods" Opens at the Washington.

Detroit, Mich.—"A Daughter of the Gods" opened Sunday, December 24th, at the Washington theater, Detroit, to tremendous business afternoon and evening. Only two shows are given and prices for the matinees run from 25 cents to one dollar, with 25 cents to $1.50 at night. The seat sale thus far has exceeded expectations, there being a practical sell-out for all performances. The newspaper comments were very favorable towards this picture, most of them claiming it to be the greatest screen production ever brought to Detroit. The public is also showing great interest in the picture and apparently has no objection to the big prices. Liberal space is being used in the newspapers to boost the run, while twenty-four sheets can be seen on billboards in every section of the city. The engagement of "A Daughter of the Gods" is for four weeks. The Washington is now working under its new policy of big productions, two shows daily and big prices.

Clara Kimball Young Here for Xmas.

Detroit, Mich.—Clara Kimball Young spent Christmas in Detroit and we are proud of her for it. Miss Young, accompanied by her secretary, arrived Sunday morning, December 24th, and went to the Hotel Statler, where rooms were reserved in advance for her. In the afternoon and evening she appeared at both performances of "The Foolish Virgin" at the Broadway-Strand theater.

At 6 o'clock a complimentary dinner was tendered her by Harry I. Garson, Mayor Oscar B. Marx, Sheriff Milt Oakman, other city officials, John H. Kunsky, A. J. Gilligham and other leading exhibitors. On Christmas morning she entertained 1,200 kiddies at the Broadway-Strand theater with a motion picture show consisting of comedies, followed by a distribution of presents from a huge Christmas tree which she had placed on the stage. It is estimated that Miss Young spent $1,000 of her own money in this act of charity. At the afternoon and evening performances she again appeared on the stage of the theater and addressed a few remarks to crowded audiences.

Hilliard Theater at Creston, Iowa, Opens

New Picture House Has a Projection Room in Shape of Tiny Brick Cottage on Ground Floor—Two Lobbies—Tables for Refreshments.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Iowa.

CRESTON, Iowa.—The new Hilliard theater, Creston, Iowa, recently opened with a most novel feature as a drawing card. The projection room, in the shape of a tiny brick cottage, is on the ground floor. Fire protection is assured with thirteen-inch walls and a brick chimney to carry off the gases of the booth. Artificial vines and flowers entwining a trellis work, partly cover the walls. The two new Power's 6-B machines are supplied with current from two 50-ampere transverters. Unique operating booths are a hobby of Rosenfield and Samish, the proprietors.

Another feature of the New Hilliard is the two lobbies. The outer one is very ordinary, but the inner is given over to tables for refreshments, with railings dividing the exit and entrance doors. The lobbies are at right angles to the theater proper, as the building is L-shaped. The seating capacity is 750.

The opening night was a great occasion for the people of Creston. Special music and flowers were features.

Interstate Film Corporation.

Des Moines, Iowa.—C. W. Jeffries has opened the Inter-State Film Corporation with offices at 702 Mulberry street, Des Moines, Iowa. Arrangements have been made to handle the Budd Fisher, Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies and "The Marriage Bond," featuring Nat Goodwin for Iowa and Nebraska. Plans are now under way to handle the better class state right features. Mr. Jeffries is well known in the territory, having been associated for the past eight years with the exchanges in Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines.

"Romona" at the Majestic.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Majestic theater on Eighth street reopened the day before Christmas with the Clune production of "Romona." The house was attractively decorated with Indian blankets, etc., the lobby was made up to represent the front of the old missions, and the ushers were dressed as Mexicans. The new management secured a company of five Australians especially for the engagement to furnish the music, together with the pipe organ. Business was good all week. Next week the Majestic will show "Civilization" for at least two weeks, to be followed by Nazimova in "War Brides."

Family Theater Remodeled.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Family theater belonging to J. Miloslowsky, owner of the Palace, has been remodeled on the inside, beautiful with a canopy, and has a new manager, H. D. Grove, formerly the manager of the Casino theater in Davenport.

Three Houses Now Dark.

Des Moines, Ia.—Three theaters in this city closed their doors the past week or so. The Elite, a big house on the East Side, recently changed management and went through a course of renovation, but a few weeks after the change the doors were closed. Two suburban houses, the Alamo on Sixth avenue, and the Rex on Twentieth and Clark, have closed up. Des Moines fans seem to prefer taking the car down town to a short walk to the local suburban houses.

Local Business Notes.

Des Moines, Ia.—"The Girl From 'Frisco" serial is going big here. For the first time in the history of serials in this city "The Girl From Frisco" has been booked second run in the downtown district, and the General Film exchange manager says that they only lack one of running the serial in half of the suburban houses. The Royal theater on Eighth and Locust is somewhere about the seventeenth episode and business increasing every week, while the Family will start its second run in the near future.

Des Moines, Ia.—The newly formed Interstate Film Corporation gave a private showing of their first feature for distribution in Iowa and Nebraska at the Casino theater last Sunday morning. It was Nat Goodwin in "The Marriage Bond."

Iowa Theater Notes.

Riverside, Ia.—Yaro Willinger has purchased the Subway theater of Riverside from A. A. Hahn.

Osceola, Ia.—The Campbell Brothers' Amusement Company, which owns a motion picture theater, a skating rink, etc., in Memphis, Mo., has secured a six-year lease on the Osceola opera house, where it will show features, booked independently, and the General films. One of the brothers visited Des Moines during the holidays while their road show was showing in Mason Cty.

Corydon, Ia.—It is reported that Luggar & Patterson have sold the Corydon opera house.

Corning, Ia.—B. G. Buffington recently sold the Lyric theater and the opera house of this city to C. M. Perrigan,

Guthrie Center, Ia.—Powd McLuen of the McLuen theater in Guthrie Center, originated a clever advertising scheme to make the beginning of his serial, "The Iron Claw," well known. A few days before Xmas he sent out a package to all of his patrons labeled "Do not open until Xmas Day." Of course everybody opened the package at once, and inside of many wrappings they found an invitation and a cordial holiday greeting. The invitation was a ticket of free admission to the opening episode of "The Iron Claw" on Tuesday, the 26th. The ticket admitted two, but no children, and the house was jammed all evening. McLuen evidently has found the Pathe serials a paying proposition, since the Pathe exchange inform us that he is already signed for "The Shielding Shadow."

Since the organization of the Brazil theater company, which took over nearly all the motion picture shows in the city, the Colonial has been seldom used.

C. L. Peavey, former manager of the Pittsburgh Paramount and Detroit Artcraft offices, assumed the management of the Paramount exchange. C. J. Ver Halen will remain in the capacity of publicity manager of the exchange. The Barnetts have not announced any plans for the future, but will leave for New York, their former home, Dec. 28.

The wholesale cigar company on the first floor of the film exchange building did a big business last week owing to the fact that several exchange managers presented exhibitors and friends with "inflammable and inhalable" gifts with bands around them.

Minneapolis Filmdom News of Holiday Week

The Big Surprise Was the Pathe and International Deal—Business Brisk Due to Fair Weather—Big Showing Made by "The Crisis" and Other Hits.

By John L. Johnston, 604 Film Exchange Building Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Surprise has followed surprise here for the last few weeks, but Pathe's taking over of the Hearst enterprise was the big thing. Hugh C. Andress resigned as manager of the Hearst International Exchange, 606 Produce Exchange building, Dec. 30, and Mr. Felkin of Chicago was sent here to take his place. Mr. Felkin arrived in time to witness Andress' private showing of "Patria" at the New Grand, Minneapolis, and get acquainted with several exhibitors, when word came from New York that, beginning January 1, the Pathe exchange would handle the International's business. Mr. Felkin returned immediately to Chicago and has announced his intention to enter another field. Mr. Andress has not made known his plans for the future. Manager Henry E. Friedman of the Pathe exchange, although busily engaged in boosting Pathe productions, expressed himself as delighted with the merger with the International and he has begun preparations for exploiting the new films. Mr. Andress' showing of "Patria" attracted a good crowd of exhibitors from the Twin Cities and the film won much favorable comment. Mr. Andress has represented the International here since May, when he began an aggressive campaign on "The Mysteries of Myra." Mr. Andress handled the work of the office alone and deserves special credit for the work he has done for the Hearst interests.

Holiday Business Good.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Fair weather during holiday week did much to bring big business to the downtown theaters of both Minneapolis and St. Paul. In Minneapolis "The Black Butterfly" and "Gamble in Souls" drew good houses at the Strand, "Snow White" proved an excellent drawing card at the New Garrick, while "The Crisis" and "Purity" did a good business at the Lyric and Metropolitan respectively. At the St. Paul Strand "The Sunbeam" and "Black Butterfly" drew well. Mary Miles Minter in "Faith" attracted good houses to the Blue Mouse. "A Woman Alone," "The Hands of the Enemy" and "The Road to Love" did well at Starland, Alhambra and New Majestic respectively.

Ormi Hawley Here in Person.

St. Paul, Minn.—Ormi Hawley will appear in person at the Blue Mouse here shortly, when "Race Suicide," in which she is featured, is run. Manager O. A. Rowe has also bid for "The Libertine."

"Crisis" and Other Big Features Going Strong.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The past week's calendar has been completely smothered by big events in the film world hereabouts. "The Crisis" opened at The Lyric, the Paramount exchange was sold, "Purity" began a two weeks' run at the Metropolitan, Margueite Clark in "Snow White" was offered at the New Garrick at increased prices, Cristmas and 20 below zero weather followed by snow and rain all had their place on the program.

"The Crisis" was shown to about a thousand invited guests at The Lyric on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and opened at the theater Sunday, Dec. 24, to S. R. O. business at a dollar top. Despite some of the stiffest opposition Minneapolis has seen in many months the big Selig feature, controlled by Elliott and Sherman of Minneapolis, continued to draw big houses at each performance during the opening week. A thirty-piece orchestra conducted by George Koehler, who wrote the special musical scores for the feature, adds to its attractiveness and the picture is being shown in a completely re-decorated theater. Manager Frank A. McInerny of The Lyric sought eight of the prettiest girls in Minneapolis for ushers for "The Crisis." E. A. Brehaney is the manager of the "Crisis" company, F. A. McInerny, house manager; John Lewis and R. M. Volkmar, operators; Joseph Kugler, agent and the ushers are: Misses M. Stay, Ruth LeBeaux, Denice, Lorain Schlagel, Clara Mackaben, Ilien, Hazel Moe and Mrs. Webb, C. J. Bulliet is publicity manager.

H. A. Sherman, president of the Sherman-Elliott Co., has announced that a Western "Crisis" company is being organized to open a run at Omaha late in January. Mr. Sherman has also stated that the opening of the feature in Boston has been postponed for a short time. W. N. Selig attended the opening of the feature here as did Governor Burnquist of Minnesota, his staff and city officials.

Strand Signs Contracts for Big Films.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The signing of contracts for the Clara Kimball Young, Mary Pickford and other feature releases, in addition to Triangle and Metro service, has brought the Minneapolis Strand theater into the line of the best theaters in the west. The Strand, owned by the Saxe Brothers of Milwaukee, and managed by James A. Keough, has climbed the ladder of popularity in Minneapolis in leaps and bounds, the varied program, the attractiveness of the theater, special music and lavish publicity bringing about success. The Strand, located on Seventh street, between Nicollet and Hennepin, seats a few more than 1,300 persons comfortably and displays pictures from 11 A. M. until 11 P. M. The Strand put out 10,000 copies of a large weekly newspaper, edited by C. G. Branham.

Distribution of Selznick Pictures.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Before returning to New York Ben S. Cohen, personal representative of Lewis J. Selznick, announced that in the future all Selznick products will be distributed throughout this territory by Messrs. Harry Rathner and Myron Conhaim, managers of the Unity and Supreme exchanges, Film Exchange building.

Emily Stevens at Two Houses.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Emily Stevens, Metro star, had the pleasure of playing to enthusiastic audiences at two different theaters in two different types of plays two weeks ago. "In the flesh" Miss Stevens was at the Metropolitan and "in the film" she appeared at the Strand in "The Wager." By arrangement of the WORLD correspondent Miss Stevens attended a performance of the latter and was greeted by a capacity house of admirers. It was the first time Miss Stevens had seen "The Wager" and she was greatly interested. Miss Stevens saw the film from the balcony, parquet and projection room, where the various pieces of equipment were explained by Publicity Manager Branham and Operator Sloan. Later in the week Miss Stevens returned to the Strand to see Mae Marsh in "The Wharf Rat" and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Matrimaniac."

From the Exchanges.

Mendel Gottlieb, manager of the Favorite Film Corporation, has secured state rights on "The Libertine." C. G. Branham is handling the publicity campaign on the feature.

Ben Rosenberg has announced that he has secured rights for showing "Around the World in Eighty Days" for the E. L. K. Film Company.

Guy Crandall has opened an exchange at 322 McKnight building and has among other features "Home Sweet Home," a Griffith film.

Globe on Canal Street Opens

New Orleans' New Fichtenberg House a Thing of Beauty—Fireproof and Perfectly Appointed—Occupies One of the Most Valuable Sites on Canal Street—No Steps to Balcony—Premier Show.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal street, New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—The opening of the new Globe theater on Canal street has been the event of motion picture history here so far this season. The Globe is a Herman Fichtenberg enterprise and a very meritorious one at that. It would be a hard matter to find a more beautiful and more perfectly appointed motion picture house anywhere, the only regret being that the seating capacity is smaller than a theater of such magnificent finishings should have. In the construction of the building nothing that would add to its attractiveness and the convenience of the patrons was omitted. It occupies one of the most valuable lots on Canal street and is in the center of the business district. It is absolutely fireproof, being constructed of steel and concrete throughout. It is finished in the most tasteful manner.

The walls and ceilings are of caenstone finish, made soft and restful by a flood of subdued light; the corridors are cork floored and all of the metal trimmings are of Benedict nickel or German silver, and there is an air of simple elegance in every nook and corner of the building. Telephone booths, ladies and gentlemen's rest rooms are among the minor provisions for the patrons. A mammoth Austin organ and a baby grand piano are provided for the musical accompaniment of the feature pictures, and these instruments are presided over by Professors Seels and Huffman, both musicians of note. A novelty in the seating arrangement is that no stairs are required to gain access to the balcony. Seats in that section are reached by means of an easy incline which leads through the loges and constitutes, practically a part of the main floor. In every particular, novelty, completeness and richness of furnishings and appointments dominate the theater.

Upon the occasion of the formal opening of the house with the presentation of "The Common Law" Clara Kimball Young's first Selznick-Picture release, a veritable bower of the richest blooms was provided for the lobby in the floral offerings of the friends of Mr. Fitchenberg. Many of the designs were most elaborate, and they were so great in number that they overflowed to every nook and corner of the available space in the theater.

Clara Kimball Young Helps Charity.

New Orleans, La.—Clara Kimball Young with a company of players, under the direction of Charles Giblyn, has just completed taking a series of scenes to be made a part of a forthcoming release on the Selznick program. This was Miss Young's first visit to New Orleans, and she is delighted with the photographic possibilities of the city and with the very cordial recepton whch she was accorded. Every social distinction which she found it possible to accept was provided for her and she had a very busy time between the enjoyment of southern hospitality and the duty of picture making. She steadfastly declined to appear in a public manner in any theater in which her pictures were being shown, much to the regret of the managers. However, she entered with delight into a project to aid in procuring Christmas presents for the poor children of the city. She manifested interest in the operation of the annual doll and toy fund project which is an institution in New Orleans, and she wanted to help. Under the direction of the photoplay editor of the Times-Picayune, Miss Young appeared with some of the prominent ladies of the city on Canal street amid a shower of coins in the automobile in which she was riding. Thousands of people thronged the streets and it required the constant efforts of a squad of police to clear the way for the machine. A very substantial addition was made to the public fund by Miss Young's effort and many a poor little fellow had her to thank for a merry Christmas.

D. L. Cornelius to Be Here Permanently.

New Orleans, La.—D. L. Cornelius, managing director for the Saenger Amusement Company, has been here making arrangements for taking up his residence in New Orleans. He expects to be settled here with his family not later than Jan. 15, and after that time he will direct his chief efforts to the management of the new Strand theater which is slated for opening on Feb. 15. The new Strand is to be quite the most pretentious theater that has yet been opened in the south and everything that goes with the showing of all that is best in photoplays in the best possible manner is to be provided.

Manager Stephens' Anniversary.

New Orleans, La.—On last Saturday S. T. Stephens rounded out his first year as manager of the local Mutual Film exchange and he was made the guest of honor at a dinner in a little quaint Italian restaurant where every effort is directed toward food and not toward sumptuous furnishings. About the table were the heads of all the departments in the Mutual exchange, and two or three of the close business friends of Manager Stephens. The sumptuous feast was thoroughly enjoyed by every one present. The after dinner hour was spent in felicitations.

S. T. Stephens.

Under Manager Stephens's direction the local Mutual exchange has been placed in an enviable position in the motion picture field here. Not only has the business of the office been steadily and largely increased, but the strongest sort of a working organization has been built up by Mr. Stephens. He has the happy faculty of cementing his organization into one big and contented family, with the result that any of his men would fight for "Steve" before they would fight for themselves. He is the oldest exchange manager in point of service in the city and he has surrounded himself with some of the best men in the business. It is said that out of the seventy-five theaters now operating in the city the Mutual has accounts with sixty-eight of them, and the country business shows about the same average. If it falls off any, Al Dunning, the nestor of the road men in this territory, is sent out.

Exhibitor Bloomsteil Extends.

Donaldsonville, La.—William Bloomsteil of this city will open motion picture theaters in Houma and Thibadeaux and conduct them in conjunction with his local theater. Bookings have already been made for the new houses.

Buys Lomo Theater.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—Vernon Baird has purchased the Lomo theater here and has already improved the service by adopting a program of feature productions for each night in the week.

Parent Co. Takes Over Local World Film.

New Orleans, La.—An important change in the motion picture field here was the taking over of the New Orleans exchange of the World Film by the parent company last week and the auditor for the company has just completed his examination of the books. The local World exchange has been for the past several months under the control of the Southern World Film Corporation, which was an affiliation of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises of Atlanta, Ga. Mrs. Anna H. Sessions was made manager of the exchange when the transfer was made, and she proceeded to make the office show such a marked increase in receipts and decrease in operating expenses that the World officials decided to take advantage of a provision in the lease and terminate the relations with the Southern World Film Company, taking over the business for themselves. Mrs. Sessions and her present force of employes will continue to administer the affairs of the local World exchange.

Auslet-Woodward Theater Corporation.

Booneville, Miss.—The Auslet-Woodward Theater Corporation has been formed with Jack Auslet as president and general manager, C. C. Woodward secretary-treasurer. Its main office is at Booneville, Miss. This firm has taken over the Princess theater at Booneville, Miss., and the Lyric at Louisville, Miss. They are booking the operat house at Baldwin and contemplate leasing several other theaters in Mississippi and to build one at New Albany and Pontotoc. Mr. Auslet is an old experienced showman and has had considerable experience in the motion picture business both as manager of theaters and handling of feature pictures and working for exchanges. This firm reports excellent business since they have inaugurated a feature every day at their houses. Paramount, Pathe, Mutual, World, and special pictures are shown in their houses, also Fox productions.

J. I. Dodson, Leading Salesman.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. I. Dodson was the lucky man whose hard work won him the prize for the largest increase in business in the last four weeks of the year, in the Universal territory under the direction of R. C. Cropper, at Kansas City. Mr. Cropper's district includes Kansas City, St. Joseph, Omaha, Oklahoma City, Sioux Falls, Cairo, Fort Smith and Wichita exchanges.

L. H. Chandler with "U."

Kansas City, Mo.—L. H. Chandler is now traveling for the Universal out of Kansas City. Mr. Chandler was formerly with the Federal Film Company there.

Edward E. Hiller Goes on Road.

Kansas City, Mo.—Edward E. Hiller, for the past two years booker at the Pathe exchange, Kansas City, Mo., starts on the road early this year, with Southern Missouri and Central Kansas territory. Mr. Hiller has received an ideal training for a road position. He for years traveled for a road show; then he managed the Varsity moving picture theater at Lawrence, Kan., and then went into the Pathe office. He knows all the exhibitors in his new territory; and he is personally acquainted with most of them, having sold films to them in the Pathe office.

Local Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. B. Gruwell has been transferred to the Chicago office of K-E-S-E, after two years on the road from Kansas City territory.

The Metro exchange at Kansas City has added 50 per cent. to its office quarters, because of increasing business.

Local International's Head.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. S. Applegate, the manager of the new International exchange recently established in Kansas City, has had a short, but successful career in the motion picture game. Until a year ago he was in the automobile business, having traveled for several companies from the factories and from various branch houses over the country. One day about a year ago, his friend M. Sheridan, of the Pathe office at Denver, asked him why he did not go into the motion picture business, and he decided to try it. He obtained a position as traveler with the Pathe office at Denver, and was on the road for five months, and was then given the management of the office. In the early fall of this year, however, he was offered the management of the new International office which was to be opened in Kansas City, the company having decided that the St. Louis office was too far away to give quick service to the great Southwest. Mr. Applegate accepted the position and opened the new house in Kansas City the first of November.

J. S. Applegate.

One of the ideas which Mr. Applegate has used very successfully in the management of the office, is his careful selection of the traveling salesmen and watchful interest over their efforts on the road. Each salesman is given special attention and help in his territory, and is expected to make a good showing. Mr. Applegate gives as much of his personal attention as possible to the weekly results of each salesman's trip, and he knows just what each is doing. In this way, when the company some day asks him for a man to put in charge of a new office, he is in a position to say just who is the man best qualified for such a place.

The new branch is opening in fine shape, the new serial "Patria" receiving a number of bookings before it was even released. The other features which the company has released are going in fine shape, and are being booked in the best houses in the territory.

Mr. Applegate weighs two hundred fifty pounds in his stocking feet, and says he is not ashamed of it.

Still More Rigid Censorship Likely

In Kansas City, Result of Emotional Explosion Over Sensational Films and Posters May Be a Sterner Supervision of Pictures, Lobby Displays and Advertisements—Bishop Interested—Situation in State.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The rigid censorship of all pictures to be shown in Kansas City by the censor board, the intrusion of various civic bodies into the matter of watching for improper pictures, the enlistment of police powers to control and regulate lobby displays, stricter supervision and control of newspaper and other advertisements—these are some of the immediate results likely to follow the recent "explosion" with reference to censorship in Kansas City. And now comes another, semi-official, but quite as serious.

Bishop Lillis Issues a Circular.

Two weeks ago Bishop Lillis, the head of the Catholic church in this district, delivered a sermon on the moving picture show, in which he deprecated the tendency on the part of some exhibitors to present pictures that appeal to degraded tastes, and that give too close familiarity with crime. Apparently this sermon was a warning, and a forerunner of possible drastic suggestions. For last week the bishop issued a circular, in which he called upon Catholics to use all their influence against exhibitors of improper pictures, particularly against shows that were advertised as for adults only. One paragraph of the circular is especially significant. It follows:

"We are convinced that city officials, if supported by public opinion and sympathy, will cheerfully assist in eliminating all films of debasing character by influencing legislation and by enacting laws that will subject these shows to stricter supervision and to heavy fines in case of violation by the ones who at present feel themselves above the law and who brook no interference from outraged society. And we are equally convinced that if parents, Catholic organizations and church societies realized their rights and were mindful of their obligations the photoplays that now are questionable and sources of evil, would soon become the agencies of incalculable good. The most effective protest that the people can make against offensive and indecent picture shows is their refusal to attend them."

The Situation in the State.

Here is the situation: First, some of the church bodies are insisting on an extension of the censorship control, the enforcement and utilization of a section of the old law providing for organization of local censorship bodies to co-operate with the state censorship board. Second, many educational bodies are urging that some new basis of control of improper pictures be discovered and established. Third, the federation of women's clubs is urging that the censorship be taken away from the department of public instruction and put in the hands of an unofficial body—a committee made up of citizens, from whose decisions appeals can be made only to the courts. Fourth—and here is the crucial point—most of the legislators have a more or less well-developed idea that the present censorship law, in form and in practice, is unjust, and fails of its purpose.

It is obvious that there is a big chance to get action by the Kansas legislature that will remove a great deal of the obnoxious character of the present law—and perhaps to remove the law altogether.

"Family Night" Shows.

Here is anotner phase of the subject. Sudden and widespread interest is being taken in the experiment in Kansas City, Kan., and in Kansas City, Mo., of providing special programs for "family night" at the neighborhood theaters. The Parent-Teachers' associations, perhaps the most powerful organization in the two states, when it gets started on a project, has conceived the notion of having special programs agreed upon for one or two nights a week, to which the children shall be urged to come. These programs are to be approved, on a plan arranged in each instance, by the exhibitors and committees of the associations. Where such arrangements have been made, the exhibitors have not been disturbed by the censorship with reference to their other programs—indeed, the close touch that the plan gives with the parents and teachers, seems to enable the exhibitor to provide programs for all nights that are popular and acceptable. Such censorship, or co-operation in selection of programs, has not proved irksome.

This plan is being urged upon communities in the two states by the state Parent-Teacher organizations; and it is notable that it seems to disregard censorship of shows for other than the family-night occasions.

In Missouri, the proposal of the newly elected governor to impose a tax on moving picture theaters has been rejected by the governor's advisory commission.

Must Have Been One of Bowles' Ideas.

Kansas City, Mo.—Thirteen salesmen and heads of departments of the Kansas City Universal office were guests of R. C. Cropper, district manager, at the theater, and a New Year's party at the Edwards Cafe. The entertainment features culminated in the mysterious and sensational appearance of a girl in a purple mask, descending a stairway at the critical part of the program, a purple spotlight playing upon her. The "Purple Mask" had been released only a few days previously. The fact that the Universal bunch was dining in the large room where hundreds of other people were enjoying their New Year's celebration, gave the scene particular significance.

Harry Burton's New Idea.

Brookfield, Mo.—Harry Burton has been "cashing in" with a new idea, for which he has the co-operation of the Pathe exchange at Kansas City. This is the showing of slides bearing the pictures of stars in coming attractions, but without the identifying names of these stars. Mr. Burton offers prizes to the persons who can guess the names of the stars. The picture slides are shown two weeks or more before the film is to be run, and before any of the "paper" is set up. The prizes are awarded at the opening night of the program in which the stars appear.

Missouri and Kansas Theater Changes.

Braymer, Mo.—Harry Pill has bought the Braymer opera house, now a moving picture theater, from Clifton Barcus.

Cowgill, Mo.—F. A. Strawhackett has bought the Nelson property here; it consists of a handsome building, which houses the electric light plant, the Cowgill Garage, and the moving picture theater, and all these enterprises will now be operated by Mr. Strawhackett.

Cameron, Mo.—Mr. Jarboe, formerly of Carrollton, Mo., has opened his new $10,000 moving picture show house here.

Bucklin, Mo.—Wiggin & Burke have bought the Iris tneater from J. F. Hammil.

Boonville, Mo.—W. S. Merrill has bought the Stevens opera house, and is managing it.

Selden, Kan.—J. A. Phillips has opened a new show here; he has shows now at Oakley and Colby, and is the professor in the high school at Colby.

Topeka, Kan.—J. W. Wristen has bought the Iris from H. S. Montgomery.

Snow Hits Mountain Business

Rocky Mountain Film Distribution Snowed Under—Two Weeks Storm Blocks All Lines and Theaters Can Get No New Films—Reserve Programs at a Premium —Serials Have Been Refused to Inaccessible Places.

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Colo.

DENVER, Colo.—An almost uninterrupted snowstorm of two weeks' duration, interspersed and followed by a protracted spell of zero weather, has wrought havoc with the film industry in the Rocky Mountain region. Film service is demoralized to an extent never before experienced in this district.

Even at best the task of handling of films in this district is fraught with hazards which the exchange managers and exhibitors only can realize. Some idea of the difficulties encountered by them can be had, however, when it is known that three days and nights are required to transport films one way to some of the more distant points in the state. And this with conditions favorable.

Now that mountain passes are blockaded by great snow drifts and train service either wholly suspended or badly crippled, it is next to impossible to run a film exchange or operate a theater.

There is hardly an exchange in Denver that has not at least one feature tied up back of a snow blockade, and some ten or a dozen pictures are temporarily out of commission.

Advance bookings have been knocked into a cocked hat and the forces of the various exchanges are working night and day trying to bring order out of chaos. Theaters, big and little have been hit by the unprecedented condition, and many houses in the mountain towns have been able to keep open only by the fact that they had reserve programs on hand before the storm began. Some of these theaters change programs daily, but now are running one program until another can reach them, whether it is one day or a week.

The vaults of local exchanges, which ordinarily contain hundreds of reserve reels, are emptied through the necessity of filling in where programs have either failed to reach their destination or have been held up on the return trip. Even should the weather moderate to such an extent that regular train schedules can be resumed, it is estimated that several weeks will be required in which to straighten out the tangled mass.

A saving feature of the present difficulty is the fact that few serials have been affected by the transportation tie-up. Taking warning from their experience of last winter, when different episodes of several serials were held up back of a snow blockade in the Durango district, thus spoiling the sequence of the screen story being run in scores of other houses, the exchange managers this year refused to book serials in the inaccessible regions.

To add to their other difficulties the exhibitors throughout the state, including Denver and the other large cities, have had a very poor holiday season. A dull spell is not unexpected just prior to Christmas, but this year it reached unprecedented proportions and conditions have not since improved. Unfavorable weather undoubtedly is the cause of the slump, and when the temperature moderates it is expected that business will return to normal.

Denver Screen Club Ball February Third

Club Sets New Date—Mary Miles Minter, Anita Stewart and Wallace Reid Expected —Clara Kimball Young Hoped For.

Denver, Col.—The weekly luncheon and meeting of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, held during the holidays, was the largest and most enthusiastic in the history of the organization. Every exchange manager and most of his assistants and nearly all of the local exhibitors, in addition to a number of out-of-town visitors, were present.

The date of the big Screen Club ball, which has been set on numerous occasions and then changed for one reason or another was definitely fixed for Feb. 3. Mary Miles Minter, Anita Stewart and Wallace Reid will be the guests of honor. All these stars have promised to come to Denver to participate in the festivities. Others may be added to the list later on.

It is expected that Clara Kimball Young and her company of players will be here for the purpose of staging scenes for "The Easiest Way," in which case they also will be invited to attend. Wires have been sent to the Selznick management seeking information concerning the date of the arrival of the company, but as yet no response has been received, and, therefore, it is indefinite as to whether or not Miss Young and her company will participate.

Harry Noland and H. E. Huffman, president and secretary, respectively, of the Screen Club, desire, through the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, to invite any and all moving picture people who happen to be in this vicinity on or about Feb. 3 to stop over in Denver and be the guests of the club at the grand ball. Any who can avail themselves of the invitation are requested to wire or write either of these officers so that arrangements can be made for accommodations and for their entertainment while in the city.

J. Albert Hall, who played the part of the police captain in "The Yellow Menace," was among the guests at the Screen Club luncheon. He is appearing in a vaudeville sketch at the Orpheum in Denver. He entertained the members with stories of his experiences while performing for motion pictures and of studio life in general.

James Thompson of the Majestic theater of Grand Junction and A. B. Anderson, a Pueblo exhibitor, were among the other out-of-town guests who made short speeches.

Swanson-Noland Theater Newspaper a Hit

In Grand Junction, Colo., the Movie Fan, a Newspaper Boosting Majestic Theater Attractions Becomes Leading Local Weekly.

Denver, Colo.—For a theater to print a newspaper as a medium to advertise its attractions is not a new enterprise. But for such a publication to grow to the proportions that it is the leading weekly in a town of 15,000, with the demand for advertising space so great that scarcely enough room is left to publish the moving picture news, for which it is gotten out, is a condition quite unusual.

Such, however, is the case in Grand Junction, Colo., where the Swanson-Noland Company operates the Majestic theater, one of a string of moving picture houses in this region, and in addition publishes a weekly called The Movie Fan. The Movie Fan was gotten out originally to exploit the attractions at the Majestic, and advertising was solicited to help defray the expenses of this kind of publicity. Out of the venture has developed a paying newspaper proposition.

Each week the paper furnishes new evidence of the enterprise of its owners and James Thompson the local manager. The latest plan to be staged by the theater through its weekly is a contest among school children whereby every pupil of the elementary grades who attains an average of 80 per cent in his studies will be admitted free to especially arranged matinees at which children's pictures are shown.

The first of these matinees was staged Jan. 6 and another Jan. 10. June Caprice in "The Ragged Princess" was the attraction at the first, and Baby Marie Osborn in "Sunshine and Shadows" was shown at the second matinee.

The Majestic management could not hope for financial return through this enterprise because the performances were special and no one could buy his way in. The theater's gain is more than a financial one. It has won the friendship of the children, their parents and their teachers, and has helped to popularize The Movie Fan.

Local Fox Office in First Place.

Denver, Colo.—While not boastful, the Fox organization in Denver is plainly proud of its achievement in capturing first prize in the nationwide "Business Getting Contest" recently staged among the exchanges of the Fox Film Corporation in the United States.

When it is considered that the film rental game in the Denver territory has drawbacks that are uncommon to any other territory in the country, the local Fox office is deserving of great credit for their victory over every Fox exchange in America. The indefatigable work of Manager A. W. Eden was largely responsible for bringing the prize to Denver, but he is reluctant to accept the credit, and says that it was the assistance given him by his corps of aides that did the work. And to prove that his statement was not idle chatter he divided the cash prize among his office force when the money arrived last week.

Denver, Colo.—Samuel L. Baxter, veteran moving picture exhibitor, owner of the Isis theater, has won out in the competition among local theater owners for the privilege of the first showing in Denver of "A Daughter of the Gods." Mr. Baxter has booked the big Fox feature for a fifteen-day run. Admission prices will range from 25 cents to one dollar.

E. H. Emmick Goes to Los Angeles.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. H. Emmick, president and general manager of the Peerless Film service, has gone to Los Angeles and plans to make his headquarters there, leaving the San Francisco office in charge of H. Salmson. He has arranged to handle all of the De Luxe Lasky Film Corporation's productions in Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico, and will enlarge his distributing facilities. Mr. Salmson returned recently from Los Angeles delighted with the Christie comedies he saw and has since succeeded in booking these over the entire Turner & Dahnken circuit.

Supply Man Back from Seattle.

San Francisco, Cal.—Walter L. Stern, who has been at the Seattle office of G. A. Metcalfe for several months, has returned to the home office, arriving just before Christmas. A good business is being done despite the reports of exhibitors of a light holiday trade.

Eureka, Cal.—The recent spectacular wreck of the U. S. Submarine H 3 on the beach near Eureka, Cal., brought cameramen from San Francisco to the scene in a hurry, the trip to the northern city having been made by Bertin E. Moisant, of the Mutual Weekly; L. C. Hutt, of the Pathe News; E. Carl Wallen, of the Hearst International, and Ralph R. Earle, who has been making scenic pictures for Pathe of late. The accompanying picture shows the quartette of crank grinders on the beach with a newspaper photographer, the submarine showing plainly in the breakers in the background, while in the distance can be seen the vessels waiting for an opportunity of assisting the disabled diver.

Film Shippers Should Take Care

In San Francisco Inspectors of United States Bureau of Explosives and the Transportation Companies Investigating Packing Cases—Legislature Meets Soon—It is Wiser to Be Careful in Film Transportation.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Trouble is in store for the shippers of films who insist on sending out this article packed in cases that are badly battered or worn or insecurely fastened. Inspectors of the United States Bureau of Explosives and of transportation companies have been quietly investigating the condition of shipments, and recently held up twenty cases at the Ferry depot. Most of these cases were fastened with pieces of rope, or with straps of webbing that were badly worn. Members of the Film Exchange Board of Trade are exercising care in making shipments, and it is stated that most of the films that have been held up are the property of outside exchanges to whose attention the need of extreme care has not been brought.

This matter is of particular importance at the present time, as the State Legislature meets within a few days and it is desirable that no regulations be passed to further hamper the shipment of moving picture film or the carrying of the same as hand baggage. The agreement made last spring between this organization of film exchange men and transportation companies is very satisfactory to film exchange interests, and it is hoped that it can be continued unchanged. In order to maintain this agreement effectively it is particularly desirable that the membership of the Board of Trade be enlarged to include all of the important shippers and the indications are that this will be accomplished very shortly.

Local Vitagraph to Move.

San Francisco, Cal.—The local Vitagraph exchange, for the past two years located at 986 Market street, where the entire second floor is occupied, will move about the middle of January to the fifth floor of the Musical building at 985 Market street. The new quarters will be fitted up in splendid shape and will contain more than double the amount of floor space now being occupied. A large exhibiting room will be a feature of the exchange and reviews will be given when desired by exhibitors. The building to which the Vitagraph exchange will move is admirably adapted for film exchange purposes, being of fireproof construction, with a wide entrance and both freight and passenger elevators.

T. L. Haines, Jr., Makes a Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—T. L. Haines, Jr., of the local branch of the Atlas Educational Film Company, recently made a trip to Los Angeles and vicinity in the interests of the projection machine and camera business of this firm, which has become quite large.

New Exchange for Film Row.

San Francisco, Cal.—The De Luxe Lasky Film Corporation, which is located at the present time in the Humboldt Bank building on Market street, is to remove to 107 Golden Gate avenue about the first of February, to the quarters now being occupied by the Fox Film. Arrangements have been made by E. H. Emmick of San Francisco and Los Angeles to handle its features in the Los Angeles field, and offices will be opened in the Los Angeles Investment building, but later it is planned to secure a location on Olive street. Ralph Clark, for a long time manager of the local office of the World Film, but more recently with the California M. P. Corporation, has been appointed special traveling representative out of the San Francisco office and is making his first road trip. The first release, "The Conquest of Canaan," has been booked solid to the end of March, as has also been the "Witching Hour."

Artcraft Takes More Room.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Artcraft Pictures Corporation has found it necessary to take over another office in the Pacific building in view of the activities in connection with the George M. Cohan productions. The second Mary Pickford release is expected here shortly and a review for exhibitors will be given as soon as it is received. Western Division Manager Arthur S. Kane has been here for some time, but will leave shortly to visit the branches at Salt Lake and Denver. J. J. Patridge is now covering Arizona in the interests of this concern, and the Northern California territory is being covered by a recently acquired addition to the force, N. F. Haas.

New Fillmore Theater to Be Enlarged.

San Francisco, Cal.—The New Fillmore theater of Kahn & Greenfield, although in use for about two years only, has proved too small and arrangements have been concluded for enlarging it to a capacity of about 2,000.

Irving Lesser Spends Holidays in Home City.

San Francisco, Cal.—Irving Lesser, for several months manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., spent the Christmas and New Year holidays here, and during his stay his brother, Sol L. Lesser, made a hurried business trip to the southern city.

Fire Inspectors Visit Operating Booths.

San Francisco, Cal.—Inspectors for the Fire department have been making the rounds of the moving picture houses of late and a number of operators have been ordered to remove fire extinguishers from places near the projection machines to positions outside the booths. They claim that in the event of fire operators would not be able to reach the extinguishers by the machines, but that were these hung just outside the door they are always available.

Portland's New Year's Prospect

A Visit to Some of the Suburban Exhibitors—Recent Manufacturing Plants Are Expected to Help Business—Methods of Film Distributors Are Condemned—Desire for the Co-operation of the Exchanges.

Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—About the first of each year it's customary to go around and get the views of exhibitors on the business they expect to do during the next twelve months and to listen generally to rhapsodies of optimism. So the writer set forth the other evening and propounded to a few exhibitors the question: "What is the prospect for 1917?" and each made answer as herein stated.

George Maple, who manages the Ideal at 24th and Thurman, for the Ideal Amusement Company, said: "Tell the Easterners, particularly the film distributers and producers, the truth about the situation in Portland. There has been too much boosting, with the result that those who fix the prices on films have put the cost 'way up, and exchanges have assumed a 'take it or leave it' attitude that is hurting the business in the Rose City. Let me say the prospect for 1917 depends a great deal upon the manufacturers and exchanges, and if these people maintain their present attitude, the prospect is not promising. The exchange is too far from the exhibitor. The manager sits in Seattle or San Francisco and fixes the price, and if the exhibitor complains of poor business, he makes no attempt to investigate the trouble or suggest a remedy. The exchange makes it a point to stay away from a complaining exhibitor until he finally cancells."

Other exhibitors expressed the same views as Mr. Maple on that point.

The fact is that during the past year moving picture men in this territory have had a hard row to hoe and prosperity that has come to the West in mercantile lines has apparently had little good effect on the exhibitor. However, Portland theater men are optimistic. With the millions of dollars now being invested here by ship-building concerns and thousands of men being employed in them, Portland has a most wonderful year ahead of it. Most of the exhibitors say the money is in the town and the only question is: "Will the manufacturers turn out the film for which the patron wants to pay his good money to see, and will the exchange act reasonable in its distribution?

The Victoria Dons Holiday Garb.

J. B. Washtock had his theater, the Victoria, all warmed up and a comfortable crowd waiting for the opening when the writer called. He said the shipbuilding industry had brought many new families to his district and he anticipated a much bigger 1917 business than that of the year just passed. Mr. Washtock has fixed his house up in style, with cretonne lamp shades and curtains, and has made the foyer and lobby a bower of evergreens for the holiday week.

Graeper Says Prospect Is Good.

W. A. Graeper, of the Union Avenue, had a good crowd for the cold snowy evening and was showing a dandy program, featuring "The Parson of Panamint." Mr. Graeper expressed his belief that the coming of the many new industries to Portland would undoubtedly make 1917 a good year.

Tivoli Has a Contest.

The Tivoli was doing nicely notwithstanding that most of the youngsters in Albina were just around the corner coasting down Russell street hill. Mr. Phillips is running a contest that he says is arousing interest. He was most optimistic about the effect of the ship building plants now operating in Portland, saying that one firm was going to put on 1,000 men on February 1.

Exchanges Should Be Here.

John Adams, the new owner of the Broadway at 19th and East Broadway, is operating under a more high-class policy than the former owner and is meeting with dandy success. The unreasonable demands of the exchanges upon exhibitors, the location of many feature exchanges in Seattle when Portland is a logical distributing point for the Pacific Northwest, are handicaps to the industry here, he declared. He cited that a Seattle exchange had demanded that he put up nearly a hundred dollars as a deposit before he could get service. He reiterated the sentiment that the prospects for general business were most encouraging and that exhibitors would get in on the profit if exchanges would co-operate with them.

"Pitt" Has Faith in Coming Year.

E. T. Pittmon, Rose Bud theater, also has faith that the betterment of general business conditions now taking place will have a good effect on the moving picture business. To show that he has confidence of getting returns, he exhibited a sample week's program. There was "Rip Van Winkle," with Thomas Jefferson, "The Shine Girl," Pendleton Roundup, "The Right to Be Happy." and a couple of serials, all costing good money.

Tebbetts Expects Boom Soon.

W. E. Tebbetts, Alhambra theater, was the next exhibitor interviewed. He anticipated that the opening of the steel mills and ship yards would make itself felt in his neighborhood about March. He said there was every indication that money was loosening up, and that mercantile establishments were already doing a much larger business than last year at this time.

Ayres Is Optimistic.

W. A. Ayres, of the Sunnyside, is satisfied that general business for the coming year will be better than last, and stated that his December receipts as compared with those of the year before indicated that.

Manufacturers, Please Note.

This is a frank statement of the situation in Portland gathered from an inspection of the outlying districts where theaters used to flourish in the early days of the industry. If Portland exhibitors would get together and make suggestions for the mutual betterment of the industry, the following would undoubtedly be among them:

Establish feature exchanges in Portland; it is the logical distributing point for many theaters in the territory. Cooperate with exhibitors; no mercantile establishments treats its customers with as little sympathetic understanding as the exchanges do, and prospers in the long run. Send out real stories in films, not merely miscast stars. Improve the general programs, some of them have woefully degenerated. Lay off on costume plays, they don't go here no matter how good they are.

All this comes from exhibitors in a booming town where everything is prospering in business and manufacturing.

James' Broadway Has Fine Opening.

Portland, Ore.—James' Broadway, the new name for the old T & D, at Broadway and Stark, had a most auspicious opening December 23. "Idle Wives" being the initial show. A thoroughly renovated house greeted the patrons, the big foyer being tastefully done over in bright and pleasing colors that create home-like atmosphere.

The lamp room is now on the first floor and makes the foyer more cozy by taking up a lot of waste space. The picture is a foot smaller all around than that which was thrown by the T & D, and the projection is excellent. Mr. James has employed a bevy of black-haired girls as ushers who are costumed in old rose.

Christmas Day the big 2,200-seat house stood 'em up all over.

New Theater for La Grande.

La Grande, Ore.—Mrs. M. B. Gardinier is putting in a theater, 60x110 in size, in a building two blocks from the Arcade. The new house will seat 672, all on the ground floor. It will be called the Colonial. It will open January 20. The equipment was furnished by the Service Film Company, the Film Supply Company, Heywood Brothers & Wakefield, all of Portland.

The Arcade, which Mrs. Gardinier has leased to Meyers & Lieter, will be improved when the lease expires and the seating capacity will be increased to 700.

G. F. Traveller Weds.

Portland, Ore.—Invitations have come this way for the wedding of H. C. Feldman and Miss Mae O'Neill at Salt Lake City, December 27. The couple will reside in Seattle. Mr. Feldman has been road man for General Film about a year, working out of Portland, Seattle and Spokane.

C. O. D. for Alleged Damages.

Portland, Oregon.—Pathe exchange recently had a can of its own film returned with a C. O. D. attached for a sum in which the exhibitor claimed to have been damaged by the alleged tardy arrival of his paper for a future show. This was an unheard of proceedure, the exchange claimed, inasmuch as the trivial damage, if any, had not been liquidated nor ascertained. The matter was placed in the hands of the exchange men's board of trade and replevin proceedings would have been started had not the exhibitor released the C. O. D. on demand.

Bill Mead Weds.

Portland, Oregon.—Bill Mead, former traveling representative of Triangle in this territory, passed through Portland recently en route to Los Angeles on his honeymoon trip. He was married December 13 to Miss Elizabeth Heinlen.

Mr. Mead has severed his connection with Triangle and his journey to California is to engage in film pursuits there. He was undoubtedly a big factor in making the Pacific Northwest Triangle office successful and popularizing the service in the Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Eddie Hudson, of Pathe, has gone to Butte. He was two years with the Portland office. E. E. Goehler, road man for the same firm, has resigned his position to become an automobile salesman, his former occupation.

H. O. Strom has opened the theater at Houlton, Oregon. He also operates the Strand at St. Helens.

Sons of Vets' Band With "Pearl of the Army Sign."

Portland, Oregon.—The new Pathe serial "Pearl of the Army" had an auspicious opening at the Hippodrome December 17 when it was shown at the big house in connection with "The Shielding Shadow" which is nearing completion.

On the Saturday preceeding the serial's opening, the management of the Hippodrome and the Pathe exchange staged a parade with appropriate banners and led by the sons of the Spanish American War Veterans.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811, 11th Ave., Spokane, Wash.

Box Parties at Picture Theaters.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Spokane society folk are giving moving picture theater box parties at the Clemmer and Liberty theaters. This is bringing considerable business to the two theaters. One of the principal ones given recently was that given by Waldo G. Paine, vice president and traffic manager of the Spokane & Island Empire Railroad Company to a party of friends at the Liberty, and that by Miss Genevieve Steele and Miss Estelle Culliton, given to sixteen guests at the Clemmer. These are generally followed by tea or lunch at one of the leading restaurants or cafes.

Film News and Notes of Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theater has resumed his midnight matinees, which he found so successful for a time last winter. He presented Douglas Fairbanks in "His Picture in the Papers," and it was greeted by capacity audiences.

Miss Lottie Kruse, a Spokane girl, and former pupil of Mrs. Pauline Dustan Belden, who went to California last March to enter Griffith's studio, is another Spokane girl to make good in moving picture productions. Miss Kruse has signed a one-year contract, according to word just received by friends, for the ingenue lead in the Continental Producing Company. She is working in a 12-reel picture entitled "The Spirit of '76," which, it is said, will require six months for completion.

The hearts of twenty-five orphan children of the Episcopal Church Home for Children, and many boys and girls of All Saints Episcopal Cathedral, Holy Trinity and St. James Churches who have no mothers and fathers were gladdened Saturday, December 30, with gifts and entertainment at the Clemmer theater. This arrangement was made by Dr. H. S. Clemmer and Bishop Herman Page of the Episcopal Church.

Spokane, Wash.—"Purity," the moving picture production which has been refused admission to other towns of this section, was shown at one performance in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, recently, when the mayor, S. H. McEuen, and Councilmen Nelson and Kilbourne visited the theater as a censor board and ruled that the picture was immoral. It was taken off. Mayor McEuen declared that the picture was not fit for any one to see.

SEATTLE NOTES.

"The Unborn" at the Strand.

Seattle, Wash.—L. J. Schlaifer, who has bought the state rights in Washington, Oregon and Idaho, of "The Unborn," has rented the Strand theater for this week for the showing of his picture.

New Theater at Lewiston, Idaho.

Seattle, Wash.—A. H. Hilton is soon to open a new theater in Lewiston. The name by which the house will be known has not yet been decided upon. Lyle Putnam opened Mr. Hilton's old house, the Star, two days before Christmas with "The Hidden Scar."

Levy Signs Triangle for Melbourne Theater.

Seattle, Wash.—Eugene Levy, owner of a string of theaters in Western Washington, signed a contract this week for Triangle to be shown at his Melbourne theater in Tacoma.

Spokane Business Last Year Was Good

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 11th Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Moving picture exhibitors, and exchange managers as well, look for a prosperous new year and speak well of the business of the year just closed. Despite pessimism on the part of some because the state went dry last January 1, all but two of the exhibitors are optimistic and all look for a better business for the ensuing year.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, said: "Throughout 1916 business was excellent and standing room audiences were the order of business a great part of the time. We have booked a number of the leading productions to be shown in the immediate future and look for a still better year in 1917."

C. E. Stilwell, president of the Stilwell theaters, which are the Class A, Casino, Rex and Unique, and of which B. W. Copeland, formerly proprietor of the Rex is manager, said: "Since starting the chain of theaters, also since taking over the Class A in the spring, business has been good. It has been excellent at the Unique throughout the year and business has been good since we took over the Casino. I look for business to be much better for the ensuing year, according to present indications."

James McConahey, manager of the Best Show, said: "The so-called wise ones and the knowing ones predicted that the sides of the moving picture houses would budge with attendance, but for the 12 months of 1916 our business has not been up to the standard and in fact was the slowest for four years. The high cost of living takes the money of the people and they do not have the money to spare to attend theaters even at five cents."

J. W. Allender, manager of the Lyric theater, said: "Business is all right and I look for it to be much better in the future. Prohibition made it a little worse for the first five or six months, but that has been overcome and things are improving."

A. H. McMillan, manager of the Majestic theater, said: "Our business shows a substantial increase over last year, and prospects are very bright for the future."

E. M. Densmore, manager of the Gem theater, in the Union Park section, reports business has been good for the year and that it is looking better for the future.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer, of the Clemmer theater, said: "The year 1916 exceeded the year 1915 in gross receipts and I have no hesitancy in predicting a greater increase in business in 1917."

What Exchange Managers Think.

W. Potter, manager of the local exchange of the Universal Film & Supply, said: "Business was much better in 1916 than in 1915, and is picking up all the time. I am looking for a successful year, for 1917, in this territory."

George Ekre, manager of the General Film exchange in Spokane, said: "Our business was pretty fair for the year and prospects are still brighter for 1917."

R. C. Madden, manager of the Mutual exchange in Spokane, said; "Business has been fine and the future is bright, as many new theaters are opening in this territory. I look for a great improvement starting with the new year."

Peter Carroll, manager of the Pathe exchange in Spokane, said: "We have had more business in this territory than we have been able to supply. We have not a reel of either first, second or third choice film in the place at this time for Spokane houses. I contemplate increasing my force by adding a stenographer and another clerk."

H. J. Rosebaum, northwestern manager of the Art Craft Film Corporation, of Seattle, spent a couple of days in Spokane on business and in conference with Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty. He said: "While we are just getting started indications are bright for a prosperous new year."

Seattle Exhibitor Loses Appeal Case

W. H. Smith of the Strand Has Been Fined for Running "War's Women" Last September—County Supreme Court Sustains Sentence.

By S. J. Anderson, East St., Seattle Wash.

Seattle, Wash.—The appeal brought by W. H. Smyth to prevent the city of Seattle fining him for running "War's Women" at his Strand theater last summer, was lost at the trial on Dec. 19 in the Supreme Court of King county. It will be remembered that it was stated in the Sept. 2 issue of the WORLD that, after the picture had been passed by the censorship board and had been running five days, Mayor H. C. Gill, accompanied by the chief of police, entered the theater during the performance, ordered the picture off, and had Mr. Smyth arrested and fined $50, charging that in showing "War's Women" the latter was violating the city ordinance.

When Mayor Gill was campaigning for the office he now holds, the Seattle Exhibitors' League paid for the making of a film showing the candidate at work, and put it on at all their theaters. It was Mr. Smyth who called for Mr. Gill in his own car, acted as director for the picture, then took the finished film around to the theaters. And yet Mr. Gill did not even take the trouble to tell Mr. Smyth a few hours before the show opened that he would not allow the picture to be run longer.

At the trial no witnesses were allowed to appear for Mr. Smyth. He was permitted to answer two questions asked by his attorney, viz., "Did you show the picture" and "Did you see it before showing it?" Mr. Smyth answered both questions in the affirmative. When the question as to whether the picture had been passed by the censors came up, the prosecuting attorney objected and Judge Everett Smith sustained the objection, stating that the censors were not recognized as an official board and that what they said had no weight—this in spite of article 3 of the city ordinance, which gives an exhibitor the legal right to show any picture which has been passed by the censors. Mr. Smyth was allowed to answer no more questions put by his attorney, and judgment was given on article 1 of the city ordinance, which prohibits an exhibitor from showing an obscene and lescivious picture, while article 3 was totally ignored.

Film men and exhibitors of the city realize that it is such a trial as this, in which one of their number is branded as a criminal, which hurts the motion picture industry, and it is rumored among the exchanges that they will lend moral and financial aid to Mr. Smyth in an appeal to a still higher court; while all those connected with the trade are going to work for a definite understanding with the city authorities, so that an exhibitor after meeting all legal requirements with regard to a film, may have some assurance that there is no danger of suddenly being pounced upon and fined.

THAT TERRIBLE TENDERFOOT (Jan. 2).—The Screaming Sculls, a bad lot of bums, terrorize the town of Blazing Berry Gulch. They take particular delight in making the tenderfoot dance for them. Noticing that the ringleaders supply of shells has been exhausted the diminutive tenderfoot knocks him out with a blow.

The proprietor of Blazing Berry Gulch's lone booze emporium hires the tenderfoot on the spot as a bouncer. In a short time Grizzly Gus, the "Wolf" of the Prairie, appears upon the scene properly heeled with shooting irons. The tenderfoot bouncer entices him into a rear room of the thirst parlor and nearly despatches him by dropping a bag of sand upon his head. This endears him to Polly, the darling of the town, and arouses the hatred of the "Wolf."

When the "Wolf" succeeds in capturing Polly and carrying her off to his lair, the tenderfoot takes up the trail and in a hand to hand encounter he exacts his revenge for the insult to Poly

THE FALSE PROPHET—(No. 21 of "The Girl from Frisco"—Two Parts—Jan 3).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); John Wallace (True Boardman); Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson); Daniel (Ronald Bradbury); Saint Sam Doolittle (Edward Clisbee). Directed by James W. Horne.

A faker, calling himself Daniel II, with his three "saints" comes to Santa Loma with warnings that the end of the world is near and calling to the populace to give up their worldly possessions and prepare for the day of doom. He quickly gathers an ignorant following about him and Barbara seeing the manner in which they are being duped, attempts to expose him.

But her first efforts result in serious danger for she is mobbed by Daniel's followers for her "sacrilege." But Barbara works quietly away with the aid of Wallace, and on the day that Daniel had prophesied for the end of the world springs her coup with the result that following some stirring dramatic scenes the prophet and his "saints" are lodged behind bars.

THE HOUSE OF SECRETS (No. 12 of "Grant, Police Reporter"—Jan. 5). The cast: Tom Grant, of The Chronicle (George Larkin); Nina (Ollie Kirkby); Mr. Black (Robert Ellis); Davis, Submarine Commander (Harry Gordon); Mansfield (William McKey). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Grant, police reporter on the New York Chronicle, is out on Long Island hunting quail, when his curiosity is aroused by the furtiveness of three armed men led by a woman on horseback who are conveying a covered load of something by motor truck along a deserted road he happens to cross. His curiosity leads him to investigate.

The trail leads to an abandoned house. Grant sees barrel after barrel of gasoline stored in the cellar of this mysterious looking house. After the truck leaves he investigates and has a pitched battle with a wireless operator he surprises at work on the top floor. The operator presses a button thereby precipitating Grant into the basement. Breaking his bonds he again surprises the secret operator and in a struggle on the roof top Grant throws his adversary over and sits down at the wireless mechanism to unravel the mystery.

He manages to pick up a message that astonishes him. He is in communication with a submarine lying on the bottom of the nearby harbor that expects to take on a supply of gasoline and oil, an act that a neutral country cannot tolerate. Meantime Nina, the girl spy in the employ of the foreign government, has summoned the submarine crew by wig wag signals.

Grant manages to call the Brooklyn Navy yard before the raider's crew arrives. Then begins a fight; in and out of windows, across slippery roof tops, the chase takes the reporter, culminating in his daring leap for the wireless frame. Uncoupling the cross piece he swings down and out, describing a huge circle through the air until the momentum of his swing enables him to hook his legs around the limb of a tree on the opposite side of the yard. Scrambling to the ground he captures his prisoners just as the marines from the navy yard rush up.

THE MOGUL MOUNTAIN MYSTERY (No. 113 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Jan. 6). The cast: Helen, operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Bert Morgan (P. A. Pembroke); Squirt Booth (George Routh) his accomplices (Wm. Burns and Gus Pullian); "Lefty" (W. Foster); division superintendent (G. A. Williams). Written by S. A. Van Petten. Directed by Walter Morton.

Bert Morgan and "Squint" Booth are freight agents for rival railroads concerned in getting the contract for hauling the gold ore produced by the Mogul Mountain mine. The contract finally falls to the road employing Morgan upon his promise to have cars in operation over an abandoned spur track within three weeks' time.

"Squint" learns that there is a law on the statute books which says that a railroad's right of way reverts to the owner of the adjoining property if no trains are run over the rails within five years. He purchases the adjoining farms but falls under the suspicion of Helen, the telegraph operator at Lone Point. Helen telegraphs her suspicions to the division superintendent who looks up the law and determines to send a special train over the abandoned spur track before four o'clock of the same day that the five-year period would expire.

"Squint" has left one of his lieutenants on guard at the mine to watch developments. Learning that the "special" has started and realizing that he must prevent its completing the trip at any cost, he forces Helen, on duty, to stand by while he telephones his aide to release the brakes on an empty car at the mine.

As "Squint" and his confederates rush out of the station Helen runs down the track towards the onrushing runaway car. In her desperation she can only think of one thing to do and Fate wills that a lineman repairing the telegraph wires shall be the one to aid her. Proceeding a bit further up the track she orders the lineman to climb a pole and to lock his legs around the cross arm in such a manner that his hands and arms are free. Helen then climbs to the top of the pole and as the runaway car, bearing a box of dynamite that "Squint" has placed in it, rounds the curve she reaches up her arms for the lineman to grasp.

With the pole swaying beneath its extra weight, the lineman takes a firm grip on Helen's wrists and swings her out over the track and drops on to the runaway car as it passes. In a few minutes she has recovered her breath and is tugging at the brake wheel. She stops the runaway within inches of the oncoming special, thereby earning the gratitude of both Morgan and the division superintendent.

RIVAL ROMEOS (Jan. 9).—The cast: The rivals (Ham and Bud); the girl (Ethel Teare); the marriage broker (Henry Murdoch). Written by S. A. Van Petten.

"I'd rather get married than batch with you as the cook," said Ham to Bud on a summer's morning, when Bud's stew proved particularly tasteless. "You've got nothing on me," Bud retorted. "I was thinking of acquiring a wife myself." Whereupon without further ado our boon companions step forth in quest of wives that can cook—and live on nothing per week.

Ham calls at a marriage broker's office in search of his dream girl. When he is shown the portrait of a raving beauty and told to procure a marriage license and wait that afternoon in the park for her, he does a little raving himself, after paying the fee exacted by the broker. Bud calls later in the day and is shown the identical picture that had set Ham's heart to pounding. He, too, takes up his station in the park to wait for his bride-to-be.

After an all night vigil, Ham and Bud awake to a realization that they have been gloriously stung! Whereupon they make a bee line for the marriage broker's office, capture the girl and start for the Rev. Hookem's cottage. Ham appears to lead in the race for the altar but his license proves to be of the canine variety and Bud steps to the front waving a regular license. At this critical juncture, the unscrupulous broker takes a hand in the farce and proclaims himself the lawful husband of the girl. Ham and Bud exchange kicks and return to their bachelor quarters, sadder but wiser.

THE RESURRECTION OF GOLD BAR (No. 22 of "The Girl from Frisco"—Two Parts—Jan. 10).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); Ace Brent, her father (Frank Jonasson); Congressman Wallace (True Boardman); Dick Dingle (Ronald Bradbury); an old prospector (Edward Clisbee). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by James W. Horne.

It is Barbara Brent's birthday and under her breakfast plate her father has just placed a jewel box. As he sits waiting for Barbara to appear, he recalls the circumstances of her birth, and in memory he is living again in the boom mining town of Gold Bar. As though it were yesterday, he pictures his rapture over the tiny bundle the nurse has placed in his arms and his triumphal entry into the open street that the miners can feast their eyes upon his daughter. His anguish over the death of Barbara's mother; the sudden pinching off of the gold vein and the desertion of the town by all of its inhabitants, recur vividly to him.

Barbara coaxes her father and Congressman John Walace, her fiance, to take her to the deserted town of Gold Bar as a birthday treat. Arriving, with provisions for several days' stay, they come across an old prospector who has lived all these years near the scene of the strike. He is suffering from hunger and exposure. They make him comfortable and then set out to explore the deserted grocery of Dick Dingle, now a convict. One of the floor boards gives way under Barbara's weight and when she draws up her foot, she finds a gold nugget clinging to the heel of her shoe. A search reveals a sack of nuggets which the jolly conspirators bury near the creek where they will be unearthed by the old prospector.

Events now follow one another in rapid succession. While the prospector is off to bank his discovered gold, Barbara, her father, and her finance, actually discover gold and file a claim in the name of the old prospector with Barbara as his partner. News of the find spreads like wildfire and there is a general rush for the deserted town by eager goldseekers. In a fight to prevent the stealing of their claim, Barbara and the old prospector hold off Dingle, who has been released from prison, and his confederates, until Wallace can return from the land office. Dingle is taken in hand by the sheriff and prosperity once more returns to Gold Bar.

Dionysius, a man who never ventured near the bright lights, issued a proclamation that any guy caught making booze on or after the Fourth of July would be sent up for life.

Damon's best friend was Pythias, a noble soldier who loved the clanging of swords and women's laughter, and was married to Calanthe, a Roman beauty. One day Dionysius spied Calanthe, and asked his prime minister who the chicken was. He was told that she was Pythias' wife.

"Call Pythias to me," said Dionysius. "I have an idea." And straightway he sent his soldier to capture a band of moonshiners. But Pythias routed the moonshiners, and brought the ringleader back in chains, much to Dionysius' discomfiture. Also to the dismay of Damon, who saw his source of happiness thus rudely shattered. In desperation, he formed a conspiracy with the blind piggers to take Dionysius' life, but woe followed him. The good sword doubled up, and Damon was caught like a rat in a trap and thrown into jail.

Pythias knew that Mrs. Damon would never forgive her spouse if he did not say good-bye to her before being deprived of his head, and offered to stay in jail as hostage for him while Damon went home to bid farewell to his better half. But Damon had litle heart for the business, and when he espied Calanthe, he straightway forgot all about his duty to die. At last the sight of his wife recalls Damon to duty, and he arrives at the palace just as faithful Pythias is about to lose his head. Dionysius is so overcome with the spectacle of such friendship, that he forgives the two on the spot.

Georgianna's case is dismissed, but she thinks Newman is responsible for her being set free. On arriving at his rooms a fierce struggle ensues. A knock is heard and she is told to hide behind the couch. Morris enters the room and shoots Newman, who falls dead.

Georgianna is held for the murder, Morris having escaped into the room adjoining Newman's, in which McHugh, a newspaper reporter, is dressing.

THE JEWEL OF DEATH (Two Parts—Jan. 7).—The cast: Afga (William Clifford); Djalma (Paul Machette); Col. Van Alsten (Paul Machette); Nellie Van Alston (Belle Bennett); the Nautch girl (Edna Maison); Sir Hugh Wheeler (Louis Fitzroy); Nana Sahib (Henry Schaum); Gen. Havelock (Bud Osborne). Scenario by James Dayton. Directed by W. J. Fahrney.

The story opens in a Hindu temple of Buddha in Northern India, where six priests are performing the rites of their ancient religion. A band of Tartar coolies steal in and attack the devotees. The sacred eye of Buddha, a magnificent emerald, flashes fire, and the coolies fall back in awe. One overcomes his fear and gouging the stone from the head of the idol escapes. One of the priests, just as he is dying, curses the despoilers and pronounces a malediction upon the possessors of the stone.

Djalma, the high priest, discovers the dead bodies and vows to devote his life to the recovery of the sacred stone. The curse soon shows its effects. The coolies, who have reached the desert, quarrel, and one kills the others. In the jungle he becomes a madman, and throws the emerald away. It hangs suspended in the air, and as he dies it settles on his breast. It is found by a caravan who take it to Sir Hugh Wheeler, the English commandant, who purchases it for his niece. The merchant who sells it dies suddenly. The evil power still follows the stone. On the parade ground at the English headquarters, a priest harangues the Sepoy troopers, telling them that they are being defiled by using greased bullets. They throw down their arms and begin the Sepoy rebellion.

Nana Sahib offers safe conduct to all English troops and residents, then villainously slaughters the soldiers, including Sir Hugh, while the women and children are taken back inside the gates. Djalma, the high priest, sees the fate of Sir Hugh, and smiles as he observes the fatal toll of the stone. All of the white people are slaughtered, except a little baby, which a native woman secretes, and gives to the high priest for adoption. Djalma names him Afga and swears that he will eventually restore the stone to its sacred resting place. Twenty-five years elapse, and each owner of the emerald has some calamity befall him. Colonel and Mrs. Van Alston give their daughter, Nellie, the emerald. This is observed in a vision by the high priest, Afga, shortly after he has promised the dying Djalma that he will work unceasingly to restore the stone.

Afga's astral body journeys to London, while Nellie sleeps and worships the gem. Nellie, in a dream, sees him and the idol, and connects the absence of the idol's eye with her emerald. She awakes, to find the stone suspended in mid-air, and faints from fright. Nellie's illness puzzles the doctors. Colonel Van Alston is ordered to India, and takes his wife and daughter with him. In viewing the sights at Cawnpore they come to the Temple of Buddha. Afga and Nellie meet, and Afga gaining the Colonel's consent to cure Nellie, lays his hands on her brow and she becomes well.

Meanwhile native devotees of the Goddess Thug, observing the valuable stone on Nellie's neck, attempt to strangle her. Afga observes this in a vision, and saves the girl by turning the leader into a dog. The following day Nellie goes to the temple, and meets Afga. He takes her before the idol and tells her the story of the emerald. She returns it and he replaces it in the head of the Buddha, where it flames with fire. Then Afga folds Nellie in his arms.

Arrived at the house he peers into a side window and hears the mistress telling her husband to try to get home by 9 o'clock. It is then 4:40 o'clock. The tramp rejoices and is planning his entrance when the mistress sees him and again phones her husband, telling him of the tramps's progress into the house.

The husband jumps into a machine parked in front of his building. The wife has gone upstairs to their baby. The owner of the machine, having seen Friend Husband, with two cops, give chase. They arrive at the house at the psychological moment and after arrests and explanations the tramp rides away with the officers.

HOMELESS (Jan. 20).—A pet dog, the greatest treasure of his mistress, while out riding one day in his mistress' automobile, is attracted by the sight of a cat. He jumps from the auto to chase the feline. During the pursuit the collie is lost and tormented by two small boys, who tie a tin can to his tail and chase him. Later he is rescued by a ragged boy, whose home is any place where he can lay his head. Upon restoring the dog to his mistress the boy is rewarded by a good home.

GOLD SEAL.

THE PRODIGAL WIDOW (Three Parts—Jan. 16).—The cast: Paul Braintree (Edward Cecil); Henry (Carl Von Schiller); Bina (Neva Gerber); Allan Bradley (Chas. Perley); Gambler (Clyde Benson). Written by Walter Woods. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Paul Braintree had come west prospecting and had sought his fortunes in the mining district. His brother, Henry, had gone to Mexico and had acquired valuable oil lands—also a wife, Bina, a great flirt. Jack Winthrop, a young college student; a lawyer, Allen Bradley, and Dr. Le Rene are among her most devoted admirers.

Things have not been going very well in a financial way for Henry, and his lawyer announces his credit is no longer good. Paul pays a visit to his brother, and for the first time is attracted by a woman, but the hopelessness bewilders him. Bina recognizes a new victim and when she confesses her love, he quits his brother's house, leaving a note that business interests call him home

Henry's affairs reach a crisis, and he chooses the easiest route, feeling that his brother has deserted him at the crucial moment. Bina wires Paul of his brother's suicide, as he has struck it rich and is celebrating in the mining camp. He goes home and blames Bina for Henry's downfall, and when she appeals to him he flings her from him and goes back West.

Bina plots to revenge herself on Paul. Dressed very elaborately she goes to the mining camp and begins a flirtation with the gambling sheriff, and is entertaining the gamblers when Paul arrives. She repulses him when he attempts to make her leave. He goes home, gets his horse and returning to the dance hall, with a gun forces her to leave the place, holding off the men and starting a fight between them to distract their attention while he takes her away.

Arrived in the wilds, he forces her to don overalls and to cook her own meals. Paul falls over a cliff, and Bina, puzzled by her own sensations, is nursing him when Allen Bradley, her husband's attorney and an old admirer of hers arrives and tells her her fortune in Mexico has been restored. As she is wondering why the news fails to enthuse her, the gamblers arrive. She refuses Bradley, and fights for the man she finds she loves.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE PURPLE MASK (Episode 4—"Facing Death"—Two Parts—Jan. 21).—The cast: Patricia Montez (Grace Cunard); Detective Phil Kelly (Francis Ford); Mrs. Van Nuys (Jean Hathaway); Silk Donahue (John Duffy); Pete Bartlett (Pete Gerald); Bull Sanderson (Jerry Ash); Stephen Dupont (John Featherstone); Jacques, the butler (Marie Biannchi). Written by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

Safely arrived at his own room with his captive, whom he has carried on his shoulders from the sewers where he had captured her, "Sphinx" Kelly seats the girl in a chair and throws off the cape which had previously concealed her features. Great was Kelly's chagrin to discover that the girl whom he had presumed was Pat was not his fair tormentor by any means—but another girl whom Pat had dressed in a costume like her own to fool the detective.

For some time Patricia refrains from activities and "Sphinx" Kelly imagines that his tormentor has given up her practices of trying to humiliate him in perpetrating crimes and misdemeanors. But at an utterly unexpected time, Pat resumes her work. It came about, this time, at the Paris Academy where Pat decided to thwart a scheme to cheat out of his just reward the rising young artist she had befriended.

Pat had posed for the pictures and her old enemy, Stephen Dupont, the art dealer and money-lender, who had previously suffered from the girl's depredations, was determined that a cheap daub he had caused to be entered for the grand prize should get the award of judgment. Pat overhears a conversation in which Dupont arranges to bribe the committee of award. Pat breaks into the Academy, transposes the pictures, and the award goes to a certain numbered picture—when the drapes are drawn it is Pat's nude likeness that gets the prize.

In celebration of her victory Pat assembles her friends at the studio of her artist protege, to have a jollification. Dupont hears of the plan and brings a gang of ruffians to clean up the place. Kelly also knows of the party and goes there in time to enter into the fray. There is a general fight, of fierce and rough-and-tumble sort, that ends in Dupont spiriting Kelly away in an autoombile.

Pat follows with her Apaches, and breaks into the house where Kelly has been made a prisoner. Kelly is in a room on the ground floor where a drove of alligators are kept in a tank. The floor is being drawn from under Kelly, that he may fall into the water and be at the mercy of the hungry alligators. Pat is in the room overhead, breaking through the ceiling as the eposide ends with Kelly hanging precariously to the wall of the room, with the alligators waiting eagerly in the tank below for their expected breakfast.

GAUMONT.

THE VAMPIRES—(Episode Nine—THE TERRIBLE WEDDING—Three Parts)—Jan. 18)—The cast: Philip Guard (Edmond Mathe); Normandin (Marcel Levesque); Venenos (Charles Moriss); Irma Vep (Juliet Musidora); Jane, Philip's wife (Louise Lagrange).

The Vampires do not give up their attempts on the life of Philip Guard even after he is married. The wife of the janitor who was accidently poisoned by wine meant for Philip's wedding is now in Philip's employ. She is anxious to avenge her husband's death, and consults a fortune teller. The fortune teller is a Vampire. By hypnotizing her visitor, the woman influences her to open the door of Philip's home to the Vampires. Normandin has fallen in love with Augustine, and has followed her to the fortune teller. She will not reveal the reason for her visit and he watches her day and night. It is this vigilance which finally rewards him by finding the Vampires descend on Philip's home.

The Vampires are put to flight when they are discovered trying to asphyxiate Philip and his wife. While Philip and Normandin go for the police, Augustine and Jane, Philip's wife, are kidnapped and carried to a house in the suburbs. Normandin, pursuing the automobile, fired a shot that punctured the lubricating oil tank. This dripped, leaving a trail which Normandin followed slowly but successfully on a bicycle.

Philip and Normandin find that Jane and Augustino are kept prisoners in a cellar of the house. Philip leaves his revolver with his wife while he and Normandin go for the police. The official raiding party arrives while the marriage of Irma Vep and Venenos is being celebrated. Every exit is watched, and the police break in upon the Vampires. All are killed or captured, but a count shows that Irma Vep is missing. She has secured a revolver dropped by a policeman and hurried to the cellar to be revenged upon Jane and Augustine for the death of her companions.

Jane, however, defends herself by shooting Irma, who drops at the feet of Normandin and Philip who have also hurried to the cellar. Thus the last Vampire is accounted for, and Philip has freed France of the terrible criminal menace. Normandin marries Augustine, and the two pair live happily ever after.

REEL LIFE NO. 38—(Jan. 21).—The stir in scientific circles when air was first liquified has not yet subsided, and even the layman has been unable to appreciate some of the wonderful things which can be done with liquid air. The Gaumont company has caught some of these for the screen in its picture called "The Air." A goldfish swimming is a bowl is dropped into a liquid air bath and immediately removed so hard that it is broken with a hammer as if made of marble. The same process is repeated with the blossoms of flowering plants. Other experiments with air show how one can be asphyxiated with his own breath, how nitrogen is a dilutent of the oxygen in the air, and how a substance burns in pure oxygen.

Another entertaining subject on the same reel visualizes the orange industry in California. There is a view of a 6,000-acre orange grove, and then follow pictures of the processes of picking and handling. It may come as a surprise to some that the oranges are given a bath and disinfected before they are sorted.

The next picture is interesting for all who enjoy water sports. It is a series of views of a hydro-ski. This is apparently two baby canoes braced together, the occupant of the queer water craft standing with a foot in each as if in big shoes. In reality he is standing upon treadles which work a wheel placed between the two canoes at the stern. The contrivance is guided with a paddle.

How apples are automatically graded for the market is a picture on this reel which shows the care taken in packing them according to size. The machine is complicated in mechanism, but the process is understood at a glance.

On the same reel is a short picture in the series, "Things Not Generally Known." It shows how scattered glass is removed from the floor with wet absorbent cotton.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD NO. 12—(Jan. 23).—The war has turned the thoughts of the world in admiration toward France, the one nation that did not seek war yet has sustained its awful shock so heroically. It is certain that the close of the war will see a general exodus of sight-seeing Americans to the sister republic. With this in mind the Gaumont company has filmed for American spectators some of the sights which will be seen on a tour of France, aside from pictures of devastation in the war zone. The first series of pictures in Gaumont's "Tours Around the World" No. 12 shows Bordeaux, France, and sights along the river down to Pauillac, near the coast, noted for its wines.

Although the fourth port of France, Bordeaux is situated 60 miles inland on the Gironde river. A beautiful picture is of the Place des Quinconces, one of the city's principal promenades. Another is the monument in honor of the Girondists. The city's importance depending upon the sea, there is a comprehensive view of the quays.

The Monastery of St. Thessalonica, located just outside Salonika—now in the hands of the Allies—is typical of monastery life in that part of Greece which recently was redeemed from Turkish rule. The pictures show in detail the manner of living of the men who have turned their backs on man the better to glorify God in the mountain country. The monasteries derive their income principally from the raising of olives and the breeding of pigs.

A third section of the reels brings to view some remarkable views of the gorges of the Nive river in the French Pyrenees.

SEE AMERICA FIRST—NO. 72 (Jan. 24).—"Historic Virginia" is the title of this release which is devoted to Williamsburg, Hampton, Old Point Comfort, and Norfolk. These places and the surrounding territory are rich in American history, for in this vicinity the cavaliers made their first settlements of the colony named in honor of England's queen.

At Williamsburg are pictures of the old powder horn" built in 1714, the court house, and Bruton Parish Church, the court church of colonial Virginia. The present building, erected in 1710, is claimed to be oldest Episcopal church in continuous use in America. There is a good picture of William and Mary college, founded in 1693, as well as of the Moore house, the dwelling on the James river in which were drawn the terms of surrender of Lord Cornwallis. There are also pictures of the spot near by where the British surrendered Oct. 19, 1781, and the peace monument erected one hundred years later by congress to commemorate the event.

At Hampton is pictured St. John's church, the oldest but one in America, where services have been held continuously since 1628. At Hampton Roads, the stretch of water where the battle between the Monitor and Merrimac was fought, is shown, as well as the beautiful resort hotel at Old Pont Comfort. There are comprehensive views of Norfolk, and pictures of the light houses at Cape Henry.

On the same reel is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer called "Absent Minded Willie."

THE PERILS OF OUR GIRL REPORTERS (Chapter 1—"The Jade Necklace"—Two Parts—Dec. 28).—Dorothy Desmond, an inexperienced Kentucky girl whose father, an editor, had been shot at his desk by a political opponent, and whose mother had dropped dead of shock, found herself left virtually penniless. She believed she had a gift for writing and came to New York to seek a position on a newspaper. She was assigned to Chinatown to get an opium den story. She missed her escort and bravely and foolishly went to Chinatown alone. She yielded to the invitation of a Chinaman to enter his shop and inspect some beads, and he was at the point of attacking her when a storm of revolver shots broke, and a tong war was on.

At the crack of the first pistol the Chinese shopkeeper desisted from his evil designs and shoved Dorothy into a secret room, the door of which he closed and locked on the outside. The girl was mad with fear. To her through the deadening walls came the sounds of the shooting. Then the shots ceased as suddenly as they had begun—and she heard faintly the gongs of police ambulances and patrols.

Had she been liberated she would have seen whitejacketed emergency surgeons and orderlies picking up dead and wounded Chinamen and putting them into the wagons, while blue-coated officers with busy clubs rounded up other Chinamen, dragging them from all sorts of odd holes and corners and packing them into patrol wagons.

"Worst tong fight in years," a sergeant observed pleasantly to a newspaper man. "Seven dead already, and some of the wounded sure to die. These Chinks shoot mighty straight for heathen. In the dark, too. What always puzzled me was how one tong could spot the other tong when they get mixed up in one of these nasty little wars. All Chinks look pretty much alike to me. You can never find out what started one of these shooting festivals. They won't tell a white man a thing. We can take our fill of guessing, though. Maybe it was a woman taken away from a member of one tong by a member of another. Maybe it was opium, maybe—you can think up a whole lot of maybes if you try, but what's the use"?

THE PERILS OF OUR GIRL REPORTERS (Chapter 2—"The Black Door"—Two Parts—Jan. 3).—Isabel Ralston, a young newspaper reporter, is sent by the order of her managing editor into the middle of a mystery that recalls Poe's "Murders of the Rue Morgue." Cynthia is the niece of an old lady, Harriet Kennedy, whose wealth and the imminence of her departure from this mundane sphere, have inspired her relatives with greed and caused them to conspire so that her demise may be hastened. But Cynthia is more than that. She is of the "criminal type." Miss Ralston falls under the evil sway of Cynthia and her band of harpies who have installed themselves in old Miss Kennedy's home, because, having befriended the old woman once, she has been sent for by the latter in her extremity.

Jonas Slaughter is a lawyer and a sort of relative of old Miss Kennedy. H is also an occupant of the house. Slaughter and Cynthia, together with the dissolute nephew of Miss Kennedy, plot to kill the old lady and to throw the blame on Miss Ralston and John Farrar, Miss Ralston's law office fiance, who has accompanied her at her request and who is stormbound as she is in the house of "The Black Door."

James Kennedy, the nephew, who is egged on by Cynthia to garrote his aunt in her bed, and who is nerved to the deed by the administration of cocaine, is recognized by Miss Ralston, who has been kept awake by the storm, and brought to book by her for the crime, after she herself has been accused. The unmasking of the real murderer, James Kennedy, is skilfully handled. The mystery of the "Black Door," is solved when it is discovered that Cynthia has been in the habit of telling most industriously a story, which is based on an old southern superstition, that the front door of a house occupied for more than a century turned black when any member of the family died, and that it was she who blackened the door with a big brush in order to impress on the minds of simple folk that the death of Miss Kennedy had been wrought by some mysterious agency.

THE SLAVE MARKET.—(Famous Players—FiveParts—Jan. 1).—The cast: Ramona (Pauline Frederick); John Barton (Thomas Meighan); Firebrand (Albert Hart); Anna (Ruby Hoffman); Portuguese Joe (Wellington Playter).

Ramona is the daughter of the governor of Port Royal. She is a school girl living in Spain. John Barton, a soldier of fortune, is cast ashore in Spain penniless and scrapes an acquaintance with Ramona by rescuing one of her pets. He is putting up at a rather questionable tavern where he learns of a huge treasure buried by "Firebrand", a pirate, and secures plans of the spot in which it is concealed.

Ramona sails for Port Royal and Barton is on the same ship. "Firebrand" attacks the ship and captures as part of his booty Ramona, whom he appropriates for himself after Barton has been knocked overboard in her defense. Until the acquisition of Ramona, Firebrand's favorite has been Anna, who now becomes jealous of the Spanish beauty. After attempting to make Ramona accept his attentions peacefully, Firebrand vents his wrath upon her and orders her confined in one of his cabins.

Barton, recovering from his injuries sufficiently to make his way ashore, stumbles upon the cabin in which Ramona is a prisoner but the jealous Anna discovers him and informs Firebrand of the supposed duplicity of his new favorite. The pirate chief rushes to the cabin and when he attempts to force his attentions upon Ramona she kills him.

Anna denounces Ramona as the culprit and, in a fit of vengeance, suggests that Ramona be sold as a slave in the public market. Her rare beauty causes lively bidding among the men who attend the sale. Meanwhile Barton has gone in search of the buried treasure and has found it. He has bought a horse on which he comes in search of Ramona—only to find her on the slave block, with a horde of men frantically bidding for her.

Plunging into the crowd, he fights his way to the front and forces the bidding until, after a soul-stirring scene, he succeeds in vanquishing his rivals, and rides off triumphant in search of a minister.

THE EVIL EYE—(Lasky—Five Parts—Jan. 4)—The cast: Dr. Katherine Torrance (Blanche Sweet); Leonard Sheldon (Tom Forman); Frank King (Webster Campbell); Clifford, Katherine's brother (J. Parks Jones); Mexican Joe (Walter Long); Rosa, Sheldon's servant (Ruth King); Michael (William Dale).

An alarming epidemic has broken out in the vineyards of which Leonard Sheldon is the manager, and in answer to his wire that a doctor be sent to the little Mexican settlement at once, Katherine Torrance, a young and beautiful physician, is sent. Accompanying her is her younger brother, Clifford, weak-willed and dissipated.

The inhabitants of the village are ignorant and superstitious and the situation is a grave one. Upon Katherine's arrival, Sheldon, thunderstruck that a woman should tackle such a job, tries to persuade her to return, but this she declines to do and goes about her duties, faithfully caring for the afflicted. The light which she wears on her forehead in order that she may see clearly into the throats of her patients, arouses the suspicion of the benighted Mexicans, and as the disease spreads, the trouble is accredited to this light, or "evil eye," and the medicine which she leaves is thrown away.

The friendship of Leonard and Katherine is rapidly ripening into love, but both are unconscious of this fact, so deeply are they absorbed in their strenuous duties. Seldon falls ill and is unable to transfer the payroll to the bank, so Katherine volunteers to do it for him. A hold-up is planned by Mexican Joe, leader of the employees, but his plans are thwarted. Clifford braces up and becomes of great assistance to Katherine.

Rosa, Sheldon's servant, is in love with Frank King, his assistant, whose affection for her is cooling. Sentiment against Katherine is growing daily and she decides to leave. Rosa's parents try to wring from her the name of the man responsible for her unfortunate condition and Leonard, believing it is Clifford, is about to announce himself as the guilty one when Frank confesses and sends for the priest. Leonard mistakes Katherine's tears as grief at Frank's wrongdoing, and is only awakened to her love for him when Clifford tells him to take her in his arms, which he promptly does, announcing to the crowd that they may send for a man doctor—Katherine is to be his wife.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS (Famous Players—Five Parts—Jan. 8).—The cast: Estella (Louise Huff); "Pip" (Jack Pickford); Abel Magwitch, alias Provis (Frank Losee); Joe Gargery (W. W. Black); Mrs. Gargery (Marcia Harris); Miss Havisham (Grace Barton); Mr. Jaggers (Herbert Prior). Directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"Pip," an orphan, lives with his sister, whose husband runs a country blacksmith shop. The boy's life is a drab one until, in an effort to escape his sister's wrath, he runs into a graveyard where he is seized by an escaped convict, Provis, who threatens him with instant death if he does not give him food and a file with which to remove the ball and chain from his ankle.

Pip does as he is bid, only to have the convict captured and brought to the blacksmith shop, where poor Pip nearly expires for fear he will be apprehended. But the grateful Provis lies to save him. The next step in the history of Pip is the arrival of Mr. Jaggers, a London lawyer, who is so struck by his gentility that he selects him as a companion for Estella, the adopted daughter of his client, Miss Havisham, a most secretive and peculiar woman.

The companionship of the two youngsters ripens into love as they grow older, until Pip learns to his dismay that Miss Havisham has deliberately encouraged them with the purpose of breaking his heart. The young lovers are separated and Pip is made the beneficiary of a legacy which enables him to go to London, live as a gentleman and be thoroughly educated. He does not know the source of this income, but believes that Miss Havisham is secretly making amends for her cruelty.

He finally discovers the whereabouts of Estella and they plight their troth. That night Pip is dashed to the depths of despair by the arrival of Provis, the convict, who reveals the fact that it is he who has been supplying Pip with money. The poor boy believes that Estella will scorn him when she learns the truth, but he has reckoned without the finer qualities of Estella who comes to his assistance and even helps the convict in his fatal effort to escape the police. Over his dead body there arises the vision of a new romance as the two young lovers pay homage to the better side of this remarkable man's character.

HE DID IT HIMSELF.—(Black Diamond.—Jan. 22.)—High Spigh, an ambitious but unsuccessful detective, arrives at his office and proceeds to look over his morning paper. In it he finds an account of how Herr Trigger, a scientist, has discovered a powerful explosive and that several foreign nations are bidding for the secret.

While he ponders over this a girl enters the office. She tells him that she is Gretchen, the daughter of Herr Trigger, and that she wants him to find her father, who has disappeared. She tells him of the discovery of the explosive, how her father's assistant tried to steal the formula, how Senor Frijoles and a Spanish girl called at the house to buy the secret on the previous day and how, the next morning, she found the laboratory wrecked and her father gone.

High Spigh takes the case and Gretchen takes him to her home where he finds a clue in the shape of a huge footprint. He follows the trail down the street till he runs into the owner of the foot, a big Mexican. On seeing the detective's badge the Mex runs. He seizes a bunch of toy balloons from a street vendor and floats off into the air with them.

High punctures the balloons with shots from his revolver. The Mex falls through a skylight into a room with his explosives. When the big Mex announces that the police are on their trail, the gang seize Herr Trigger and all dive through the trap in the wall, sliding through a subterranean passage to the river.

Meanwhile High leaps to the top of the building, drops through the skylight and finds himself in the den. There he carelessly drops one of the bombs and is blown up into the sky. He lands in the river from which he is rescued by Gretchen whom he sends to Frijoles' office to find the missing formula if possible.

Frijoles sends the gang to their cave with Herr Trigger while he and the Spanish girl go to his office. He stops to buy a cigar and she enters the office which is on the thirty-fifth floor of an office building, and finds Gretchen opening the safe. She and Gretchen have a fight with bowie knives which ends as a mouse runs across the floor and both girls jump on a desk and hug each other for safety. Frijoles enters and he and the Spanish girl lock Gretchen in the safe and push it out the window. High Spigh enters just in time to see this. He turns and runs down the thirty-five flights of stairs and reaches the grounds in time to catch the safe as it lands.

Releasing Gretchen, he sends her home and trails Frijoles, who orders a barrel of powder sent to the den. High hides in the barrel and arrives at the den. Frijoles and the Spanish girl capture Gretchen and take her to the den where they tie her and her father, set a fuse to the barrel of powder and leave them to their fate. Grtchen gets free, pushes the barrel down the mountain where it chases the gang up a tree. High comes out of the barrel and covers the gang with his gun. They try to resist and he shoots. A dissolve shows him at his desk, having dreamed of all this. His feet are on the desk in front of him, his gun in his hand. As he pulls the trigger he shoots his own toe, wakes up, and dances around the room holding his foot.

Hoel Kalloc, her betrothed, becomes jealous, and George marries her, after saving her from Hoel's brutality. He soon realizes her inferiority and the impossibility of introducing her as his wife; so he sends her to a convent to be educated, promising to send for her as soon as she has acquired the polish necessary in his sphere of life.

receives a note that a girl, who she has named after him, has been born to her. George later meets Cynthia Ford, with whom he falls in love, and on receiving word of the death of Renee and the baby in a fire in the convent, they become betrothed. However, during the following winter, Renee re-appears, and when George denies that he knows her, she leaves her baby in the care of her landlady and goes away. The next morning in the snow in front of their house the Crosbys find her body. Clutched in her hand is the crucifix George had given her, on the back of which had been scratched the word "pardon." The landlady identifies her as the mother of the baby who has been left in her care; and George, placing the crucifix around the baby's neck, pays the landlady to take care of her.

Four years pass and a daughter, Georgiana, is born to Cynthia and George. In the meantime, Georgette wanders away from the landlady's home and is adopted by a barge captain. Raoul Kerouac, now a French naval officer, comes to inquire for his lost sister, Renee. Seeing Cynthia's child, he mistakes her for Georgette. George writes a confession, revealing the truth; but Cynthia destroys the confession without reading it, on account of her faith in George.

Sixteen years later, George is now Judge Crosby, while Georgette has secretly married Val, the reprobate son of Mrs. Lewis, in whose home she is employed as a maid. In an effort to cure him of his love for drink, his mother sends Val away, and Georgette is left alone.

A girl is brought before Judge Crosby, charged with murdering her baby; and her conviction seems assured. Among the evidence is a crucifix with the word "pardon" scratched on the back. The judge is seized with apoplexy, as, realizing the pisoner is his daughter, he sentences her to death. He has pronounced his last sentence.

Cynthia's love for George survives all else; she strives to secure Georgette's freedom, and finally gets word to Val in the far north, whose answer states the baby is safe with him. Val returns with the baby, and he and Georgette sail for Brittany on their belated honeymoon. For the first time in years, George's heart is lightened, although his body is distorted with pain.

THE MASTER PASSION (Edison—Five Parts—Jan. 8).—The cast: Julia Long (Mabel Trunnelle); Jack Carter, her fiance (A. Lincoln); George Bender (Robert Conness); Mrs. Long (Helen Strickland); Prof. Alberto Martino (Richard Tucker); Vernon Devere, a valet (William Wadsworth); Marie Jardin (Ann Leonard); Ralph Carter (Raymond McKee); Cora Bender, Julia's daughter (Olive Wright); Le Duc de Lac (Bigelow Cooper). Directed by Richard Ridgely.

Goaded by ambition for wealth, and the pleas of her mother, Julia Long breaks her engagement with Jack Carter and marries George Bender, president of the National Bank. Her first years of married life are filled with happiness. Julia possesses a voice of more than usual merit, and Bender engages Prof. Alberto Martino to instruct her.

Martino becomes a frequent visitor, while Julia makes rapid strides with her singing. Bender, occupied with his work, seems to be unable to fulfill his duties to the home. Martino, taking advantage of Julia's loneliness, paints the great future that she might win through her wonderful voice. If she will but flee to Paris with him, he promises, the world will be at her feet.

Threatened by the father of a girl whom he has wronged, Martino is forced to flee, and Julia leaves her home and little daughter, Cora, to seek fame with the musician. Time passes and Julia is in Europe, alone and penniless, deserted by Martino. She is picked up unconscious on the steps of the Opera House where she has been seeking an engagement, and is carried into the dressing room of Marie Jardin, a famous prima donna. Mme. Jardin listens to her story and makes Julia her protege. Under her teaching Julia's voice develops rapidly and she commences to achieve success.

Eighteen years later, in America, Ralph Carter, the son of Julia's first sweetheart, and Cora Bender, Julia's daughter, whom she has deserted, are in love. Bender refuses to consent to the marriage and in an effort to make Cora forget, he arranges a trip to Europe.

At Monte Carlo, the Duc meets Bender and his party. Due to the workings of Julia's mother, Cora is forced to accept the Duc de Lac as her fiance. The Duc hastens to Julia to tell of his engagement to a rich American girl.

While out walking, Julia sees Bender with her mother and a young girl and realizes the girl must be her own daughter. She awaits an opportunity to meet Cora alone and confirms her identity. Cora, impressed by the talented lady, accepts her invitation to call. Cora's visits to Julia's dressing room become more and more frequent. Bender finds Julia's card in Cora's room and goes to the theater.

Julia, unable to restrain herself, tells Cora that she is her mother. Bender, coming into the room, finds them embracing each other. At first wrathful, he cannot withstand Cora's pleas, and he and Julia are reconciled. Julia discovers the rich American girl of whom the Duc spoke is her daughter. She orders him to break his engagement. In order to prevent the marriage, she threatens to reveal the relations that have existed between them. The Duc is defiant. Julia sacrifices herself and tells Bender the truth. Bender wreaks his wrath upon her, and, taking Cora, returns to America. BLACK HANDS AND SOAPSUDS (Jan. 15).—The cast: The cashier (Billie Rhodes); the engineer (Eddie Barry); the chief rubber (Harry Ham); the Englishman (George French); the proprietor (Harry Rattenberry). Scenario by W. E. Wing. Produced by Al. E. Christie.

In the "Scientific Scrubbery," there is rivalry between the head rubber and the engineer. The hand of the cashier is the prize for which they plot and counterplot. The engineer lets the mercury race up and down the tube, and the patrons fry and freeze while he lingers at the desk, until the rubber throws him bodily to the Stygian regions below. Even the proprietor, Prof. Steamem, is against the engineer, so he plans revenge.

An Englishman is wandering about the dormitory when he is seen to have a black hand imprinted on his back. The patrons thinking the Mafia is after the place, run in all directions through the plant, even alarming the women and adding them to the chase.

At the same time, the engineer pops a safety valve to give the effect of a bomb, and this adds a few feet to every jump they make. Bringing up in the engine room, they find that the engineer had caused all the trouble. They chase him out and leave the chief rubber and the cashier in each other's company. The "Scientific Scrubbery" in in piece again.

BITTER TRUTH—(5 Parts—Jan 15).—This picture opens on the big, helpless humanity which is huddled together in Blossom Street, in the East Side's slums. The sweetest spirit of the thousands dwelling there is Anne, in love with Jimmy Graves, a man she knows is a crook. In warning Jimmy one night that the police are on his trail, she is caught in the maelstrom, brought into court with him and sentenced to jail. When she is released she plots revenge on the man who put her behind the bars: Judge Marcus, about to be nominated for a higher position in public service.

Through a ruse, she obtains employment in the Marcus household. The judge does not recognize in his wife's secretary the same woman who was once just a "poor, Blossom Street thing." He finds that he is rapidly falling in love with her. Anne is approached by a stool-pigeon working for Marcus's political opponents, who are trying to fasten a scandal upon the judge. Anne promises to aid them.

She agrees to put him in a compromising position that evening, when witnesses will be on hand. Meantime, Jimmy Graves is released. He has been living through the years of his prison term, with the face of Anne always be-

THE MAN WHO FORGOT (Paragon—Five Parts—Jan. 15).—The cast: John Smith—The man (Robert Warwick); Mary Leslie—The woman (Gerda Holmes); Edith Mallon (Doris Kenyon); Al Simpson (Alex Shannon); Senator Mallon (Ralph Delmore); Cong. Mannersley (Frederick C. Truesdell); Charles Waller (J. Reinhart). Directed by Emilie Chautard.

The story opens in an opium den in China showing a white girl and two men suffering from the effects of the soul destroying drug. The younger man suddenly rises from his hard bench. Turning to his companions he cries out, "I am through with this life. I am going back to America and decency. Come, go with me." But the other two pay no attention to his words and he leaves alone.

After a hard struggle drowning a fierce desire for the drug by an over-indulgence in drink, he arrives in Cincinnati. He stumbles into a mission house and there comes to him the resolve to give up forever all drink. Unable to recall his name or anything about the past, he registers as John Smith. Realizing the havoc that "demon rum" makes of hearts and homes, John Smith devotes his life to the prohibition cause. He soon becomes a force in political affairs.

Among those most interested in seeing the liquor interests win out is Senator Mallon of Ohio, who has been elected by the Whiskey Trust. Mallon's daughter, Edith, is attracted by John Smith, and she sympathizes with his fight for the right. He, in turn, is won over by her charm and he longs to declare his love, but always present with him is that doubt as to his past life—who he is and where he came from.

The whiskey men finally decide to crush Smith socially. Mallon writes him a note stating that he and his daughter desire that all social relationship between them be discontinued. Smith only laughs at the note. Smith's companions in China drift to Washington. Through Simpson, the oppositions learn of Smith's life in the opium den and determine to make use of it. The Woman declares that Smith is her husband and tells of incidents to prove her statement. Edith is overcome to see the man she loves claimed by this depraved creature and begs Smith to deny that this is his wife, but sadly shaking his head, he says although he doesn't remember the woman, she may be right. He may have married her in the days back of memory.

The day of the great fight arrives. From all over the country comes a huge crowd summoned by Smith to plead for the prohibition cause. Through the streets of Washington they surge—up the Capitol steps—into the very Senate chamber—this great army of derelicts by their very presence, an unanswerable argument against whiskey. The voters are swayed by the remarkable crowd and John Smith's fight is won.

The woman, brought to a realization of the wrong she has done, rushes to Smith and confesses that she lied—that she is not his wife. She recalls to him conversation in which he told her of his mother and his early home life. Slowly Smith's memory returns—the past is recalled, and clasping Edith in his arms, he tells her that now that he can remember all, there is no longer any reason why they should remain apart

ART DRAMAS, INC.

THE RAINBOW (Sherrill Feature Corp.—Five Parts—Jan. 4).—Neil Sumner and his wife, Ruth, at the end of six years of married life, find that they are not suited to each other, and separate, the wife taking their small daughter, Cynthia. Dick Harcourt, Ruth's brother, a ne'er do well, who by the will of their father was the executor of her privately owned estate, squanders it in riotous living, and reaching the end of his resources, after losing quite a large sum of money to Neil Sumner, his brother-in-low, commits suicide. This brings an end to the married life of Ruth and Neil. She blames Neil for Dick's untimely end, and proceeds to get a divorce.

Neil falls in with a part of the so-called "fast set" in New York. During this period, Ruth has lived in London with Cynthia. Ruth determines to return to America. When Ruth's brother Dick committed suicide, he left a letter, addressed to the family lawyer, telling him that he had dissipated Ruth's entire fortune. The lawyer, who is a friend of Neil's tells him of this circumstance, and asks him what the outcome will be for Ruth. Neil generously offers to continue paying the dividends on all the stocks Ruth still supposes she owns, knowing nothing of the defalcation of her brother.

Ruth and Cynthia arrive in New York, and that same night Betsy, Neil's sister, who is very fond of Ruth, asks her if she will allow Cynthia to go with her to pay a short call to her father. Ruth consents, much to Cynthia's delight, and they arrive at Neil's house in the middle of a hilarious party, attended by some of his sporting friends. Neil decides to open his Port Washington home for the first time since Ruth has departed with the baby.

Coming back from the race one day, some of Neil's sporting friends meet Cynthia on the street, and some of them, knowing who she is, invite her to go with them to the Red Lion Inn for some refreshment. She, in her innocence, accepts. Neil, happening to pass the Red Lion, sees the party coming out. He takes her in his car with Mrs. Palmer, a lady whose name has been coupled with his in gossip, and takes her home. Ruth, reading in the town topics that same day some of the gossip connecting Neil with Mrs. Palmer's name, the lady he was riding with, decides that the only safe way is to get Cynthia and return to London.

Several months later Neil finds himself in London, where he also meets the family lawyer, Mr. Fellowes. Fellowes, who all these years has been trying to effect a reconciliation between Ruth and Neil, hits upon the happy idea of taking Neil to Ruth's home, determined there to tell Ruth that Neil, all these years, has been supporting her. While they are discussing the ways and means of fixing Ruth's fortune so that she may never know, she overhears their conversation. Cynthia, hearing her daddy's voice, rushes into the room and embraces him frantically, telling him that she is to be married the next day, and that she will go and bring her fiance for his approval. She does so, and when she enters with him, Neil has just finished making an unsuccessful plea to Ruth for the restoration of their happiness, and it is the sweet love of the young girl for both her mother and father that brings this beautiful play to a happy ending.

"GOD OF LITTLE CHILDREN."—(Apollo Pictures, Inc.—Jan. 18.)—The cast: Mary Keene (Alma Hanlon); John Ingalls (Bigelow Cooper); Robert Moran (Chas. Hutchinson); Hard Tack (William Hartman); "Sunshine" (Blanche Burns); Judkins (Jack Burns); Waters (Wm. Miller); Father Farley (James O'Neill).

Mary Keene did not realize that when placed in the office of John Ingalls to assist in carrying out Robert Moran's plot to secure Ingall's money she would spoil the whole scheme of things by falling in love with her big-hearted employer. Mary had always been "straight", in spite of her association with Moran and his band of blackmailers. But she had erred against man-made laws, though innocently, and fearing disgrace and prison if exposed by Moran she was compelled to assist in his nefarious schemes.

Moran discovered that Ingalls loved children, and that he lived a secluded, lonely life. Mary's advent in John Ingalls' life was for the purpose of introducing a supposed little sister of her's into the Ingalls' home and through this child, thoroughly trained for the task assigned her, ultimately reach Ingalls' store of wealth.

Moran's plans were successful until Mary began to realize she loved Ingalls and rebelled against further deception. Ingalls loved Mary and offered her his hand. The wedding ceremony was simple but pretty. Meanwhile, Moran had been planning along different lines. Why not force Mary to get a large sum from her husband and leave with him for foreign shores? Moran has long coveted Mary and he believes this his opportunity.

Mary, for once in her bitter life, enjoys the utmost happiness. This joy is increased by the realization that she is soon to become a mother. Time has flown backward ten years in the life of John Ingalls. He feels the blood of young manhood coursing through his veins. Soon Moran presents his plan to Mary, who pleads with Moran to have pity and leave her in peace; but there is no alternative—she must go or see herself and husband disgraced by Moran's exposure. At home, Mary ponders long over her duty. She looks out on the placid lake from her window and with a prayer to the "God of Little Children," decides to give up the struggle and end her life. Moran, meanwhile, has plotted carefully. For a few dollars "Hard Tack," his willing accomplice, will put John Ingalls out of the way. The public will believe he committed suicide because his wife deserted him. The note she writes upon leaving will be found beside the body. Then with John Ingalls' widow in his power nothing shall come between Robert Moran and a fortune.

Seated in his library, John Ingalls little dreamed that the hand of an assassin was near. Beside the lake Mary is about to end her life. She looks up at the library window with a silent prayer to Ingalls not to misjudge when she sees a crouching figure, holding a pistol, silhouetted against the blind. Mary rushes into the house and reaches his side just in time to divert the bullet from Hard Tack's weapon. Ingalls conquers Hard Tack, who is hurled through a window. He is killed by his fall.

Moran, waiting outside for Mary to meet him according to promise, overhears the pistol shot and, becoming alarmed at Hard Tack's long absence, boldly comes into the library, revolver in hand. Mary, seeing Moran and believing Ingalls' life again in danger, takes aim with the gun she picks up and fires at Moran. He falls dead, the bullet piercing his heart. The story ends happily.

THE MAN OF MYSTERY—(Five Parts—Jan. 8).—The cast: David Angelo (E. H. Sothern); Clara Angelo (Charlotte Ives); Mme. Brunschaut (Vilda Vares); Baron Rocco (Mr. Roberto); Pietro Stroggi (Brinsley Shaw); Signor Casa (Mr. Siegel). Directed by Fred Thompson.

Clara Angelo does not really love her husband, David, a distinguished Roman banker, who is old, ugly and bent. Unknown to her husband, her mother, Mrs. Brunschaut, has involved her in a foreign conspiracy, in order that she may add to the extravagance of her living. David Angelo becomes aware of the intrigue, but before he can discover just what it is, he is called to Naples on business. He leaves his fortune in care of his partner, Stroggi, to be given to Mrs. Angelo in case anything happens to him.

On his trip back home he stops to see Vesuvius, and is caught by a sudden eruption and smothered under the hot ashes. He is, however, rescued, and under the treatment of a great scientist, is restored to health; his physical disabilities have also been removed; and he is straight and rejuvenated in appearance; so much so that the doctor tells him he would not be believed if he declared himself to be David Angele; and he decides to let the world believe that he is dead.

He returns to Rome and startles the national treasurer by his brilliant suggestions in connection with finance, spies on the conspirators who are seeking to compromise his wife, is introduced in his own home without being recognized, and prevents his wife's fortune being stolen by his former partner. He also wins his wife's love, and, upon consenting to marry him, she rejoices to learn that he is really the supposedly dead David Angelo.

THE SECRET KINGDOM—(Episode No. 4—"The Honorable Mr. Oxenham"—Two Parts—Jan. 22).—Phillip reaches New York, and finds that Julia is stopping with the Manwarings on Fifth avenue, whose home faces the hotel at which he is stopping. Madam Savatz tracks Phillip to New York, where she meets the "Hon. Mr. Oxenham," an old friend of hers, of questionable repute. The two conspirators engage a band of thugs to get the sealed packet and take Phillip's life.

Madam Savatz warns Princess Julia that Phillip is an imposter seeking to claim her father's throne, and shows her a cablegram from Simond, her father, proving the truth of this statement, and ordering Princess Julia to cease relations with Phillip. Julia, already deeply in love with Phillip, is greviously hurt; but she dismisses Phillip, who is puzzled at this sudden coldness. He tries to see her again, and when Julia refuses, the young Manwaring boy, taking compassion on Phillip, tells him that Julia is a prin-

Despairing, Phillip leaves, and outside is waylaid and beaten by a gang under the direction of Savatz; while Oxenham, gaining entrance to Phillip's apartments, steals the sealed packet. Phillip is taken into the Manwaring home, and is nursed back to health again by Julia. Oxenham delivers the sealed packet to Savatz; she turns it over to Julia, who, in turn, gives it to Phillip whom she loves and trusts.

Are you always satisfied with the results you get on the screen? Does your light flicker? Any trouble keeping it focused? Do your dense films always come up clear and bright? How about the colored ones?

You've been using alternating current. Perhaps it's the only kind available in your town. Then change it over to direct current with a

Julia employs Savatz as her maid, upon instructions from her father. Savatz and Oxenham attempt again to steal the sealed packet by rifling the Manwaring safe. They are surprised at work by Julia, who is rescued from them by Phillip. A policeman recognizes Mr Oxenham as a notorious yeggman and takes him off.

THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN—(Jan. 8).—Seven Parts.—The cast: Robert, Earl of Dunstable (Warren Cook); the Countess of Dunstable (Kathryn Browne Decker); Pitcairn (Ed Roseman); the dominie (Joel Day) Jamie Campbell (Matt Moore) Marget MacTavish, the pride of the clan (Mary Pickford).

Among the simple fisher-folk of a little island on the west coast of Scotland lives MacTavish, head of a clan. Here he rules as a chieftain and his word is law. One day a hurricane sweeps across the Hebrides and the fishermen turn their boats to the inlet for shelter. On the shore the women and children watch the fight of their men with the waves. Among those who wait is Margaret MacTavish, who sees her father's boat dashed to pieces in the roaring surf. A party of men headed by Jamie Campbell, try to rescue the old chieftain but the waves close over him before they can reach the battling craft. With MacTavish lost, according to the law of the island the succession of authority passes to his daughter, Marget, just eighteen.

She, with a spirit of kindness and in a tender, sweet and girlish way, rules the fishermen and their families. Her disposition wins them. Jamie Campbell, a young fisherman, has won Marget's heart. Jamie has always been regarded as the son of Mrs. Campbell, one of the clan. The old lady realizing that Jamie is reaching his twenty-first birthday feels that she cannot keep her secret longer. So she writes to the Countess of Dunstable that the baby of her first marriage, which she left with the old woman of the island, did not die but had grown to be a fine young man, and is now known as Jamie Campbell.

The Countess accompanied by her husband starts out to seek her son. It is on the eve of Jamie's betrothal to Marget that the Countess finds the young man and tells him of his real identity. She swears him to secrecy even from his own sweetheart. The Countess goes to watch the quaint betrothal ceremony of her son and Marget. Meeting him they are seen by those who do not know the relation to embrace and this fact is told to Marget. The disappearance of the Countess has aroused the suspicions of the Earl, and he, having learned of her secret meeting with Jamie and not knowing the relation, confronts her. The wife breaks down and confesses that the young man is her son.

There having been no children by the second marriage the Earl is delighted with the news and at once starts to plan for Jamie's future. The Earl, however, means that Jamie shall cut loose from all of his former associates. He pursuades Marget to believe that she is an obstacle to Jamie's future and she reluctantly decides to make the sacrifice and give up her sweetheart. As chief of the clan, Marget commands him to leave.

Jamie with heart torn asunder departs for his mother's yacht. Marget decides to sail out to somewhere in the west where her father and his father were wont to sail with the fishing boats. Before she cuts the ropes that hold the frail old hulk in which she lives to the island shore she sets ashore her pets and writes a note, places it on the strap collar of her favored little goat, and sends it abroad. Grouchy, gloomy Pitcairn, the village atheist who feared no one and hated himself, has always refused to obey the rulings of Marget. Pitcairn is in a troubled sleep the night Marget cuts loose in her unseaworthy craft, and in a wakeful moment he hears the bleating of the goat at his door.

He is about to drive the animal away when he finds the note Marget has written. Looking seaward he sees the old craft tossing in the sea and he realizes what has happened. The village is aroused and the church bell set to ringing. Down to the surf line rush the people. Pitcairn sends a messenger to the yacht to get Jamie. Lowering a boat he rushes to the hulk and just as the waters are closing in on the cabin he rescues his sweetheart and the atheist falls to his knees and utters a prayer for the first time in his life. Jamie takes Marget back to the yacht, a reconciliation between the girl and the Earl follows and the dreams of the courtship begin all over again but they are real dreams because they have come true.

THE WHITE RAVEN—(Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—Jan. 15). The cast: Nan Baldwin (Ethel Barrymore); "The Stranger" (William B. Davidson) John Blaisdell (Walter Hitchcock); Sylvia Blaisdell (Ethel Dayton); Arthur Smithson, clerk (George A. Wright); Mrs. Smithson (Viola Fortescue); "Bill" Baldwin, Nan's father (H. H. Pattee); opera impresario (Mario Majeroni), dance hall proprietor (Phil Sandford); miner (Ned Finlay). Adapted and directed by George Baker.

William Baldwin, ruined in business by his partner, John Blaisdell, implores Blaisdell's aid, and receives in answer a five-dollar bill across the face of which is written, "Send this for a gun and use it on yourself." Hopelessly, Baldwin and his daughter, Nan, go to the Yukon, where the father soon dies, and the daughter earns a living in a rough dance-hall, where as "Nightingale Nan" she is the idol of the miners.

When Nan discovers that the little claim on Bear creek, the only thing her father has left her, is worthless, she at first collapses. Then she becomes defiant, and tells the miners who have been forcing their attentions upon her that they may have her, the lucky man to be the winner in a card game, she to take the money won in the game and go away to seek fame and fortune. A bearded stranger wins the game with a pair of deuces, pays her $1,000 a card, and she leaves with him for her cabin. Once there, however, she repents her rash bargain, and implores him to release her, offering the money in return. He makes her sign an I. O. U. for herself, promising to pay the debt at any time in the future that he may see fit. "You'll win success," the stranger tells her, "but in the hour of your greatest triumph I shall claim you, and you must return." She leaves on this condition.

Nan's voice wins success for her all over the world. As Mlle. Nanon Boldini five years later she is the reigning operatic queen at La Scala, Milan, and then comes to the Metropolitan opera house, New York, to make her American debut in "Lucia di Lammermoor." Her success is instantaneous. Two of the most important patrons of the opera house, John Blaisdell and James Van Brunt, business rivals, are united in their admiration of Mlle. Boldini, and obtain an introduction.

When Nan discovers the identity of Blaisdell, the man who ruined her father, she says nothing, but quietly plans his downfall. She encourages his attention, even at the risk of displeasing a young stranger with whom she has fallen in love. She refuses an offer of marriage from the man who has won her heart, telling him of her promise made under amazing conditions to a man in Alaska five years ago. That promise, she tells him, must be fulfilled, no matter how great the sacrifice she makes in doing so.

Inviting Blaisdell to her apartment to dinner, she has a telephone connection so arranged that James Van Brunt, at his downtown office with the receiver at his ear, hears Blaisdell's answers to the carefully prepared questions Nan asks, betraying all his business secrets. As Blaisdell falls across the table in a drunken stupor, after having told everything, Nan's triumph is complete. It is at this moment that two fateful cards, the deuces with which the Alaskan won his game, are thrust under the door, and Nan falls fainting.

Next day she prepares for her journey to the northland, ready to pay the price of her five years' freedom. The man she loves insists on accompanying her. Going to her little cabin, she finds it sumptuously furnished. As she turns to her lover in surprise, he places on the tabel a crumpled "I. O. U.", then tears it in two, giving her the pieces. As the realization slowly dawns on Nan that the man she has learned to love is the bearded stranger of so long ago, she fits the two pieces of the "I O U." together again, and presenting them to him, creeps into the arms of her stranger-lover.

THE GREAT SECRET—(Chapter IV—"From Sunshine to Shadows"—Two Parts—Jan. 15.—Just as Strong leaves the apartment the telephone rings, and he returns. On the other end of the wire is Chief of Detectives Ackerton, who tells him he is on his way to the apartment. Strong waits for him and while doing so discovers that the casket has been stolen. He begins berating Wee See, who explains that he tried to tell him of the theft when he first returned, but that he had stopped up his ears and refused to listen. The Chinaman tells how he took the treasure out of the casket and substituted a slip with Chinese writing on it. Just then Ackerton and his assistant reach the building and the gangsters waiting outside flee.

Strong, when the detectives visit the apartment, tells of the theft and Ackerton takes charge of the treasure which Wee See saved. Ackerton finds on the floor a note written to "Chug" and signed "G. M." which orders him to visit a masquerade ball that evening and receive instructions regarding Beverly and the casket. Strong, still disguised as "Chug", and Ackerton attend the ball, while Ackerton's assistant takes charge of "Chug".

At the ball they receive information as to the whereabouts of Beverly, who is held in a den of the kidnappers. Strong and Wee See hurry there while Ackerton goes to summon the police. Strong locates Beverly in a room on the upper floor of the place. When he is trying to rescue her the gangsters, headed by the real "Chug" appears. "Chug", while on his way to prison has knocked down Ackerton's assistant and escaped, making straight for the den. The gangsters are eager to set on Strong in a body, but "Chug" insists that he can whip the clubman alone. Just then Strong hears Beverly calling for help. He throws off his coat and makes ready to fight the band.

TO OUR ADVERTISERS

Past Present and Future

IT HAS always been a source of constant satisfaction to the management and staff of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to know that not one dollar's worth of business for this publication has ever been secured by MISREPRESENTATION. No member of our staff has ever been expected to violate—nor has he violated—his conscience by attempting to secure business through any misstatement of actual conditions.

This paper has never carried a line of business placed because of claims of an actual weekly circulation of thousands of copies more than the gross number actually printed. It has never been called upon to defend itself, either in the courts or in the office of some irate advertiser, against the charge that thousands of expensive colored inserts had been consigned to the scrap heap because they were not required in an edition less by thousands than the advertiser had been led to expect would be printed.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has never had a page of advertising secured through deliberate and wilful MISREPRESENTATION in regard to any other publications.

At no time has the MOVING PICTURE WORLD attempted to secure business—either subscriptions or advertising—by false intimations that we especially represented any particular branch of the motion picture industry or that we were the official mouthpiece of either the organized or unorganized exhibitor.

We have given the biggest and best value in the field of motion picture trade publications, and are doing it today, as every experienced moving picture publicity man knows.

Whatever business we may carry in this new year or in the years to come, let us assure you, will be carried with that same satisfaction of knowing that it has been secured absolutely without MISREPRESENTATION.

PEARL OF THE ARMY—NO. 7—("For the Stars and Stripes"—Astra—Two Parts—Jan 14.)—Adams, to win the confidence of the Boleroists, feigns hatred of the U. Bolero grants Toko a passport, but keeps Bertha a "guest." The bandit plans a party and, seeing Pearl coming, makes her join it. Tipped off by Bertha that Bolero has the plans, she "stoops to conquer" and while the Grenadians are carousing, Pearl, unnoticed, takes the plans from Bolero.

Finally trapped, "Chick" is "sent up" and Molly's promise to wait for him is the one ray of sunshine in his gloomy existence. Given freedom and a chance, Chick happily married to Molly, leads the straight and narrow path. Back to his old tricks, Benny, wounded in a necklace robbery, eludes the police with his loot and makes his way to his former pal's flat. Although realizing the danger to his home, Chick, for the sake of his boyhood pal, conceals Benny in the attic, but without a doctor's care the wound proves fatal. With the help of his old pals, the body is disposed of, but the police suspect and watch Chick's flat constantly.

Later, to his surprise, Chick discovers that Molly's brother, a drug victim, had, unobserved, taken the stolen necklace from the wounded Benny. They decide to tell the authorities, but before they have an opportunity, Molly's brother is arrested. Trying to square things, Chick is double crossed by a detective, who tries to arrest him for the robbery, but is prevented by Molly's quick action. While on their way to make a clean breast of everything a police official, disguised as a chauffeur, ensnares and takes them to police headquarters. Faced with the seriousness of the penalty, Chick asks for leniency for Molly, about to become a mother. The chief, having the necklace and realizing what conviction means, is softened by the news that he himself is the father of a baby boy and for the sake of the young couple's happiness, he releases them.

TRUTHFUL TULLIVER (Kay Bee—Five Parts—Jan. 7).—The cast: "Truthful" Tulliver (W. S. Hart); Grace Burton (Alma Reubens); York Cantrell (Norbert A. Myles); Daisy Burton (Nina Byron); "Silver Lode" Thompson (Walter Perry); "Deacon" Doyle (Milton Ross).

Truthful Tulliver, a Westerner and a journeying newspaperman, followed by Silver Lode Thompson, printer and compositor, arrives in Glory Hole to start a newspaper. He is visited by York Cantrell, an Easterner, whose mining interests keep him in the vicinity. They stand at the office window watching two sisters, Grace and Daisy Burton.

The girls are insulted by men hanging around the Forty Rod saloon and dance hall, run by "Deacon" Doyle and secretly owned by York Cantrell. Tulliver rushes to their assistance and incurs the enmity of Doyle. The next day Truthful states, under big headlines, that Doyle must go, and the following morning finds a notice on his door that Doyle will be in the Forty Rod Saloon at ten o'clock, and there is not a penpusher in Arizona that can run him out of town. Truthful surprises Doyle and his henchmen by coming into the saloon through a rear door, and, from his horse, lassoes and pulls them out into the desert, where he tells them never to return to Glory Hole.

That night Truthful is shot at from York Cantrell's room by Doyle, who has returned. Truthful then drives both from town, not knowing that York has wronged Daisy Burton. Daisy confesses to Grace, and Grace finds Truthful, who, misunderstanding, thinks she is the one who cares for Cantrell. He promises to bring him back, and reaches the railroad, intercepts Cantrell, and forces him to return.

Then understanding comes. Cantrell wants to marry Daisy and live a new life, and Truthful comprehends his mistake. Grace turns toward him, with her thanks and relief, and sees him watching her with such eloquent eyes that hers fall for a moment. Then she comes to him and with happy faces, hands clasped, they see York Cantrell married to the sister, and as the priest blesses them, Truthful clasps her close.

THE WEAKER SEX (Kay Bee—Five Parts—Jan. 7).—The cast: Ruth Tilden (Dorothy Dalton); Jack Harding (Charles Ray); Annette Loti (Louise Glaum); Raoul Bozen (Robert McKim); John Harding (Charles K. French); Marjory Lawton (Margaret Thompson); Edward Tilden (J. Barney Sherry); Mary Wheeler (Nona Thomas).

Ruth Tilden, the daughter of an able jurist, appears for the defense in a seemingly hopeless case in which a woman is tried for the murder of her lover. The woman had confessed her crime and the District Attorney, John Harding, is confident of a verdict for the state.

By an impassioned appeal, Ruth wins. John Harding loses his case, but admiration growing into love wins the hand of Ruth. John wishes to shield Ruth from all the worry and struggles of life, and this means for Ruth the end of a career. She feels that she is only a plaything for his idle hours; a flower in a hothouse.

John Harding, by a previous marriage, has a son, Jack. The boy, barely twenty years of age, has inherited a fortune from his maternal grandfather, and John allows him full liberty, believing the boy's common sense and training will prevent him from getting into serious trouble.

Jack becomes entangled with a cabaret singer. Annette, who has both brains and beauty, but no morals and an evil past. The past is shared by one Raoul Bozen. Annette has spread her toils so that Jack's fortune is in her grasp, when a pistol shot ends her life.

Jack is arrested, and circumstantial evidence is against him. His father is compelled to prosecute his own son. Ruth, who comes to the rescue, is retained for the defense. In a masterly cross-examination, she convicts Raoul Bozen, wins a verdict against her husband, and restores his son to him

THE MORE OPERATORS KNOW ABOUT PROJECTION, THE MORE EAGER THEY BECOME TO USE "SPEER CARBONS"

THE improvement of the projection is the paramount duty thrust upon every operator in the motion picture industry today.

NO matter how elaborate the films—the picture must be properly projected to produce the desired result.

THE latest development to delight the operator, and improve his projection is the Speer "HOLD-ARK," hard core, metal coated, lower carbons.

OPERATORS and experts declare it the greatest carbon achievement since the introduction of the motion picture industry.

THE hard core assures positive steadiness of the arc,—the metal coating affords additional current carrying capacity—the combination provides an ideal negative carbon.

SPEER solid, cored and "HOLD-ARK" carbons afford any desired combiantion and meet the most exacting conditions.

ON either D.C. or A.C. current—the light producing qualities can not be surpassed.

THE public is extremely critical—a bright, flickerless picture is demanded.

WHERE the exhibitor does not meet the requirements of his patrons, he finds the attendance diminishing.

CONSEQUENTLY every effort is put forth in an endeavor to please and satisfy. The operator hoping to do his part, sets about to improve conditions—naturally he delights in his achievements.

THE first fact he notes is that the correct carbons are most essential to improved projections.

BEING familiar with carbon faults, he rejoices in the recent developments of the SPEER LABORATORIES, and feels confident further advancement has been made in carbon qualities.

AS a progressive operator he demands improvements, and immediately becomes a regular user of "SPEER CARBONS."

HAVING adopted a carbon that is most satisfactory in every particular, he looks over his past experiences and feels that he has passed into a new atmosphere.

IT is an atmosphere of advanced thot, broad limitations and new ideas on projector carbons.

WHEN "SPEER CARBONS" were first conceived, materials were selected according to quality and with a total disregard to price.

THIS policy still prevails only it is being elevated and intensified.

RESEARCH, test, refinement and quality are the watchwords of the Speer engineers and experts.

THIS is why the performance of "SPEER CARBONS" is unapproachable. It demonstrates clearly that the "SPEER" is the incomparable carbon of the present day.

ULTIMATELY every exhibitor will adopt "SPEER CARBONS"—why hesitate—delays are serious—Place your order today.

NEW YORK AMERICAN—

SUBSEA FILM LIMIT OF THE MARVELOUS

Cinemasterpiece, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," at the Broadway, Shows How Man Is Fast Encroaching on the Realms of Nature.

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

THE limit of the marvelous! Such, in brief is my estimate of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," the cinemasterpiece that is now attracting the public attention at the Broadway Theatre.

Jules Verne was the possessor of one of the most amazing imaginations ever known and but little inferior to the imagination of the distinguished Frenchman is that of Mr. Stuart Paton who from Verne's famous novel produced the wonderful combination of pictures I saw last night at the Broadway Theatre.

The eight reels are full of such thrills as are to be found nowhere else. I say this deliberately. There is no end to thrills. They are as thick as leaves in the Summer forest. But there are thrills and thrills—thrills that affect the nerves mainly and thrills that reach and electrify the mind.

It is the latter sort of excitement that abounds in "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"—the excitement of the Man within the Man, the Man who thinks and peers into the mysteries of things and wonders at the miracles he runs across.

NO TIME FOR WHOOPS.

In looking at the pictures in "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" one does not feel like raising the war whoop and scalping a. creation and the rest of mankind. He is just interested — deeply absorbingly

Photo Plays

BOADWAY THEATRE.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company's eight-part feature photo drama, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," is smashing all movie box office records at the Broadway Theatre where it will begin the third week of its run to-day.

The thrilling and amazing scenes photographed at the bottom of the ocean add sufficient story to satisfy the masses of photo-play "fans." Then too there is an unusual quantity of scientific knowledge to be derived from the picture. The mysteries of the sea are to a large extent graphically displayed and in such a manner as appeals to old and young alike.

their native haunts upon the ocean's bed and engages in combat with tigers of the deep. Captain Nemo the hero of Verne's imaginative tale is shown in many adventures aboard his submarine Nautilus. His rescue of a pearl diver who becomes ensnared in the terrible tentacles of a giant octopus, is one of the many marvels of realization shown in this remarkable photo-play. Then there is love interest when the "Child of Nature" is discovered on the "Mysterious Island" by Lieutenant Bond, and the two are finally rescued by Captain Nemo who learns that she is his daughter, the Princess Illia who was abducted several years before and for which abduction Nemo is partly driven to seek that revenge which supplied the basis for Jules Verne's story.

highly interested that, for the time being he is part of the picture. He has no time to raise the war whoop or to jump up and down like a fellow with hot coals down his back; he is too busy looking at the picture.

Aside from the scientific interest the picture there is about it a deep human interest centering about Captain Nemo and his daughter, the Child of Nature. Charles Lieutenant and Lieutenant Bond of the U. S. Navy.

How beautiful is the romance of Lieutenant and the Child of Nature, and wonderfully human is the story of Captain Nemo the wizard of the sea whose heart is far more than his occupation as submarine sea-rover would at first seem to indicate.

The full story of how he came to leave his princely home in the Orient to become the commander of the terrible undersea craft is not to be told here. The cold type cannot do it justice. It has to be seen in photo-drama itself in order to be properly appreciated.

Speaking of THE ILLS those who have seen the picture can never forget the one that came to them in the sinking of Denver's yacht by the Nautilus—Denver the scoundrel, possessor of the code of honor, contrasted the courteous and kind hearted East Indian Prince into the Captain Nemo of the Monster of the Sea.

VALUABLE AS EDUCATOR

Taken all in all 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea the first and only submarine photo-drama bids fair to become if I may be allowed the expression a "howling success."

In its line it has no competitor. In the strictest sense of the word it is unique having no fellow anywhere.

Last but by no means least comes the fact that the picture is immensely valuable as an educator.

When Jules Verne wrote the novel from which the picture is produced all the world wondered at the author's brilliant and versatile fancy. "Great snakes!" everybody cried out. "That fellow is crazy." Brilliant as he is in his imagination he is as mad as a March hare.

But fifty years after Jules Verne's book was given to the world we see its predictions more than fulfilled. The wild fancy of the brilliant Frenchman has become everyday reality a reality so familiar that all of us have ceased to wonder.

In looking at "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" the spectator is led to ask himself the question: Is there any limit to man's inventive genius, any end to the achievements of his God-like brain? Will not man go on from triumph to triumph until he has Nature completely under his control? Until the words "Miracle" shall have been eliminated from the vocabularies on the ground that everything will have become miraculous?

EVENING WORLD

JULES VERNE DRAMA DRAWS BIG THRONGS

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company's eight part feature photo-drama, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," is making records at the Broadway Theatre, where it will begin the third week of its run to-day. The thrilling scenes photographed at the bottom of the ocean have attracted much attention. Then, too, there is an unusual quantity of scientific knowledge to be derived from the picture.

The mysteries of the sea are to a large extent graphically displayed. Fishes of many sort are seen in their native waters, while men walk upon the ocean's bed and engage in combat with tigers of the deep.

Capt. Nemo, the hero of Verne's imaginative tale, is shown in many adventures aboard his submarine, the Nautilus. His rescue of a pearl diver who becomes ensnared in the tentacles of a giant octopus is one of the big scenes in this spectacle. There is a strong love interest when the "Child of Nature" is discovered on the "Mysterious Island" by Lieut Bond, and the two are finally rescued by Capt Nemo, who learns that she is his daughter, the Princess Illia, who was abducted several years before and for which abduction Nemo is partly driven to seek that revenge which supplied the basis for Jules Verne's story.

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

In response to the advertisements published in the Motion Picture News, Moving Picture World, and other Film Trade publications last week we have been swamped with inquiries and communications on State Rights on "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA."

Two of the biggest State Rights Buyers in America, who made a special flying trip to New York to buy this production were given evidence extraordinary (without any talk) by simply viewing the jamming, cramming throngs, three times daily, fighting their way into the Broadway Theatre where this production is now playing. Already the following states have been sold: S. Carolina—Georgia—Alabama—Mississippi—Tennessee—Arkansas—Florida—Texas and Louisiana—Maine—New Hampshire—Vermont—Massachusetts—Rhode Island and Connecticut—Illinois—Wisconsin—Minnesota—North Dakota—South Dakota—Montana—and arrangements pending for other territory.

Now Playing to S.R.O.
At the BROADWAY, New York City

If every State Rights Buyer could but see the surging mass of humanity three times daily, 2:15, 4:30 and 8:15 P. M., at the Broadway Theatre, cramming and jamming their way in to see this remarkable film drama, there wouldn't be a State open for sale in five minutes after viewing this sight. Every House record at the Broadway has been smashed in point of attendance and receipts. For the weeks of Dec. 25 to 31st and 1st to 7th the Broadway took in over $21,000 in cash, and a stream of cash has been and is NOW pouring into the Box Office of the Broadway Daily. THAT'S THE ANSWER, MR. STATE RIGHTS BUYER. Ask for a copy of the elaborate Ad Campaign book that tells HOW to get the big money in ANY city or town like it was gotten in Chicago and New York. MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

JANUARY 27, 1917

A NEW EDITION OF "DAMAGED GOODS" RELEASED FEB. 12th

A NEW edition of Mutual's famous success, "Damaged Goods," is to be released on February 12th. The story as produced by the American Film Company, Inc., has been revised and re-edited. There is a new introduction and a new conclusion. The prints are all new. The new edition of "Damaged Goods" is even more interest-compelling and powerful in its new form. It is better than the original.

Richard Bennett Featured.

Richard Bennett is the star of "The New Edition of Damaged Goods." In this play, on the stage, he achieved his first triumph. In the original edition of the film he scored an even greater success. Now in the new edition he is certain to attain still greater fame. The original "Damaged Goods" broke box-office records at numerous theatres. Admission prices of 25c and 50c prevailed during the first showing. The same prices can easily be obtained with the new edition. Theatres which ran the first edition will find the new edition an even greater money-maker. Exhibitors in large cities can obtain this "New Edition of Damaged Goods" for long runs as a pre-release by special arrangement. For full information see the nearest Mutual Film Exchange.

"Featurettes" Will Aid Mutual Exhibitors

"Featurettes" are the latest thing in filmdom. What the "Tabloid" is to musical comedy, "Featurettes" are to feature photoplays. Frankly, "Featurettes" is a new word coined by the Mutual Film Corporation as a name for its one and two-reel guaranteed features. "Every reel a feature" is the new Mutual policy. Effective the week of January 1, eight "Featurettes" will be offered the exhibitor every week through the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges. The "Featurettes" for the first week are "Mutual Tours Around the World," "Mutual Weekly," "See America First," George Ovey "Cub Comedies," "Uncle Sam's Defenders," "Vogue Comedies" and "Reel Life." Eight reels of guaranteed quality productions. By booking "Featurettes" regularly and playing them the same night each week, the exhibitor can build up a steady patronage.

Mutual Film Corporation has arranged for a new series of Featurettes. Monogram Films is the producer. Shorty Hamilton is the star. The first is released on January 15th. They follow weekly thereafter. Booking now at all Mutual Exchanges.

NINTH CHAPLIN-MUTUAL

Presenting World Famous Comedian in New Antics

ENTITLED "EASY STREET"

At last it's ready. The ninth of the Chaplin-Mutual Specials. It's entitled "Easy Street." It's plot is nothing short of a riot. Charlie Chaplin proves able again to create something wholly new—wholly different—from anything he has done in the past. To be sure the famous hat, the funny cane, and the world renowned shoes are again in evidence. But the "business" is all new. And it's even funnier than the antics perpetrated in the past by this peer of all comedians. Charlie discovers "Easy Street" to be one of the most disorderly thoroughfares in all the world. Not even the cop on the beat can maintain order there. Then and there Charlie undertakes to reform the neighborhood. The method he takes and the success he achieves are unfolded in a thousand laughs in "Easy Street." The Chaplin-Mutual Specials now playing are "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "One A. M.," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen" and "The Rink." Bookings can be made at any Mutual Exchange.

Mutual Chapterplay Opens New Theatres

No less than five new theatres were opened last week with the newest Helen Holmes-Mutual Chapterplay—"A Lass of the Lumberlands," as the initial attraction. The wisdom of the management in selecting this popular chapterplay as the feature of the opening is proven by the fact that capacity business was the rule at every house.

MARIE CAHILL HAS BEEN ADDED TO LIST OF MUTUAL STARS

THERE'S another new name on the roster of Mutual stars. Marie Cahill is the latest acquisition. This popular stage favorite is too well known both to exhibitors and public to require an introduction. She has delighted millions with her cleverness. More than one theatrical production has ridden to success solely because Marie Cahill was one of its featured principals. As a comedienne Miss Cahill has few equals.

Star of "Marrying Mary."

Perhaps it was in "Marrying Mary" that Marie Cahill attained most note. In that vehicle she scored one of the greatest triumphs ever achieved by a star. Marie Cahill became a "hit" in an instant. Her name is today a household word. She is known everywhere. The theatre able to present her in Cahill-Mutual Photoplays is assured of success. For her blonde beauty, sunny smile and winsome personality are just as pronounced in Cahill-Mutual Photoplays as they were when she was starring on the speaking stage.

Twelve 2-Reel Photoplays.

Miss Cahill has been signed to appear in twelve two-reel Cahill-Mutual Photoplays. This series of unusual comedies will be released every other week over a period of twenty-four weeks. The utmost care is being taken with each and every production. All the typical Cahill mannerisms are being taken full advantage of. The plays were specially written for her. They are sure to make her even more popular as a screen star than she was on the musical comedy or vaudeville stage. The date of release for the first of the Cahill-Mutual Photoplays will be announced shortly. Exhibitors are requested to make reservations now at their nearest Mutual Exchange.

"Girl Reporters" in Tremendous Demand

Reports from Mutual Film Exchanges all over the United States indicate big success for the new Mutual serial, "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." Advance bookings have been heavy. The fact that a series of newspaper stories is at last available in film caused many exhibitors to act. Newspaper tales have long been a favorite form of magazine fiction. Now in screen form an even larger audience will be entertained. "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" was produced by Niagara Film Studios. Any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges can arrange bookings.

Another New Mutual Star

MARIE CAHILL

CONTINUING its policy of "Big Stars Only" for 1917, the Mutual Film Corporation announces the early appearance of Miss Marie Cahill in Cahill-Mutual Photoplays. This popular stage favorite is too well known to require an introduction either to exhibitors or to playgoers.

For several years she has been known as one of Broadway's most successful stars. In "Marrying Mary" she scored one of the greatest personal triumphs ever achieved by a player. Now her sunny smile, blonde beauty and winsome personality are to be offered theatres everywhere in Cahill-Mutual Photoplays. Miss Cahill will appear in a series of twelve two-reel Mutual Photoplays. They will be released every other week for twenty-four weeks. The date of release for the first Cahill-Mutual Photoplay will be announced shortly. Exhibitors are requested to make reservations now at the 68 Mutual Exchanges.

"TAILOR'S TRIMMINGS"

TWO REELS RELEASED JANUARY 21st

FEATURING RUBE MILLER

A RAPIDLY moving street-car furnishes the locale for most of the scenes in this Vogue Comedy. As conductor and motorman of this wandering equipage Rube Miller and Owen Evans are provided with some unusual opportunities for fun making. After robbing a country bank they disguise themselves in the uniforms and proceed to conduct themselves as no conductor or motorman ever acted before. They flirt outrageously with the feminine passengers and wind up in a tailorshop, where, as animated dummies, they provide even more fun. Ere the subject ends the audience discovers them back on the street-car again, attempting to escape from an auto load of police called to quell the riot in the tailorshop. This Vogue Comedy fairly scintillates with real humor and is also marked by the performance of several seemingly impossible feats. Vogue Comedies are real business builders. They add the final touch of lightness to your program. Bookings can be made at any Mutual Exchange.

The Principle of Cub Comedies

More now than ever, exhibitors are selecting their comedies with the greatest care.

No longer is it the rule to regard the feature as the whole show and the comedy picture as a mere "fill-in," to be booked in a hit or miss way. The aim is to have a top-notch program from start to finish—a good comedy as well as a good feature.

Top-notch programs pay. The patron deposits his money at the box office window to see a performance that has quality all the way through. If such a thing is lacking, he is disappointed and is apt to withhold his patronage, decreasing the income of the exhibitor. This result is just the opposite to that every exhibitor is striving for.

Cub Comedies are made with the principle that each picture must be strong enough to enable an exhibitor to show it in connection with the best feature he can obtain, and have a top-notch program. Cub Comedies are made as one-reel features—not fillers.

Current releases are: "Jerry and the Outlaws," featuring George Ovey, released January 25; "Jerry and His Pal," featuring George Ovey, released February 1. Book through any of the 68 exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION has been founded with the intention of contributing three important elements to its feature films—QUALITY, NOVELTY and STANDARD OF PRODUCTION. This will be accomplished by:

GATHERING together the ablest dramatic playwrights ever assembled under one management. Only those playwrights who have written tremendous financial successes will be called as our dramatic aides. They will write the Goldwyn plays, which will mean GOLDWYN QUALITY.

ENGAGING, whenever we want and can get them, stars of tremendous personality and fame who have made their reputations because of their work—not stars created by dubious publicity and silly advertising. Also, by bringing fresh and new personalities to the screen to support our celebrities. This will mean GOLDWYN NOVELTY.

RECRUITING able directors who will make refined and intelligent pictures; men who know drama and life—not just picture men who grind out so many thousands of feet of film to fill a program. Men whose productions always have box office value. This will mean GOLDWYN STANDARD OF PRODUCTION.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

The War and the Picture

"JOAN the Woman" is a great picture. Many authorities say that it reaches the high-water mark of picture production. As such we delight to point to the artistic recognition it so plainly deserves.

But we believe it greater in one other respect than faultless production. The producer has hit upon a theme of tremendous timeliness. This picture may, in brief, become a great shaping force in this remarkable era of the world's civilization.

We know here, if only faintly, of war-racked Europe and we can surmise what must inevitably follow this terrible human cataclysm. Dr. John Mott, lately returned, puts the situation in a nut shell when he says: "Today there isn't a selfish man in all Europe."

Patriotism and religious fervor—a great coupled wave of twofold emotion—will sweep all Europe after the war. Its reflection will be had here—inevitably. Such a force is too elementally great to be confined by continents.

It is just this great human emotion that "Joan the Woman" splendidly, powerfully, thrillingly typifies. This picture will fire, ennoble and sway multitudes; it should exert its influence in no unlimited way; if it does the motion picture will outdo the mightiest work ever accomplished by a free press.

The Canadian Vision Widens

BROAD mindedness has unfurled its banner in Canada! Geraldine Farrar, whose films were barred from Canada because she once sang in grand opera in Berlin, is now persona grata. The Canadian censors have decided to lift the embargo on Farrar films, and we heartily congratulate whoever led these gentlemen to the light.

ABOUT THE BIG HEAVY MAN & THE SMALL HAPPY MAN

The BIG HEAVY MAN came to the EXHIBITOR one day, saying, "You want your theatre to make more money, don't you? Then, MR. EXHIBITOR, you ought to employ me to capture the coin for you! I know all about how to do it—Here's a PRICE-OF-ADMISSION coming along now—just watch me nab him for you." And HEAVY FEATURES struck a dark and tragic pose, as did all his little heavies called Problem-Play, Crime and Poverty, and Blood and Thunder. Along strolled PRICE-OF-ADMISSION, and when he came upon all the tragic-looking heavies he hesitated, then turned away. "I don't care to spend myself contemplating all sorts of tragedy and horrors," he said. "I want to amuse myself and come out of the theatre feeling happier and in good spirits!" And off he walked, still looking for a place to be spent. "Ah," he cried, after he had walked a little farther up the avenue, "Who is that smiling, happy fellow over there, I wonder?" and PRICE-OF-ADMISSION crossed the street to where the little happy man, named CHRISTIE COMEDIES stood smiling in the midst of his smiling assistants, called Youthful-Beauty, Clean-Cleverness, and Sensible-Stories. "You are just what I'm looking for!" cried PRICE-OF-ADMISSION, running into the arms of CHRISTIE COMEDIES. The Wise Exhibitor had been observing PRICE-OF-ADMISSION closely all the while. He now turned to HEAVY FEATURES, saying, "I see that you make an exceptionally fine box-office attraction—for my competitor! I'm going to get that happy MR. CHRISTIE COMEDIES to work for me. He and his assistants, under the direction of Mr. Al. E. Christie, are producing a new, coin-capturing CHRISTIE COMEDY each week. They're released through INDEPENDENT EXCHANGES, too, where I can see what I'm getting.

I'll start right on this week's release—it's called

Facts and Comments

BOTH the manufacturing and the exhibiting ends of the fifth largest industry in the country are too big ever to fit in the vest pockets of one or two individuals, but the dream of a monopoly in this industry seems hard to forget.

LOOKS very much as if the motion picture interests of this country would be easy picking for the tax grafters of our state and federal governments. Smelling committees have been appointed by the powers that be at Washington and Albany, with authority to delve into books and other records of the various producing companies and of the exhibitors with a view to determining just how much the traffic will stand. Tales of high salaries paid to stars and fabulous sums alleged to have been realized from the sale or exhibition of pictures have excited the cupidity of the politician, hungry for revenues to meet the ever-growing demand for "pork," hence a determined effort is to be made to gather in some of the picture plunder.

ADDED to this direct hold-up of the picture industry is the insistent demand of the volunteer regulator of the public morals for an official censorship of pictures by both state and federal governments—more tax on the picture man. What a lot of us would like to know is where will the thing stop, if there is a possibility of stopping it anywhere this side of bankruptcy. There is something more that the trade would like to know, and that is what those who profess to represent it are doing to meet these raids upon the common treasury of the business. Associations of the trade have been formed and money has been contributed to meet their expenses. But to what purpose? Up to now no one seems to have a definite idea of what should be done. Good men have been delegated to do definite things, but they have not been given proper support to enable them to perform those duties. It is a bad state of affairs that cannot be remedied by conversation. Someone must do something.

WE HAVE received a communication for publication which purports to have been written by the president of a well-known producing company, in which the writer says that the making of pictures is pure guesswork. Furthermore, the writer (may his shadow never grow less) declares his opinion of the flood of "interviews" by men in the business to be an "eternal grind of empty conversation" that "results in nothing of value to the industry."

* * *

IN a certain district in Southern Chicago, occupying about two and a quarter square miles, there are ten neighborhood picture theaters, seating from 800 people up. Owing to needless competition, the owners recently held a meeting to agree on a fixed price of admission. All save one were in favor of charging 15 cents admission at nights for programs well worth that money. The action of one man thus put the business back and means the loss of considerable income to all concerned. Exhibitors must stand together for the common good.

REAL showmanship is what the exhibiting end of the business needs more than ever, but real showmanship today means a square deal to your patrons day in and day out. Good programs rather than long programs, courteous attention and service in every detail, anticipation of the desires of your audience as to the class of pictures preferred, and then giving just a little better than they expected. A clean, bright, cheery, cordial and comfortable atmosphere always.

THE censorship bugaboo is being overshadowed just at present by Sunday opening. Our exhibitor readers will find sufficient material in our columns from time to time for local newspaper use, for use in house programs, or in any way in which they may secure publicity. As in the censorship case we believe that education of public sentiment by the widest publicity for our side of the question is one of the best ways to fight. Keep a little memo book of the issues and page numbers of these articles on censorship, Sunday opening, etc. You can then refer to them when wanted. See in this issue, for instance, an article by the Rev. W. H. Jackson.

Masterpieces of Modern Drama

By Louis Reeves Harrison

A CAREFUL and unprejudiced survey of plays near enough to be called modern, yet long enough before the public to give them established place in human achievement, will surprise any one who takes the pains to study them, especially the man whose natural tendency is to idealize what has succeeded without closely investigating reasons and conditions of success. That tendency is strong in the enormous number of men whose theatrical experience has made them conventional and conservative. They incline to preserve on the screen what has proven satisfactory in fiction and on the stage.

These conservatives have their special place and work to do in the evolution of this new art—they may even seek to stimulate invention by fine example—but they like to live in the past and seem fettered to the belief that stories were much better in times gone by than they are today. They look with distrust upon such radical progression as has been advocated in this column, and they have been among the most stubborn opponents of any effort to divorce the production of moving pictures from theatricalism. It would not harm these orthodox gentlemen entirely to change, if that were possible, their viewpoint.

A careful and unprejudiced survey of thirty modern plays generally admitted to be the greatest of their kind has been made for the sake of studying whatever screen possibilities they might contain. Motif, story interest, vitality of theme, quantity and quality of dramatic material, visual impression and inspiration have been given first consideration. Further than that was considered the receptive mentality of our own people—would these plays meet with sympathetic response in America?

A synopsis of each one of these thirty masterpieces would be disheartening. It is almost as difficult to judge from a synopsis as to write a good one. At least five of these plays, possibly more, have already been produced on the screen under some other title. One of the five was an artistic success, but not a popular one. The four others were positive failures. Among the remaining twenty-five, nineteen were impossible unless they were so completely transformed by some talented writer as to be practically his own work. The remaining half dozen offered some good material, but their "situations" were hackneyed.

Fourteen of these plays had been seen on the stage before the reading was undertaken, but they were examined as closely as the rest, the idea being to study them from a new viewpoint. Only one of the entire lot contained enough material for a five-reel feature, the artistic one already produced. Any one of the rest, if not padded to a stupefying extent, had barely enough actual story material to fill more than three reels. The man who read the thirty plays was extremely anxious to find one or more worth while—there was nothing slipshod about his examination.

Now it was not at all impossible to fake a scenario out of each and every one of these masterpieces, but that is the sort of business which means the death of original effort. To turn out stuff not completely satisfactory to the public means to injure public esteem, to injure the exhibitor and to retard the growing popularity of moving pictures. There are writers who will undertake that sort of work—they may be driven by necessity to do so—and it may also be compelled by the requirements of a program, but it is not building up good will for the producer, not for the exhibitor, not even for the writer himself.

Now for the sneer. If these high accomplishments of creative genius were good enough for the stage, why are they not good enough to reflect on the screen that millions of people may enjoy what has only been shown to a few thousands? The question is based on false premises. The stage plays depended largely upon masterly utterance of exceptionally effective words. For many minutes at a time they appealed powerfully to the ear in scenes easily shown in a few seconds in the silent presentation. But we must go much deeper into the whole question for a true and entirely convincing answer.

Nearly all of these plays, while they heralded a revival of the drama in public favor, were addressed to that public by capable playwrights, each in accord with his time and his country, by a special method of telling them that counted heavily. They were fitted to the capabilities of actors who spoke their lines in splendid declamation, and to the shape, kind and condition of theaters in which they were to be presented. In each case the author suited his product to his medium, skillfully adjusted his technic to the circumstances of performance.

Further than that, these same masterpieces were but steps in the evolution of stage performance, itself in process of transformation to suit progressive public requirements. Right at this moment there is a great change going on in the manner of presenting a stage play. The whole art is growing through a recognition that nothing stands still in human evolution, that all the arts of expression must keep moving through new and original efforts on the part of creative genius in order to really satisfy the ever-progressive tendency of intelligent people. The stage is developing its untried power.

The one big lesson to be learned from a careful and unprejudiced survey of great theatrical performance is that the whole tendency of the older art is not to enfeeble it with stale repetition, but to give it new vigor by reaching out as strongly as possible to modern thought and feeling in an imaginative way for the sake of that common happiness which comes only through human betterment. On the screen we are asking people to drag along in the well worn tracks of the past. Acquaintance with the best practices of other times may be all right for the author, if it does not cramp his inventive genius, but what he has learned from old examples must never impair his vision.

The hired men who write scenarios in the studios may be both talented and conscientious, but they are steadily up against the necessity of pleasing employers instead of pleasing the public. The employer is usually a good business man who decides to enter motion-picture production and hire talent at so much a month. He hires talent to direct and interpret dramatic stories, but that talent is rarely creative. Real creative genius cannot flourish in an atmosphere of commercialism. To be at its best it must be isolated from such withering influences and given absolute freedom of growth. It is the source of ideals.

Ideals are beginning to count heavily in the moving picture business. The producers of ideals are succeeding in the midst of constant failures. They are hampered, it is true, but they are moving steadily ahead. So are exhibitors of ideals. But in opposition to their progress is no such heavy drag as that almost constantly imposed on authorship by gentlemen of theatrical retrospection, who deny budding creative genius in our own art the nourishment it needs.

We Have "Flashed Our Roll"—Now it is "Hands Up"

By Sam Spedon.

WE ARE a lot of "rubes." We have been making a vulgar and asinine display of our prosperity, flashing our roll under the very noses of the "hold up men" arousing their covetousness and cupidity. We have challenged them to take it away from us.

We have advertised the moving picture industry as an easy money proposition; we have been inviting the "philistines" to come and get some of it while the getting is good. They are upon us and it will take every mother's son of us to keep them from getting it, when the getting is not as easy for us as it was a few years ago.

They have got us covered, "hands up," and we are howling for help.

Have you read what Congressman Henry T. Rainey of Illinois said? He said this: "It has come to the attention of Congress that motion picture stars are paid enormous salaries. There are, for instance, such stars as Mary Pickford reputed to receive $500,000 annually for her work, and Charley Chaplin to draw as much as $750,000 a year. Certainly if producing companies can afford to pay these fabulous salaries to their stars, they can afford to pay something more for the support of the governments."

We have boasted of our one, two and three million dollar studios as if they were mere shacks. We have told of the numberless millionaires who started in the business with a shoe-string. People have taken us at our word. They have believed us.

We can't say we have been making false pretenses. We can only say there is a difference between now and then. We can't do this without making the public think moving pictures are on the decline, and we don't want to do that.

Did you read the resolution which Senator Henry Brown, majority leader, drafted in hopes of raising $2,000,000 a year towards the New York State budget? Here it is:

"Resolved (if the Assembly concur), that a joint committee of the Senate and Assembly be hereby created to consist of three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the president of the Senate, and five members of the Assembly, to be appointed by the speaker of the Assembly, to investigate whether the moving picture industry is a proper subject of State taxation, and if the committee so determine, the kind and amount of taxes to be imposed.

"Resolved, that such committee is hereby authorized to choose from its members a chairman and to sit within and outside the city of Albany, to subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses, to require the production of books, records and papers, to take and hear proof and testimony, and otherwise have all the powers of a legislative committee as provided by the legislative law, including the adoption of rules for the conduct of its proceedings.

"Resolved, that such committee shall report the result of its investigation to the Legislature on or before February 15, 1917, together with such proposed legislative measures as it may seem proper to carry its recommendations into effect.

"Resolved, that the expense of such committee, not exceeding $5,000, shall be payable from the contingent fund of the Legislature, on the certificate of the chairman of the committee and the approval of the temporary president of the Senate, or the speaker of the Assembly."

The moving picture industry has been quoted as being still in its infancy. This is not so. True, there are men in it who talk as if they were still in their swaddling clothes and don't know it.

The industry is a full grown business, for full-grown business men.

Millions of dollars are invested in it because the money is necessary to capitalize it and conduct it properly. The overhead and equipment expenses of the exhibitor and producer today are as great (if not greater) as any business in the world. The invested capital is enormous and the profits are fast reaching the same proportions as any commercial enterprise.

We have got to tell people now that moving pictures are a legitimate business, conducted on business principles and not on fictitious investments and profits, and we have got to live up to it.

We have advertised and publicized as if we were looking for a lot of "come-ons." They have come, but we are the "come-ons."

We have left our borders unprotected, the so called "bandits" have come over into our domains and we have got to get together and protect ourselves; Not like a lot of "rookies" or "rubes," but like a phalanx of well-trained business men under well advised leadership.

An Objection to the Deposit System

By Sam Spedon.

HERE are two letters, one of protest, the other of defense. We publish them for the benefit of both sides. Their appearance in cold print gives a clearer insight into the value of each. Both have value, which should lend themselves to the correction of cause for complaints of this kind from the exhibitor.

December 27, 1916.

Gentlemen: Knowing that you are interested in the troubles of exhibitors I take the liberty of enclosing a letter I received a few days ago from an exchange with whom I had been doing business for over eight months. I had a deposit with this company covering four weeks, and cancelled my contract, and on the last picture they served me I made a mistake. I wrote in and requested that they mail me check for the amount of the overpayment $8.90, the letter I am enclosing will show pou that the manager (?) forced me to run another picture, when I had arranged for another program.

I had been doing business with this office for over eight months, paying for my film one week in advance, although I had up four weeks deposit, there was never a time when they did not have their money before service was rendered, so it seems to me that had this manager been a real one he would have returned my check for $10.65 and requested that I mail him one for the correct amount, $1.75.

I am through putting up deposits, I am booking on the open market; no more yearly contracts for me.

If you can use this letter to convince some of the manufacturers that they do take unfair advantage of exhibitors.

Yours very truly,

December 8, 1916.

Dear Sir: In your letter of recent date in regard to overpayment of $8.90 which you have in this office, you requested that we mail you a check for this amount to balance your account. The total amount of the check which we received from you at the time this overpayment was made, was $10.65, the difference of $1.75 being the amount which you actually owed us. In order to credit you with this $1.75 we were obliged to deposit the full amount of the check and send you an overpayment receipt for $8.90.

The system of bookkeeping which is carried out at this office and which is checked up very closely each week by our Home Office, does not allow us to return any money to an exhibitor after it has been deposited in the bank. This, however, inconviences us somewhat in your case, but we would suggest that you book one feature and we shall in turn apply the over payment of $8.90 on this service. We believe this suggestion will meet with your approval, and we shall thank you to let us have an open date as soon as possible.

Thanking you for past favors, with best wishes, we beg to remain

Yours very truly,

Now that we have read both letters we must confess that it sure does look like a just cause for complaint on the part of the exhibitor and that the exchange has taken unfair advantage of him.

It also looks like another instance in favor of the correction or abolition of the deposit system, which is on the verge of arbitration in New York City.

From another viewpoint we must say it is a very short-sighted policy on the part of any corporation.

In justice, however, to this corporation, or any other, we are inclined to believe that the heads are not aware of this specific instance, or like instances, which occur from time to time. It may be a rule of this particular branch, instituted in its particular bookkeeping department. If it were called to the attention of the main office no doubt it would be abolished.

We trust that both these letters will receive the careful and serious consideration of those most vitally interested and that they may help the establishment of confidence and a better understanding between the exhibitor and the exchange.

We Should Be a Law Unto Ourselves

By Sam Spedon.

THE enforcement of the Sunday closing law in New York State has stirred the moving picture interests from top to bottom. It touches the exhibitor most directly and effects the industry as a whole, to the extent of at least three million dollars a year, in New York State alone.

We all deplore the revival of this antiquated law. While it was held in abeyance we came to the conclusion that it was obsolete beyond recall.

The moving picture interests and the public want the moving pictures on Sunday. The moving picture people want them primarily as a means of livelihood, or profit. The masses want them because they must have entertainment and recreation as part of their day of rest.

In this instance the end justifies the means and the public should have moving pictures on Sunday, particularly where they do not in any way contaminate their morals or interfere with the rights and privileges of others.

To some extent the exhibitor is responsible for the revival of this old law. He is so eager to get the immediate dollar he looses sight of the consequences. He thinks more of himself than he does of others. He is selfish to a fault and does not think of the consequences to his fellow exhibitors as a whole. He is short sighted and does not exercise any policy in the character of pictures he should show to meet the tastes and humor the prejudices of the community, and the authorities, in which he does business.

The same thing might be said about the producer, who wittingly produces a picture that brings unjust imputations upon the producers as a whole.

We cannot offer the excuse (it would reflect upon the intelligence of the industry), that they know not what they do.

The producer will have to co-operate with the exhibitor and see to it that the latter has the right character of plays for his Sunday selection. It is a clear case of "fifty-fifty," which demands the serious thought of both. The same thought might be given by the producers, in their general programs and releases.

Every exhibitor should exercise discretion in the selection of his Sunday program, beyond all question by the most captious. He should consider most carefully his patronage and in every instance avoid catering to the sensational and morbid curiosity, especially when he knows, or should know, there is an aversion in the better element to this kind of entertainment.

There is no reason why the exhibitor and producer cannot overcome any objection to Sunday moving pictures if he will use good judgment in their selection. At any rate he will have the courage of his own conviction and in addition the moral courage to fight unjust legislation and censorship.

It is up to the exhibitor to leave nothing undone that should be done to prove that he is not only a law-abiding citizen but that he is just as solicitous about the welfare and uplift of the community in which he is located as anybody else in it. He should be public spirited enough to take an interest in his community if he expects it to take an interest in him.

Playing Petty Politics

According to information furnished to this paper by one of its correspondents whose jurisdiction is within a hundred miles of Niagara Falls it seems that, under the guise of "working for the Exhibitor," addresses are "staged" that are being simply used as an excuse for the real purpose of the talk: the securing of subscriptions for a new paper. It's a great "stunt" at that, but when officers of Exhibitors' locals lend themselves to the scheme to the extent of shutting out representatives of other papers and non-members it savors of a short-sighted partisanship that is beneath the consideration of far-sighted business men. Overworking the personal popularity secured through this paper in plans of this sort hardly meets with the ethical business standards of those who are familiar with all the inside facts.

The Moving Picture World is the great publicity promoter, whether for individuals or firms. Trading on a reputation gained in this office for purely personal business ends under the claim that it is for the Exhibitor's benefit is hardly straightforward business, to say the least. We have always donated both the services and expenses of members of our staff whenever we believed we could help, but we are inclined to believe no representative of this paper could be of much assistance to any group of men who lend themselves to contemptible inside politics of this sort, or who do not have intelligence enough to know that they are being so used.

The Sunday Movies

Bring on the Sunday Movies!
Reel off what films are fit, for not a human being gets any harm from it. This is the proper pastime for morals and for purse, since those who do the movies might easily do worse. A good time with the pictures cuts out a bad time where the devil's
Sunday service shows very little prayer.
Of course, the Sunday movies are hardly quite so long as are some Sunday sermons, but is that very wrong! What is a Sunday movie except a place to go for those who are not able to see a high priced show?
They have no time or money to spend as many spend, and so the simple movie comes to them as a friend—A friend they need, for humans become inhuman when they merely drop their burdens to take them up again. In every human creature whose mind is fairly sane there is a need of pleasure to mingle with the pain which is a part of living, and no one ought to say this bit of Sunday pleasure will likely lead astray the thousands in attendance who for a time forget the burdens they have carried and have to carry yet. Bring on the Sunday movies for morals and for purse, and you who think them wicked see that you do no worse!

Sunday Opening and the Church

By the Rev. W. H. Jackson

WITHOUT doubt the most momentous question of the day in the State of New York is that of the opening of moving picture houses on Sunday. The State Legislature is now called upon to deal with this important problem, and all sides will be most thoroughly represented and heard. It would seem at the outset that there are three parties interested in the issue—the moving picture people of all classes, from the largest manufacturer to the smallest exhibitor; the general public and the Church. These again may now be divided into two parties, as without doubt or exception the moving picture people and the public are of one mind, while the Church will be of another mind, although there are those within the church who are in favor of some qualified kind of Sunday opening.

It has not yet appeared that the Church as a body has officially spoken. Nevertheless certain prominent ministers have taken upon themselves to act as uninstructed spokesmen from time to time. Latest of these is the Rev. David James Burrell of the Marble Collegiate Church of New York City, who, on a recent Sunday morning, devoted his usual sermon time to the question of the Sunday opening of picture houses. Unfortunately Dr. Burrell seems to have taken a position of an unqualified and uncompromising opposition. We say unfortunately because the worthy doctor occupies a position of unusual authority as the leader of one of the centers of public thought, which should qualify him as being well acquainted with the public needs. This latter qualification he seems to be most thoroughly unacquainted with, his whole sermon breathing a lack of that knowledge of a great city which he for one should be the first to possess.

In an outline which would be most acceptable to his congregation, and to which so far we agree, he showed how they themselves had no need for Sunday pictures; the Sunday opening is not essentially for such as the regular congregation of the Fifth avenue churches; neither need it be for the "tired working men" for whom the doctor spoke, although we question his authority and capability to speak for the workers, from whom he is so far removed in both knowledge and touch.

Right convincingly did Dr. Burrell single out classes to whom the opening of picture houses was not a necessity, and so make good his claim. This is thoroughly admitted. But how carefully he omitted the numerous other classes to whom the open picture house would be at once a pleasure and a help!

Was it by accident or design that he forgot to "Have compassion on the multitude," the eighty per cent. of the city's millions not found in the church on the Sabbath day? These are they for whom he should have had some consideration; these are they who want the picture houses open on the Sunday; these are they for whom he should have pleaded for some means of attraction from the thousand and one vices from which properly regulated moving picture exhibitions can and will save them on Sunday. This is the precise moment in the life of Dr. Burrell when he could (had he known his city) have stood forth as the champion of the hundreds of thousands of poor, helpless people who are looking for some one to champion their cause and lead them—yes, lead them—through the moving picture house to the church, even as Dr. Reisner has so successfully done in the upper part of the city.

In meeting an issue of this kind the first thing to be considered is the probable success of the movement; the wise would be guided thereby. There was a time when clergymen fought the Sunday newspaper. The ineffectual result only made them appear weak and helpless in defeat, and detracted from their force and power in leadership. Now they find it wiser to use, and endeavor to regulate, the use of the Sunday paper, which can at least secure some of the results they seek after. So with the Sunday picture house, it is as sure as the Sunday paper; anyone familiar with the "signs of the times" knows that in any way to oppose only makes one appear conspicuous as opposed to the will of the people, and has a tendency to detract from his usefulness. The thing is sure to come, and to seek to use the Sunday picture will show greater wisdom than to oppose it. King Canute was wise when he taught his flatterers that he could not stay the oncoming of the waves of the sea.

It is said of the great Gladstone that his success lay in his ability to see the trend of the public mind, then to endeavor to give the people what they wanted in such a way as would best serve the highest purposes. Not a word that Dr. Burrell has said will hinder for a single moment the passing of the Sunday opening bill. When fighting it he has forgotten the plan followed by his greatest apostolic leader, who said, "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air," and truly he fought effectually. Dr. Burrell's fighting is simply air beating; it is proved by its ineffectuality.

Having shown and admitted that those for whom Dr. Burrell spoke had no need for the Sunday pictures, let a word be now spoken for those for whom he did not speak (and for whom he should have been their first speaker), the poor, the ill-clad (without church clothes), the wretched, the dwellers in "Darkest New York," the ignorant, the loafers, the drifting-into-the-criminal class, the street-corner "props," the homeless and the non-stay-at-homes; all of these to whom the church is a meaningless thing; these of whom Justice Cropsey told the ministers of New York that from his experience he had seen the great good wrought by the moving picture houses—nay, more, he courageously told the ministers that the moving picture had at times done more than the many churches in Brooklyn to help the classes quoted above, besides relieving the courts of much work. Justice Cropsey is perhaps one of the best authorities on this question. He has been a District Attorney, Police Commissioner, and is now a Supreme Court Judge. In his address to certain New York ministers his stand was the very opposite to that taken by Dr. Burrell. It is easy to see who is the better able to form a correct opinion and become a wise leader and adviser.

It would ill become us to presume to advise Dr. Burrell, but it would seem that the wise course for those ministers who have the best interests of the people at heart is to recognize the fact that the pictures have come to stay, that to oppose them is not only useless, but detrimental to their powers as leaders and advisers; they should recognize that to use rather than to oppose would produce more satisfactory results. Take away the pictures, and what do you leave for the multitudes?—the saloon, the dives, the vaudeville, the sham "Sunday concerts" and other more undesirable attractions. The open picture house is driving all these away, the picture houses have closed more saloons and places of evil attractions than all the churches and anti-saloon aims put together. Is it necessary again and again and again to point out that the pictures are the greatest educators with which the earth was ever blessed, that their powers for evil have been nullified, and their powers for good exalted? Surely Providence never placed within the power of such men as Dr. Burrell a more sure instrument, and if such as he cannot use the instrument let them know enough not to condemn it. The most successful church in New York today uses the Sunday pictures with great profit. It requires no wit to fight; to criticise is easy, but to know and understand and to use requires knowledge, tact and wisdom; the people are demanding an acceptable agency, to deny them embitters them, but rather Gladstone-like, give to them their desires, striving only, ever and always, to secure for them the greatest and best possible use and good from that which they demand.

Olive Branch at Albany

Speaker Sweet of State Assembly Says That Legislature Wants to Meet Picture Men Half Way—Propose Liberal Censorship.

WHATEVER may be the outcome of motion picture legislation at Albany, N. Y., during the present session, it now appears reasonably certain that if censorship becomes compulsory, it will be fairer and less drastic than that which was attempted and talked a year ago. With Speaker Thaddeus Sweet of the Assembly coming out in favor of censorship of a type that would serve to a large measure in permitting motion picture houses to operate Sundays, and with Assemblyman H. E. Wheeler, a member of last year's committee and also of the one named this week, declaring not only his own, but the willingness of the entire committee to meet the moving picture industry on friendly terms, there is every indication of a more amicable settlement in the way of legislation than a year ago.

The mail coming to certain Senators and Assemblymen during the past day or two has, however, made it clear that there will be strong opposition, particularly from the smaller places, toward legislation that will legalize the opening of moving picture shows throughout the State on Sunday. One Senator, who is regarded as a power in his body, received a communication this week signed by many men and women residents of a hamlet in his district, urging him to vote against any bill which might be introduced favoring Sunday movies. Other Senators have received like communications, making it evident that there is some organization working systematically through the State at the present time along those lines.

Three Senators and five Assemblymen make up the committee, which was named this week to investigate the feasibility of taxing the motion picture houses. The committee will report February 15.

The committee is losing no time in getting down to work, securing the past week a list of all companies in this State incorporated in the motion picture industry.

"We desire to ascertain the amount and share of taxes now borne by that industry in this State, if any; to gain a clear and comprehensive idea of the extent of the industry and also the possibilities of moderate regulations," said Assemblyman Wheeler in discussing the first work which the committee will take up.

"I want it understood," said the speaker, "that this committee does not seek to hamper or retard the industry which we know is not only employing thousands at excellent wages, but is furnishing entertainment to millions. We realize that last year's bill was in many ways entirely too drastic and while I cannot speak for the committee in its entirety, I am frank in saying that whatever is done, particularly in the way of requiring a censorship, that it will be more liberal than last year."

Assemblyman Wheeler expressed the opinion that personally he did not believe that there were 10 per cent of pictures requiring censorship today.

Just what will be done in the way of a bill compelling censorship of pictures in this State is, of course, a question at the present time. Yet the statement of Speaker Sweet of the Assembly, while favoring a censorship with the suggestion that the censors indicate pictures well adapted for Sunday use, furnishes a strong impression throughout the capitol that it will not be very long before the State sees fit to legalize Sunday shows.

"Fatty" Arbuckle Allied With Paramount

Celebrated Comedian to Begin Work on Production of Two-Reel Pictures in March.

"Fatty" Arbuckle, "the funniest fat man on the screen," who has long since abandoned the first name Roscoe with which he was endowed by his parents, has entered into a contract with the Paramount Pictures Corporation by the terms of which he will begin the production of two-reel comedies on or about March 1st. These pictures will be distributed by Paramount, but not on the "Paramount Program," which includes only the productions of the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas Companies.

"Fatty" Arbuckle ranks to-day as uniquely in the field of comic productions as does Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, but possesses the added faculty of directing the pictures in which he stars. Chaplin stands for the trick tumbler, Fairbanks for the athletic marvel, and Arbuckle is the jovial fat man who is the butt of every joke—except the ones which he turns on his tormentors.

The tremendous popularity of Arbuckle is based on the world-old human trait of finding humor in excess avoirdupois. Statistics are lacking which definitely determine the point of obesity which is intrinsically humorous in itself—the point at which everybody considers a man to be fat enough to be funny whether he wants to be or not. But it is certain that ampleness of girth is one of the most unfailing sources of laughter known to man.

"Fatty" Arbuckle has capitalized his hugh size so successfully that he stands to-day acknowledged to be worth his weight in laughs and is admittedly "the" fat comedian of the screen. The secret of Arbuckle's great popularity is the fact that he makes his audience laugh at him as well as with him, never fearing to be made the victim of a joke himself, instead of insisting upon being always the one who plays the tricks upon others.

The fact that Arbuckle directs his own pictures is important because he will set tasks for himself to do that no other director would have the moral courage to ask him to perform.

"One of the most important factors in screen comedy is speed," declares the Rotund One. "By that I do not refer to speed in the slang sense of the word as applied to vulgarity, but to speed of plot and of action. Keep things jumping and your audience will be with you every moment. Let the action lag and you will have to work twice as hard to get their attention back."

W. K. Vanderbilt Heads Film Company

Prominent Americans Incorporate to Handle Official War Pictures for Benefit of Relief Funds.

A NEW motion picture company has just been organized, to be known as Official War Films, Inc., with Wm. K. Vanderbilt as president, Walter Scott, vice-president; H. P. Davison, treasurer, and Wm. DeForest Manice, secretary. Other directors are Wm. Sloane, James Logie, Charles Urban, Henry D. Sleeper and G. McLeod Baynes, chairman of the board. The sole object of the company is to raise funds for the American Ambulance Corps and general war relief. Its entire gross profits will be devoted to this work.

The corporation has taken over the rights of the Patriot Film Company for the exhibition in the United States of the Official War Films of the British government, photographed as a part of the permanent records of the War Office. Those films include remarkable pictures of the great battle of the Somme, made on the firing lines and out between the opposing trenches, as well as pictures of the manufacture of munitions, the training of Britain's army of 5,000,000 men, the Grand Fleet in the North Sea, etc. The films also include the wonderful pictures of American Boys at the front, shown on December 9 at the Strand theater.

In addition to the official British war pictures, the new corporation expects to secure control of all the French Government war pictures for the United States, and is now negotiating with French officials with that end in view.

PUT OUT SAILOR—FINED $250.

Henry Traub, manager of the Olympic Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., put out of his house a sailor in uniform. He was arrested on a charge of discrimination against a United States sailor in uniform and, after a hearing in Special Sessions, was fined $250. This is the first case of this kind that has come up in some time and should furnish a sufficient warning to all theater managers that it is contrary to law to forbid admission to theaters of men attired in the uniform of either the army or navy of the United States.

Graham With Famous Players-Lasky

Leaves the Mutual to Become General Foreign Representative for Big Producing Organization—Has Had Long Experience in the Motion Picture Field

THE wide foreign activities already instituted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and other plans which are now under advisement have rendered necessary the creating of a new office in that organization—a general foreign representative—to which J. C. Graham, one of the best known figures among motion picture executives, has just been appointed.

The engagement of Mr. Graham by Famous Players-Lasky follows closely upon the sending of Alec Lorimore to Australia and of Ingvald C. Oes to the Scandinavian countries. Mr. Graham's commission is a roving one, however, as he will make the whole world his office, traveling to any and all parts of the world for the purpose of bringing to the immediate attention of the exhibitors of foreign countries the best points of Famous Players-Lasky-Morosco-Pallas productions, which might not be seized upon by the foreigner until they are drawn to his attention.

J. C. Graham.

The engaging of these three men for work in the foreign field is a concrete evidence of the determination of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to place itself in the closest possible contact with the foreign field. The Famous Players-Lasky company's productions are already widely distributed throughout Europe, Africa and other portions of the globe.

Conditions of production and methods of distribution are constantly undergoing change and the former have almost been revolutionized. With the changes of market conditions which will necessarily result from the tremendous upheaval abroad and with the new phases of production which have developed within a comparatively short time, it is deemed expedient by the producers to have a man of Mr. Graham's wide understanding of international conditions to act as a personal representative of the concern in foreign fields.

The new conditions will need new adjustments and it will be Mr. Graham's duty to make personal investigations of the situation in each country and to negotiate any changes of distribution methods which his knowledge of home conditions may dictate.

That Mr. Graham is especially fitted for this new work is easily apparent from brief glance at his long career in the motion picture business. It was in St. Louis that Mr. Graham first became interested in the motion picture, operating one of the first exchanges formed there, in the days before the formation of the General Film Company.

It was with the beginning of the operation of the General that Mr. Graham began to acquire a reputation as an independent fighter, as manager of an opposition exchange to that of the General in St. Louis.

Mr. Graham later became the general manager of the Reliance Company and was associated with the Sales Company, and afterward became the head of the Mutual exchange activities in New York upon the formation of that company.

Leaving Mutual, Mr. Graham became general manager of the Universal, a position which he held until he took over the affairs of the United Film Service Corporation as a personal favor to certain interested parties, until the company was liquidated. Returning to Mutual when John R. Freuler was elected its president, Mr. Graham became assistant to the president, with complete charge of all exchanges. With the removal of the company's headquarters to Chicago, Mr. Graham went to that city and organized the general exchange department under the new conditions.

With the completion of this task, Mr. Graham returned to New York City to supervise the eastern producing activities of the Mutual and to take charge of its eastern exchanges. It is this tremendously responsible position which he leaves to assume his new duties with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Though his headquarters will be made at the Fifth Avenue office of the corporation, Mr. Graham expects to spend the larger portion of his time abroad. After studying more intimately the details of production and distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, he will sail for England to make a first-hand survey of the field in Great Britain.

Mr. Graham has frequently journeyed abroad in the interests of the motion picture business, is an accomplished linguist and has, in the course of his long connection with various distributing organizations, studied the foreign market very closely. He is therefore ideally equipped by experience and an enviable record of past achievement to undertake the tremendous task which lies before him.

Stevens Director for Bluebird

VIOLET MERSEREAU'S return to the Bluebird program has been supervised by Edwin Stevens, the well known dramatic artist and screen notable, who is also studio manager for Bluebird at Leonia, N. J. John C. Brownell, who is acting as Mr. Stevens' assistant, furnished the scenarios for "The Honor of Mary Blake," recently released, and "The Boy Girl," set for distribution March 6. The third picture in which Mr. Stevens will direct Miss Mersereau is now in preparation at Leonia. Kate Jordan furnished the scenario and its screen-title will be "Susan's Gentleman."

Edwin Stevens.

In her previous appearances among Bluebirds the director for Miss Mersereau was Rex Ingram, who then produced "The Great Problem" and "Broken Fetters." The transfer of Mr. Ingram to the West Coast left Miss Mersereau in Leonia without a director and the engagement of Mr. Stevens eventuated. It is likely that Mr. Stevens and Miss Mersereau will operate at Leonia for some time to come.

FREDERICK JAMES BIRD TO BE MARRIED.

The Nicholas Power Company seems to be a plant for Cupid's operations as well as for the manufacture of projection machines. The latest announcement from 90 Gold street is that Fred J. Bird, assistant sales manager of that company, has made the momentous decision. His engagement to Miss Marian Evelyn Cox, the noted Brooklyn singer, has just been announced.

NEW YORK'S STRAND WILL SHOW LINDER COMEDIES.

The management of the Strand theater announces that they have signed a contract with the Essanay Film Company whereby the Max Linder comedies will be presented at the Strand theater, on exclusive release dates.

Salisbury Back After Remarkable Trip

Accompanied by Rex Beach, Explorer-Naturalist Secures Many Unusual Pictures in and About South and Central America

EDWARD A. SALISBURY is back in New York for the first time since October 28, 1915. Since that time he has traveled in the little yacht Wisdom a distance of 12,000 miles, a record for a motor-propelled vessel. With this well-known naturalist, hunter and photographer of out-of-the-ordinary subjects was Rex Beach, author, hunter and adventurer. The latter was a member of the Wisdom party for several months, joining the craft at Colon and leaving it at Panama, after cruises up and down the east and west coasts of Central and South America. Others in the party were George Stone, of the University of California, one of the most expert exponents of microcinematography in the country, and Charles Dahl and Stephen Hutt, animal specialists, who had previously worked with Mr. Salisbury in obtaining motion photographs of wild animals. One of the rarer pictures is that of a total eclipse of the sun.

Edward A. Salisbury.

Mr. Salisbury brought back 65,000 feet of film. It has been developed and printed, and out of the original the traveler says there will be 25,000 feet of exceptional film. Mr. Erb, under whose supervision the laboratory work has been done, assures Mr. Salisbury the negative is in better condition than any tropical stuff he has seen. Undoubtedly this is due to the precautions adopted by the head of the expedition. He had constructed a large thermos bottle in which he put his film. In the bottle he placed an electric light. When the cover was lifted to remove the film the light would be switched on and thrown off when the cover was replaced. By this means he kept the moisture out of the film and prevented the growth of fungus, the bane of the tropics. He had provided himself with chemicals designed to achieve the same ends, but he discovered the lamp worked to better advantage.

The itinerary included visits to Cape Hatteras, Jacksonville, Miami, Key West, Havana, Swan Island, Colon, Cayenne, back to Colon, north to Gracias Adios, Nicaragua, where visits were made to Lake Nicaragua, Bluefields and Greytown; through the canal and down the west coast to Guayaquil, returning to Panama, and from thence to Los Angeles.

"After a stop at Cape Hatteras, where we put in some time hunting and photographing ducks, we made visits at several points in Florida," said Mr. Salisbury. "Then we went over to Cuba, covering thoroughly a good bit of it. We crossed the Caribbean to the Mosquito group of islands off Honduras. We explored the islands and cays and entered several rivers. At Port Limon, Costa Rica, we went into the interior and not only took birds and animals and microscopical subjects, but also made photographs of the sugar, cocoa and coffee industries. I think we have got these a little better than has been done before.

"We went into the Talamanc country, where are to be found Indians descended from the original Incas of Central America. We studied their habits and took pictures of them. Did they balk at the camera? Yes, they did at first. They called the lens the devil's eye and the box his abiding place. But we prevailed on the chief to distribute presents, which he did judiciously, and we had no further trouble.

"We had a similar experience with the San Blas Indians. At Colon we had been informed on our arrival, about February 10, that the canal probably would not be opened until the middle of April, and consequently we would be compelled to remain on the eastern side of the continent for some time. We went down to the Windward and Leeward Islands, visited several tribes of Indians and looked into the pearl fisheries.

"We took some wonderful scenes of tarpon fishing. On this part of the trip we were accompanied by Dr. Rinehart and Mary Roberts Rinehart, and they with Mr. Beach figured in several of the pictures taken at that point. Many shots were photographed in narrow streams, where the dense foliage lapped over the water. The fish would jump so high at times they would touch the trees.

"In a trip into the interior with Indians as guides we indulged in hunting. Among the tapir we shot the largest weighed 1,100 pounds. Then, too, we got specimens of jaguar, mountain lion, ant bear and sloth. The ants, of which we found many different kinds, were very interesting. Many pictures of these were taken for scientific purposes. Among them were the umbrella.

Rex Beach, Surrounded by Diminutive Natives.

"We found the San Blas Indians of unusual interest. They are scattered over 365 islands, which for 120 miles dot the coast, and perhaps are the least known of any Indians in the two Americas. They were the only continental Indians ever visited by Columbus—for they are to be found on the mainland, too—who discovered them on his third voyage. So far as is known they are practically the same today as they were then. They have never mixed with any other race. Up to the time we visited them they had never been photographed. They were very much averse to the camera, but we mollified them. In fact, we became very friendly and remained with them several weeks.

"Many of the pictures we took there were of the homes on the different islands. And especially interesting were the pictures we took of the babies. Youngsters of two, three and four years old venture out in canoes—and mahogany canoes, mind you—four feet in length. If the waves come aboard the little fellows slide into the bottom of the craft, turn over on their stomachs and literally kick out the water, then reversing their position and assuming the upright and paddling off as if nothing had happened to disturb their voyage.

"These San Blas Indians are strong on seamanship. They have enormous canoes, all carved out of mahogany, and probably the best in the world. These boats are not classified by the number of men they may hold, but according to the cocoanuts that may be stowed in them. We saw some large enough to carry from 1,500 to 2,000.

"One of the finest sets of pictures I got were of a canoe race which I staged. The Indians had no knowledge or conception of a contest. I induced fifty of them to race around one of the islands. It was understood that at the word they should hoist their sails and get away. There was a most amusing mix-up, but finally it was straightened out. Everything went along finely until they reached the head of the island, when I noticed the leaders stopping. As the last boat caught up with the party they cut loose and came down on the camera all fifty abreast. And you may take my word for it, it was a real spectacle. When I inquired as to why they had halted I was informed they were waiting for the others to catch up! It's a new idea of racing, but it made a picture. I distributed four prizes to the homestretch winners. Another exceptional picture I got was of the Indians handling their canoes in heavy weather, with the men hanging far out over the sides of the boat to keep it from going over in the wind.

"Their crude methods of doing things are very interesting. Not all of them live by the sea. On the mainland they engage in agricultural pursuits. They grow cocoanuts, corn, coffee, beans, and all kinds of tropical fruits.

"We got pictures of sharks of varying lengths up to twenty feet; in fact, I may say we got some very fine pictures of them. They are plentiful in these waters. Also we got pictures of the turtle fisheries. We got quite a number of turtles alive. Of Central American birds we made many photographs. And butterflies! Down there are to be found some of the most beautiful in the world. It is my intention to have these printed in colors.

"While we were in Costa Rica we got a total eclipse of the sun. We photographed it from a mountain and from the seacoast. The picture we took from the latter position came out wonderfully well, fine and clear. It is probably the first time it has been done. The conditions in the mountains were not so good, as we were bothered by clouds. Nevertheless the spectacle of the fleecy masses crossing the sun may to some enhance the beauty of the unusual subject.

"In the Yucatan channel we obtained some unusual storm pictures. The little Wisdom battled in waves that were big enough to cause one of the fruit steamers to turn back. We came through without a scratch and we have many good scenes of the water breaking over our boat.

"As we went through the canal we got pictures of the Culebra slides. We got many interesting shots around Panama and its vicinity. Then we sailed down the west coast. We went ashore at a number of places. In Colombia we captured crocodiles. Wanting a little action, Mr. Beach suggested we rope some of them and give him a ride. At the word the bonds were loosed, the crocodile started for the water, and Mr. Beach tried to keep his 'saddle.' He got a number of spills, but we got the 'action' all right. There's a man who will take a chance on anything. He is in most of the pictures we took. No stunt seemed to foolhardy for him to attempt. He supplied action. He has nerve in abundance. I know no one with any more of it.

"While we were on the west coast we climbed mountains in an effort to get some unusual stuff. At Terrialbo we succeeded, but in most instances we were bothered by clouds.

"Our last jump was from Corinto, Nicaragua, straight to Los Angeles, a distance of 2,600 miles. The reason we made this long trip, without touching at a Mexican port, was on account of a tip we got from the commander of a United States cruiser that there might be trouble with Mexico. So we put well out to sea."

Mr. Salisbury expressed his gratification at being able to get such good tropical pictures in spite of the many handicaps. Not the least of these, he said, was the rain, which he described as "eternal." In the jungle, he said, there was not alone the darkness, but the water as well. Even in the dry season there would be several showers a day.

Asked as to how he intended to release his pictures to the public, Mr. Salisbury said he woud probably select five or six or seven thousand feet of the finest stuff for a feature, while much of the remainder will be cut for division between scientific bodies and educational institutions. He thought it probable he would be able to compile quite a bit for release in one of the weeklies, but was not decided. He said he was positive, however, that into the feature he would put abundant pep and ginger material to make it worth while.

Mr. Salisbury is in love with the Wisdom. He says he has satisfied himself that she can travel in any water under any conditions. The little craft is now undergoing repairs, getting ready for a trip which its owner, in conjunction with Mr. Beach, contemplates taking to the South Sea islands. The explorer smilingly intimated that these trips run into money, as with gasoline sometimes as expensive as 75 cents a gallon, and as one and a half gallons are necessary to drive the boat a mile it is essential that results be obtained in a film way.

Mr. Salisbury said for the next month or so he would be busy going over his film, editing and titling it, and that as soon as possible he would show his pictures to the trade.

The shipment was addressed to The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, Indianapolis, Indiana. The postage required was 23 cents, 2 cents less than the express rate on the same package.

EDWARD LYELL FOX HAS SLAVIC STAR.

Tatjana Yrrah, famous slavic beauty, arrived last week in New York from Europe after severing her connections with the German Flora Film Co., who had been starring her during the past four years. Owing to the extreme shortage of film, all the available celluloid being commandeered by the government, the big German film manufacturers have minimized their output. Since there are practically no features of any kind produced at this time Yrrah considered her contract with the Flora Film Co. automatically annulled, but the company endeavored to hold Yrrah, claiming that they were not responsible for war conditions which made limitation of their production imperative. After taking up the matter with the military authorities Yrrah was allowed to leave the country. She is now under contract to Edward Lyell Fox, well known American war correspondent, who, on his recent trip through the warring European countries, saw a number of Yrrah feature films and signed her for two years. Mr. Fox intends forming a producing company and release Yrrah features through one of the big service corporations.

Mutual Secures Charles Frohman Stars and Plays

President John R. Freuler and Alf Hayman Consummate the Deal Forming the Empire All Star Corporation With a Capital of $2,500,000, All of Which is Subscribed

NEGOTIATIONS which have been pending for some time were successfully terminated last week whereby all the plays controlled by the Charles Frohman Company and many of the stars now under the direction of that organization, will be ushered into the fold of motion pictures under the auspices of the newly formed Empire All Star Corporation, formed by the joint efforts of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Alf Hayman, representative of the Charles Frohman Company. The new corporation is capitalized at $2,500,000 and the entire stock has been subscribed. The pictures will be distributed by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The new company will maintain offices in New York, Chicago and London, with studios in New York, California and Chicago. A number of the Frohman stars of major magnitude have been placed under special picture contracts and operations are to begin at once.

The announcement carries special significance in connection with Mr. Freuler's declaration of policy "big stars only." "The ground work of policy which has borne fruit in this announcement was laid way back in 1915," observed Mr. Freuler. "I am pleased, at this time, to point to my assertion that for 1917 the Mutual Film Corporation would be interested in only the stars and productions of the first quality and that 'no proposition is too big for Mutual.' The Mutual Film Corporation is fortunately equipped and ready to deal with the biggest possibilities in the industry, and to carry through its projects and plans with safe assurance.

"It is particularly significant of the future of this industry that I am now able to say this. Such a project as the Frohman transaction we are now announcing was not conceivably possible two years ago. We are on the way. The new picture company brings to the screen the famous array of Charles Frohman successes and the Frohman players; also a corps of directors trained in and chosen from the fields of the highest attainment in Europe and America.

Augustus Thomas, eminent dramatist, whose name is a part of the institution of the Charles Frohman Company, becomes an important factor in the new producing corporation. Mr. Thomas is the scenario chief and advisor to the picture producing interests of the Charles Frohman Company, standing there in the same relation that he has held so long with so much distinction in relation to the Frohman stage productions.

"It is the intention of the new concern to give the name of Charles Frohman the same high value in the motion picture field that it has had so long in the theatre of the speaking stage," says the official Charles Frohman Company announcement.

"It was one of Mr. Frohman's principles, strictly adhered to all through his long managerial career, to deal fairly with the authors who wrote to him and to see to it that they were always promptly and well paid for their work. The new corporation will pursue the same policy with reference to the authors of the plays to be put into pictures. At regular intervals they will be given full and complete statements of the receipts upon which their royalties are based, just as they are when they write for the legitimate stage, and all payments to them will be made up with the promptness that Mr. Frohman made the rule of his offices. For the first time in the history of the film business the author will be given full, complete weekly statements of the receipts upon which his royalty is based."

Work on the first of the Frohman-Mutual pictures will begin in New York about February 1. Announcement will be made later of the title of the play and the name of the star who is to appear.

It will be the policy of the picture concern to produce only the great successes of the Frohman offerings, presenting the star of the original stage presentation and using the complete original casts in so far as it proves possible to re-engage the players in the supporting parts.

Universal Employees Celebrate

As Guests of the Company They Make Merry at Reisenweber's—Nearly a Thousand Present.

THE employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and their relatives and friends, were the guests of the firm at a supper party and dance on the evening of Saturday, January 13, in the ballroom of Reisenweber's, New York. Close on to a thousand persons were present. The personal hosts were Carl Laemmle, president of Universal; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; P. A. Powers, treasurer; Joe Brandt, general manager, and the directors of the company.

The occasion was the fourth annual affair of its kind. Since the first function, this one night in the year has been looked forward to with keen anticipation by every unit of the Universal forces, and this year's supper party and dance, if unanimous animation and comment is to be taken as a criterion, was the "good timiest" of them all. To merely borrow the trite phrase, "all present had a good time," would be unfair to Mine Host Universal, for the affair was conducted and managed in such a manner and was appreciated by the participants to such an extent as to deserve only superlatives.

The guests sat down to dinner at tables set out under a transformed ballroom—a ballroom transformed not only with decorations of Universal colors, but a ballroom transformed in atmosphere until one really felt, upon entering, that it was the parlor of the Universal family. During the dinner music was furnished by a large orchestra, and vaudeville and cabaret performers did their successful best to entertain. Under the balming influence of the festival-charged atmosphere, office caste gave way to a fellow-feeling of merriment.

After dinner had been served dancing was in order, and that that form of pastime is appreciated by the guests of Universal was made convincingly apparent by the number of participants. Every person present who could dance took advantage of the extremely "dancable" music.

The affair ended at the hour at which all good affairs end.

METRO ELECTS OFFICERS.

The annual election of officers of the Metro Pictures Corporation was held on Friday, January 12. John Kunsky, of Detroit, one of the leading factors in the motion picture industry in the Middle West, was placed upon the directorate. With but one exception all the officers were re-elected. They are:

President, Richard A. Rowland, of New York; first vice-president, Louis B. Mayer, of Boston; second vice-president, James B. Clark, of Pittsburg; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, of New York; general counsel, J. Robert Rubin, of New York; executive committee, Richard A. Rowland, Joseph W. Engel, Louis B. Mayer; directors, Richard A. Rowland, Joseph W. Engel, Louis B. Mayer, John Kunsky, L. Lawrence Weber, A. S. Beymer, O. N. Davies, John D. Clark and James B. Clark.

Mr. Mayer succeeds Mr. Fitzgerald as first vice-president, and Mr. Kunsky succeeds him as director.

Reports which were submitted at the meeting show that Metro has enjoyed a successful year. Plans for the ensuing year will be announced shortly.

CHILD STAR IN ONE ACT PLAYS.

Announcement is made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company that Zoe Rae, the child actress, will be featured in a series of one-act photoplays. Demand by the exhibitors for more releases in which little Zoe appeared has been so great that it was decided that the only way to accede to this demand was to put out a series in which the talented child played the leading role.

Maryland Exhibitors Organizing

Enthusiastic Meeting Held at Baltimore—Good Progress Shown—Will Elect Prominent Officers at Next Meeting.

ONE of the most enthusiastic gatherings of the Maryland exhibitors which has taken place recently occurred on Sunday afternoon, January 7, at the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, due to the organizing of the new Maryland Exhibitors' League. As had been arranged, the press was not admitted to the meeting, but through our endeavors in scouting, the following details were brought forth. Among those who assembled, there were noticed many new faces who did not attend either of the previous meetings and a general atmosphere of good feeling and earnestness was prevalent. The meeting lasted about one hour.

J. Louis Rome, Chairman of the By-Laws Committee, presented copies of the code he has been working on for the approval of the members present. A copy of the code used by the former League was obtained by him from F. C. Weber; but an entirely new one is to be formed. The draft which was presented by the committee was not adopted, but a copy of it was given to each member present, who will read it over and at the next meeting hand it in with suggestions he wishes to make.

The temporary officers, Louis Schlichter, president; Frank Hoernig, treasurer, and T. D. Goldberg, secretary, still remain in office, for there was no election held for permanent officers of the organization. At the next meeting, which will be held on Sunday afternoon, January 21, at 2.30 p. m., the election of permanent officers will take place. There will be five, which will consist of president, first vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and treasurer.

The operation of the league will very much resemble the political government of the state and country. Baltimore City will be represented by nine directors, of which the officers are to count as five. In other words, each officer will be a director automatically upon taking office, then there will remain four to be elected by the members of the league. The city is to be divided geographically into nine sections, each section having a delegate to the board of directors and no two directors residing in the same district or section can be elected as directors. As to the State of Maryland, each county is to be represented at the league by one director.

If the film exchange men think that there is anything antagonistic in the attitude of the league toward them, they are in error, for these men want it expressly understood that they are not banding together for that purpose, but for the general welfare of the industry in the city and state. There were about 46 exhibitors present at the meeting, which represents almost half the number of exhibitors in Baltimore city. Among them were: L. A. DeHoff, G. H. Gaffney, T. T. Hildebrandt, Guy L. Wonders, T. D. Goldberg, Louis Schlichter, Frank Hoernig, J. Louis Rome, W. Leight, I. Berman, W. Albers, V. A. Valentini, G. O. Williams, G. W. B. Presser, W. D. Pacy, W. Freichtag, J. Selckman, M. A. Berger, S. Berman, and J. Rabinovitz.

A letter from Sam Spedon, now connected with this paper, was read before the meeting, in which he offered to come to Baltimore to help them in organizing. It is stated that this action on the part of Mr. Spedon and the Moving Picture World was appreciated by those present and they wish to thank him for the offer. At their next meeting this matter will be taken up as to just when it will be most suitable to have him address the organization.

Brooklyn Exhibitors to Celebrate

Grand Carnival and Ball to Be Given at Stauch's, Coney Island, on February 21.

THE carnival and ball to be held under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island on February 21 at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island, promises to be the biggest affair ever given by the motion picture showmen of Greater New York. All branches of the industry will be represented, as well as an enormous public attendance expected, to make the festivity the greatest gathering of patrons, exhibitors, manufacturers and photo players ever collected under one roof.

Beginning February 1, the Brooklyn Daily Eagle will conduct a voting contest to elect the most popular actor and actress to be crowned king and queen of the carnival.

The Brooklyn organization is today the largest local of the National League, comprising 110 theater owners in Brooklyn and Long Island. It has in addition enlisted the active support of 190 more exhibitors who are not as yet members of the League, but who have promised enthusiastic co-operation to make the grand carnival and ball the affair of the season. The proceeds of the entertainment will be used in a fund to fight the pending Sunday closing law, also the proposed movie tax legislation.

One of the meritorious features decided on by the entertainment committee is the fact that an advertising program will not be issued. In doing this the Brooklyn organization is shattering all precedents as it has been the past custom to issue programs and then solicit advertising from film manufacturers and others in the trade. "Eat, Dance and Be Merry" has been adopted as the slogan and all efforts of the organization are concentrated to make this slogan a reality.

Maritime Exhibitors Protest

Make Strong Objection to Advance Deposit System—Propose Organization to Co-operate on That and Similar Proposals.

OFFICIALS of the Maritime Provinces Motion Picture Exhibitors' League suggest as a step toward a national organization in Canada, an affiliation with the "Canadian Motion Picture Association," an organization of exhibitors in Montreal. At a recent meeting of the Montreal motion picture men it was voted that no member of the association pay any advance deposit or deposits to the film exchanges on features or serials. A resolution was also passed to the effect that no member of the association should sign any contracts or agreements with any film exchange unless the same was first signed by the proper authority of the film exchange prior to the exhibitor's signature.

These movements, the Maritime Provinces men believe, are to be far-reaching in their influences to break up the existing evils of the trade at the present time. The exhibitors in these three provinces are scattered over such a wide area that it is a difficult matter for them to meet at frequent intervals, but it is felt that a general get-together of all exhibitors would mean a great deal in their pockets in the long run. It is declared that the deposit system is fast waning, and where exchange men first demanded substantial deposits for the big features they are now coming into the territory without these stipulations. An example of this is cited in the case of the Clara Kimball Young picture, "The Common Law." It was announced by representatives that this picture would not be brought into this territory unless deposits were made. Exhibitors refused to comply with the demands of the film men, but the picture was screened a short time ago in Halifax without a deposit being paid by the exhibitor.

By the union of the provincial organizations, it is felt that a great deal more can be accomplished in the way of adjusting differences and evils that seem to exist throughout the dominion. The absence of a national organization is also felt in Toronto, and members of the industry there are anxious to see immediate steps taken toward the formation of such a society. The year 1916 saw considerable development in the line of organization. At the present time practically every province with the exception of New Brunswick has an operators' union. And the province of Ontario has even gone so far as to have a strong exchange association. These are said to be but the beginnings. All the provincial associations of whatever type should be welded into one strong, practical national organization.

Local Number One Meeting a Hummer

Sunday Closing and the Deposit System Discussed with Much Pep.

ONE of the most lively and downright businesslike meetings ever held by Local Number One of the New York City Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was that which took place at its headquarters on Wednesday, January 10. It was a general and open meeting of all the exhibitors of four boroughs.

The first subject presented for discussion was the three cent per seat tax on every theatre in Greater New York, for defraying the expenses of legal council and legislation to contest the Sunday closing law. Sam Trigger, the president, occupying the chair, had the secretary read the following statement which appeared in the New York Morning World, January 10:

The Sunday Closing Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry failed yesterday to arrive at an agreement as to whether film manufacturers or exhibitors should bear the principal burden of the fight in this State for Sunday movies.

Film manufacturers contend their interests are national and that the question of closing theaters in this State concerns the exhibitors here far more than it does them. On the other hand, Lee A. Ochs, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, declares the issues concern film manufacturers just as much if not more than the exhibitors, and therefore financial aid should be forthcoming.

Mr. Ochs is the only representative of exhibitors on the committee. The other members are William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor and Walter W. Irwin.

Lee Ochs, at the request of President Trigger, explained what took place at the meeting of the National Association. He contradicted this statement of the Morning World as absolutely erroneous. The National Association is pooling its contributions with the exhibitors and all expenses will be paid from the fund, regardless of who was most effected. He also stated that up to January 9, the producers had contributed more liberally and he was ashamed that the exhibitors had shown so little interest in so serious a matter as the closing of their theaters on Sunday. "If this Sunday closing law is sustained, and the chances are it will be, there will be a whole lot of us go out of business," he said.

This started the ball rolling and immediately a motion was made and carried that the presidents of the leagues of the three boroughs, Manhattan, Brooklyn and Bronx, with their secretaries, visit every theatre and collect the three cent tax from every theatre owner in their respective boroughs who had not already paid it. There were one hundred exhibitors present and every one of them who had not sent in their contributions made out their checks and they were collected by members of the finance committee.

A representative of the Authors' League was introduced to the meeting by Mr. Trigger. He said he was merely a counterfeit, not the real thing. Rex Beach wanted to appear in person and address the meeting, but was prevented by a sudden sickness from carrying out his intention. In behalf of the league and Mr. Beach, he wished to assure the exhibitors that the Authors' League was with them and would give them their assistance in protest against Sunday closing and unjust censorship. He said he was very glad he had no other message, because he could not talk on his feet.

An appeal was made for new members, and when it was announced that the initiation fee had been suspended several exhibitors signed the application blanks distributed through the audience.

Grant Anson of the legislation committee was called upon to tell what the committee had learned about the proposed bills to be introduced in the legislature in favor of Sunday opening. He stated that it looks very much as if the legislature is pretty evenly divided on the subject. It requires at least seventy-six votes to carry a bill through the Assembly and as far as he could learn the moving picture adherents were shy about thirteen votes, both in the Assembly and Senate. It, therefore, behooves every exhibitor through the state to get in touch with his local representative in the Senate and Assembly and use every legitimate means to convince him that Sunday pictures should be permitted as a constitutional right and a just demand of the people.

He laid particular stress on the possibility that the liquor interests would probably be against them, backed by its established lobbyists and one of the strongest business organizations in existence. The liquor people know that the Sunday pictures have cleared their back rooms on Sunday and closed their side doors.

A voice from someone present was heard to proclaim, "We need have no fear from the liquor interests; they have troubles of their own in prohibition legislation."

Some one present asked Mr. Ochs, as an exhibitor director of the National Association, what has been done with the Bender case to be tried before the Court of Appeals at Albany. Mr. Ochs replied that the Bender case was so vague, so inadequate as a test, that it had not been placed on the court's calendar. It was a private case and not a real or bona fide exhibitors' case. The National Association has instructed its attorney, William Seabury, to have an actual exhibitor, an owner of a moving picture theater, open his place on Sunday and present it before the court and have a real test made on appeal. As to employing other and more eminent council to present the case, it was entirely up to the discretion of the Sunday closing committee, on which the exhibitors were fairly represented.

Mr. Trigger announced that when a meeting was called by the league for the discussion of certain questions, he would see to it, as president, that the program was carried out; therefore, he would like to hear from Louis F. Blumenthal, who was the chairman of the committee on deposits with the exchanges.

Mr. Blumenthal said he had called on Mr. Sherry, of the Paramount exchange, and asked him what decision he had come to on withdrawing the deposit system in answer to Mr. Trigger's letter. Mr. Sherry simply said it was the policy of the Paramount, based on the quality of its program, and he thought they should be protected. Mr. Blumenthal then asked him if the Hoy Agency reports, as set forth by Mr. Trigger's letter, should not do away with deposits. Mr. Sherry told him he would take the matter up with Mr. Zukor and Mr. Abrams and see what they had to say about it. He thought if any other arrangement could be discovered to secure protection, the deposit might be eliminated. Mr. Blumenthal said the Paramount was the only exchange he had called on; the others he would visit as soon as possible.

Charles Steiner arose and stated that he had thought out a method of protecting both the exchanges and the exhibitors. If every exhibitor would deposit one hundred or two hundred dollars in a trust fund, to be held in trust by the League and then employ the Hoy Agency in the same way the exchanges do, the exhibitors would know where their money was, that it was drawing interest and the exchange would be protected against loss. If the exhibitor didn't pay for his service at the end of the week, the League would make it good out of the fund and notify all the other exchanges not to give him service until he settled his indebtedness to the fund.

Mr. Steiner declared he had $2,300 on deposit with an exchange which is rumored to be in a very shaky condition. "If it goes up the flue, my money will go with it. If this happens once, we will have another think."

At this point a motion to adjourn was made. Everybody made a rush for their petitions and slides for open Sundays. These were given to all exhibitors free of charge, and the one hundred thousand on hand were not enough to supply the demand. The league has ordered one million of these petitions. Any exhibitor in Greater New York who wishes can secure them at the league's rooms, 218 West 42d street, New York City.

MANY JOIN MILWAUKEE LOCAL.

Thirty moving picture houses in Milwaukee, Wis., have joined the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. This brings the representation up to 90 per cent. of the photoplay houses in the city. Special benefit to the industry is shown in the fact that after March 1 no member of the league will exhibit any picture having a white slave trend. This is a part of the movement to eliminate fraudulent and misleading advertising from local exhibitions.

Exhibitors' Ball Assured Success

New Jersey Exhibitors' League to Hold Affair Feb. 1—Many Stars Signify Intention to Be Present.

FROM all indications the first annual ball of the New Jersey State Exhibitors' League, Feb. 1, will be a great social success. F. E. Samuels, the secretary and manager of the affair, reports that already many of the great screen stars have answered his invitations in the affirmative. Miss Anita Stewart, "the Dresden Doll of the Movies," has generously volunteered to lead the grand march. Her partner will be one of the big stars. Miss Florence LaBadie, Thanhauser, and other stars of that company will be present. Miss LaBadie will be the principal judge in the contest of young ladies to join the ranks of the film stars.

Among others who have signified their intention of being present are Pearl White, Pathe; E. K. Lincoln, Vitagraph; Marguerite Courtot, Famous Players; Dorothy Green, International-Pathe. Miss Violet Mersereau and several of the Bluebird players will perform one of the characteristic Bluebird stunts. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro, have engaged a box and will hold a reception. Little Madge Evans, World, promises to be an interesting attendant at the ball. Miss Norma Talmadge has written Mr. Samuels that if she is in this territory at the time she will positively appear.

With Billy Quirk, president of the Screen Club, and a large delegation of Screeners present at the affair, an enjoyable time is assured all. One of the biggest crowds of the season is expected to throng Krueger's Auditorium on the appointed day.

And now a word about Mr. Samuels, who engineers the affair. He is the efficient director of the present exhibitors' ball. Mr. Samuels was the director and originator in 1913 of the exposition in the Grand Central Palace. He also successfully operated the second affair at the same place in 1914. He has had much experience in handling affairs of this kind, and his methods have evoked nothing but favorable comment from the organized exhibitors.

Last week Mr. Samuels closed negotiations with Frank A. Tichenor, of the Vim Comedies, whereby the former is to leave New York Feb. 4 for Jacksonville, Florida, where he will act as assistant detail and mechanical manager to Mr. Tichenor. Mr. Samuels will remain in Florida all winter, returning in May to go to the summer studio in Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. Samuels has made many friends in Newark in the short time that he has been here, and they will be especially interested in following Mr. Samuels' whereabouts.

BALTIMORE EXHIBITORS GUESTS OF GEO. MANN.

George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players' Exchange, Washington, D. C., opened the New Year with a get-together luncheon to Baltimore exhibitors on January 3 at the Hotel Rennert. In addressing the exhibitors afterward, Mr. Mann said: "We have met here to further promote the interests of the exhibitor in order to make the year 1917 even more profitable than its predecessor." Mr. Mann discussed the manner in which he has been able to assist the exhibitors of his district by bringing pressure to bear upon the express companies looking to more prompt and reliable deliveries, with the result that the exhibitors have received practically 100 per cent. service during the year.

Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and of the Paramount manufacturers, dwelt particularly upon the plans of his companies for increased service to the exhibitors.

H. P. Mulford, newly appointed publicity man of the Famous Players Exchange, delivered an able address on the publicity plans for 1917. E. R. Carr dwelt particularly upon the problems of the small town exhibitor and the problems of success of the small town exhibitor in his district; and other addresses followed by H. W. Webb, Parkway Theater; Myer Fox, Rialto Theater; J. Louis Rome, Broadway Theater. Others present were: Bernard Depkin, Frank D. Webb, A. F. Gillespey, Arthur Price, Thomas Goldberg, G. Horton Gaffney and W. O. Baker.

MINNEAPOLIS EXHIBITORS DISCUSS DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

A good portion of the weekly meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corp. of the Northwest at Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 2 was given over to discussion of the advance deposit system. The committee having the deposit matter in hand has been given full authority to do as it seems fit in regarding the canceling of service in case deposits are not returned. A committee was appointed to consult with and advise the Mayor of Minneapolis regarding film matters and it is composed of Thomas J. Hamlin, chairman; William Koenig, Bijou theatre, Minneapolis, and M. A. Hoppenrath, Alhambra theatre, Minneapolis.

James Delves Dead

Secretary of Pennsylvania League Succumbs After Operation for Appendicitis.

JAMES DELVES, secretary of the Pittsburgh branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and a well-known figure among exhibitors and the moving picture trade in general, died at his home in Flowers avenue, Pittsburgh, on December 27. He was fifty-six years of age.

The news of Mr. Delves' death came as a great shock and expressions of regret were heard on every hand. He had undergone an operation for appendicitis at the Homeopathic Hospital December 17 and was apparently on the road to recovery. The end came suddenly, as Mrs. Delves found her husband dead, seated in a chair.

The Late James Delves.

Funeral services, conducted by the Masonic fraternity, were held on December 30 and the interment took place at the Homewood cemetery. The deceased had no children, and is survived only by his wife, the only relative in this country.

Mr. Delves came from England ten years ago and settled in Pittsburgh. He later entered the exhibiting business and five years ago he was elected secretary of the Exhibitors' League of Pittsburgh, which position he occupied until the time of his death. He was secretary of the state branch for the past three years and occupied a similar position in the national body for one year ending with the convention last July.

At a special meeting of the league, January 4, resolutions were adopted unanimously as follows:

Whereas: Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has taken from our midst our devoted brother and secretary, James Delves, and,

Whereas, we have lost and will miss his good advice and counsel, therefore his name shall live and be revered to our memories in the future, for the good service he has performed in the past, and,

Whereas, as his bereaved wife has lost a devoted husband and companion, therefore be it

Resolved, that we extend to his widow in her bereavement our heartfelt sympathy and condolence. Be it further

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to his widow, also to the trade papers, and they be spread upon our minutes, and that our State charter shall be draped for a period of thirty days.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania, Resolution Committee,
I. W. SHEARER,
G. W. SALMER,
F. J. HERRINGTON.

To fill the vacancy created by Mr. Delves' death, G. W. Sahner was selected. At the same session, H. C. Kliehm was selected to fill the unexpired term of I. W. Shearer, as treasurer, resigned.

Ontario Exhibitors to Hold Convention

Three-Day Meeting and Ball at Toronto Proposed for An Early Date.

MUCH greater activities are in view for the Ontario Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association than have been enjoyed by this organization during the past two years, according to an announcement by President Baillie, of Toronto. Officers of the association have decided to hold a three-day convention at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, the main social feature of which will be a film ball in a large local auditorium. An effort will be made to secure the attendance of every exhibitor in Ontario at this congress. Matters of vital importance to the film field in Ontario will be discussed.

As a preliminary move to the big convention, the officers of the Exhibitors' Association, together with a number of Toronto exhibitors, conferred with the exchange managers of Toronto at a special meeting held here on Tuesday, January 9. The main subject discussed at this conference was the advisability of complete co-operation between exhibitors and exchange managers. It is the aim of both sections of the trade to become so strongly organized that legislative and other matters can be dealt with in a thorough and satisfactory manner.

Prominent men of the film industry in Toronto have expressed the desire to see the provincial field well organized at a near date and the coming convention will be utilized as a means to secure the speedy concentration of efforts. The dates for the convention and ball have not yet been picked.

News from the Black Hills

Secretary Peterson of the Black Hills League Writes of Conditions in His Territory.

SOME months ago I read an article in The Moving Picture World written by a man who had never been here and who roasted Black Hills. It might interest you to know the real conditions here. First, there is the Morris Grand Theater in Hot Springs, managed by J. F. Parks. It is a modern theater seating about 500. Triangle, Vitagraph, Fox, World and Pathe pictures are shown. The Morris Grand is soon to be equipped with new Simplex machines. Mr. Parks is a new man in the business. He is interested in the Bank Light Company and other ventures, and is an exhibitor because he likes it.

At Rapid City there is the Elks Theater. A. J. Rose is manager and uses leading features. The house seats about 800, is modern and is well conducted. Two Simplex machines are used. Mr. Rose has had the Elks Theater here almost four years. At one time there were four theaters, but arrangements between Mr. Rose and Mr. Keys caused two to close, leaving the Elks and Dreamland. From reports I have, Mr. Keys closed the Dreamland on January 1st.

H. B. Hurst is the manager of the Deadwood Theater, at Deadwood. This is a modern house seating about 800. Mr. Hurst is blind, but despite his handicap is an extremely successful exhibitor. His show is one of the best in the Black Hills.

The Homestake and Princess Theaters are in Lead. The Princess has a capacity of about 300 and uses service and an occasional feature. Mr. Crow is manager. The new Ford Theater is to open soon. It will probably be managed by Horace Clark, the owner.

Spearfish has the Princess Theater. James O'Neil is manager, and, considering the size of the town, he gives a very good show. He is a first class exhibitor.

At Newell, a farming town of about 400, there is the Theatorium. It is managed by Mr. Levein and Mr. Cuddy. They show three times a week. They have plans under way for a new theater.

Here, Mr. Couch and I have the Iris, a remodeled opera house seating about 500. We have everything modern and show Triangle, Fox, Greater Vitagraph, Metro, World and specials. We use two machines and an orchestra of from five to fifteen pieces. We issue a house organ every week. We think we have a good house, and try to give as good a show as is possible.

We expect to have a meeting at Deadwood in February.

LEO PETERSON,
Secretary Black Hills Exhibitors' League.

St. Louis Exhibitors' Meeting

Two New Classes of Membership Created — Special Committees Make Reports.

TWO new classes of membership to the Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis were created at a meeting held in the Benoist building on Friday, January 5. The new classes of membership are "Associated" and "Honorary." Any individual connected with the motion picture industry in any capacity other than owner or manager of a motion picture theater is eligible to become an Associated member. The privilege of "Honorary" membership shall belong to all individuals who have benefitted the organization in a manner to deserve the distinction. Honorary members shall pay no dues and shall have no vote. Associated members shall pay $5.00 initiation fee and $1.00 a month dues.

It was decided by a vote to request all members of the Association to run a slide or fifty feet of animated advertising at their respective theaters, the proceeds of which shall be for the benefit of the organization. The organization committee was instructed to get into communication with all the members and secure their consent to the plan.

To draft a new set of bylaws, the Association voted to employ a competent attorney, same to be presented at the second meeting in February.

A motion was carried to appoint a committee of five to review features and report to the Association any facts pertaining to these features which, in their estimation, deserve the attention of the members.

The Chairman of the organization committee reported that it was the recommendation of his committee that this is not an opportune time for the St. Louis Association to join the National League.

The Grievance Committee reported that the dispute between the Arsenal Theater and the International Film Company had been adjusted satisfactorily. The Legislative Committee reported that the lighting bill is still pending, and that there is very much agitation about censorship. The Serial Committee reported that the Metro Film Service has waived deposits on all serials, to members of the association only.

Two new members were added to the organization—Eugene Freund, of the Cinderella Theater, and Edward F. Mayer, of the New Bridge Theater.

Ontario Exhibitors' Association

Organized January 9 at Meeting Held in Toronto—Large Attendance Recorded.

THREATENING conditions for the moving picture industry in Ontario proved to be a sufficient spur to precipitate prompt action among the members of the trade in this territory on Tuesday, January 9. A meeting called by the Ontario Motion Picture Protective Association, under suggestion of F. R. Lennon, assistant general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Co., and president of the Exchange Managers' Association, was called to order at 2.20 in the clubrooms of the Exhibitors' Association, Queen and Spadina streets, Toronto.

A. Bailey, president of the association, addressed the gathered members, who numbered about one hundred, on the adverse legislation which seemed to be threatening the whole industry. He stated that it was practically agreed that an Exhibitor-Exchange Association was unworkable. Therefore, his suggestion was that the present Managers' Association maintain its status while a third association be formed, which would form a point of contact or unity between these two bodies.

This "third party" is to be called the "Motion Picture Men's Association of Ontario."

Mr. Lennon, in a masterly and powerful speech—in which he did not mince words in any degree—pointed out the necessity of this third organization which would unite both the exhibitors and exchange men all over Ontario in one solid body.

Mr. Lennon had purposely made a trip through a portion of Ontaria to feel out the exhibitors as to their opinions in the matter and found that they were unanimous for the formation of the new association.

W. J. Liscombe, secretary of the Exhibitors' Association, and Mr. Thayler made some remarks at this juncture along the lines of Mr. Lennon's speech.

Mr. Burnside, of Collingwood, Ontario, told of instances in his own district which showed that the united exhibitors would have a power in their grasp stronger even than the newspapers and that they could defeat political parties who would not support the industry.

Mr. Sexton, a well known exhibitor of Toronto, made a fervent plea for the exhibitors to respond generously with funds, so that the organization could be brought to a head, and he stated that without funds this could not be possible.

At the close of this gentleman's speech, Mr. Lennon was called upon again as to his ideas of the formation and policy of the new body. To do this, Mr. Lennon traced legislation from the original licenses when the industry started, and the gradual rate and increase of same until the present period. He pointed out the impositions of the Board of Censors on the trade, and the raise of the censor fee from 50 cents to $2. In all these legislative measures the industry has not been consulted in any way, and, in fact, no notice was ever given to the industry as to what would take place. Mr. Lennon then referred to the success of the moving picture men in the Maritime Provinces in a recent fight with the Government there.

The war tax measure, recently introduced, was explained by Mr. Lennon and the reduction of the percentage rate to the exchange for the handling of the tickets from two to one per cent. was held up as an instance of the manner in which the Government refused to work with the trade for the betterment of conditions.

The evil of recensoring or recalling a film once it passed the Ontario board was illustrated by the speaker, and, as he remarked very forcibly, it seemed to be the attitude of the Government to pay no attention whatever to the justice and rights of the moving picture men in Ontario.

Being members of the fifth largest industry and giving already to the Government over a million and a half revenue, in addition to the $14,000 which the exchanges pay for the privilege of doing business in Ontario, Mr. Lennon thought that the exhibitors should have some say in the legislative measures. He pointed out that the exchanges labored under a 33⅓ per cent. duty, which, of course, must be paid by the exhibitors.

He pointed out that the Government desired to place a measure through which would take 10 per cent. of the gross receipts of every theater, and, as every exhibitor knew, under present tax conditions, it was impossible for the exhibitor to pay 10 per cent. of his profits, let alone 10 per cent. of his gross receipts, and make money.

Messrs. Liscombe, Alexander, Bailey, Ben Rogers of the Fox Film Corporation, and Mr. Kauffman of the Famous Players, Mr. Barret of the Mutual, Mr. Gilberty, Karn Lewis and L. E. Ouimet of the Specialty Import Co. were among the speakers who followed.

Finally it was decided to call for names for the offices of president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer of the new Motion Picture Men's Association of Ontario. This was done and the election held at the same time, the results being as follows:

F. R. Lenno, who was largely responsible for the inauguration of the new idea, is president.

A. Bailey, the president of the Exhibitors' Association, was elected vice-president of the new body. Mr. Alexander, a well known exhibitor, treasurer, and W. A. Bach of the publicity service department of the Universal Film Co. was elected secretary.

The meeting then adjourned with the understanding that those appointed would meet promptly and lay a plan of campaign whereby the rights of the industry would be secured and protected in Ontario.

Brooklyn Meeting

Regular Midnight Session Held at Triangle Theatre—Fairbanks Attends.

THE regular midnight meeting of the Brooklyn exhibitors was held at the Triangle Theatre, Saturday, Jan. 13. The night was very stormy, notwithstanding this there was a fair attendance to greet Douglas. He was introduced by Mr. Manheimer, the president, who said Douglas wanted to say something and would talk a few minutes on a matter of interest to the league.

Mr. Fairbanks said: "I am misrepresented. I do not want to say 'something' but I will. The second announcement, that I will talk a few minutes, is correct."

His time was so limited he was obliged to embody his few remarks in a short story and a hurried good night. Before leaving he was given a rising vote of thanks.

H. H. Buxbaum of the General Film Co., the principal speaker of the meeting, said: "There is no truth in the rumor that the G. F. is going into bankruptcy. On January first it had a clean bill of sale for all its film. The G. F. will book one feature a week at reasonable prices, that is its intention. It will not have any stated dates of release at graduated prices, the original price will stand throughout the life of the film on its intrinsic value. Everybody will be treated alike.

"The General Film Company has about decided to advertise its releases, particularly its features, in daily papers. It does not mean by this that it will not use the trade papers. They will use them as formerly, but we feel there is need for the publication of our pictures and a direct appeal to the general public, which the trade papers do not reach."

In response to the question as to how "The Barrier" would be released, Mr. Buxbaum said it was not definitely decided, but thought it possible it might be presented through the General Film.

The meeting was full of interest and many questions were discussed, the deposit system, Sunday opening, and more especially the question "How can we make our theaters pay?"

The World regrets that it is so close to the day of issue it cannot give space to them all. It will give them attention in next week's columns.

A motion was made to authorize the president to appoint ten delegates to the State Convention, Jan. 23, 24, 25. The motion was carried and the following delegates were decided upon, their expenses to be paid by the league:

W. H. Hollender, H. Weingarten, C. Fisher, Louis Levine, Rudolph Saunders, John Manheimer, Mm. Brandt, Harry Shapiro, M. D. Matto and A. J. Stockheimer.

OHIO EXHIBITORS WANT HARMONY.

A movement is on foot among the exhibitors and exchange men of northern Ohio to bring the various branches of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League in Ohio together into a strong organization.

In order to accomplish this the Northeastern Ohio branch, with headquarters in Cleveland, has conferred with the Cleveland Screen Club, relative to obtaining the latter's support of the proposed state convention, which is scheduled to be held sometime in February.

It is the desire of the Northeastern Ohio league to obtain the help of the screen club with a view to getting the Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati and other league organizations to take part in this convention. There has been some friction owing to several misunderstandings, according to the Cleveland exhibitors, who have adopted a very conciliatory policy in their new efforts.

Charles Ray Triangle-Kay Bee Star

TRIANGLE patrons will be glad to learn that Charles Ray has just signed a new contract with Thomas H. Ince to appear in Kay Bee features for the next two years. Ray is generally conceded to be one of the most remarkable young stars that the screen has developed, and his loyalty to the Ince management assures Triangle patrons of many new and striking examples of character acting during the months to come.

Charles Ray.

Ray is one of the very few film favorites who have acted under the same management since their entry into the pictures. It was in December, 1912, that he made his first appearance at the Inceville studios in a Civil War drama entitled "The Favorite Son." A graduate from the ranks of the Pacific Coast stock companies of T. Daniel Frawley and Lewis S. Stone, Ray came before the camera unheralded, but he soon developed a style of acting that has steadily lifted him to the topmost rank of juvenile stars.

When the Triangle released its first big features in 1915, Ray created a furore in "The Coward" with Frank Keenan. His name was not headlined on the billing at first, but the sheer power and realism of his impersonation of the weakling son of an old war hero won the unqualified tribute of every film critic in the business. Overnight he jumped into a position at the head of the procession that has never been questioned for a moment since.

Following up the big impression made in this wartime classic, Ray appeared with Billie Burke in "Peggy," with William H. Thompson in "The Divident," with Frank Keenan in "Honor Thy Name," with Bessie Barriscale in "Home," with Louise Glaum in "The Wolf Woman," was co-starred with Bessie Barriscale in "Plain Jane" and "A Corner in Colleens," and starred individually in "The Deserter" and "The Honorable Algy." His latest appearance on the Triangle program was with Dorothy Dalton in "The Weaker Sex."

TERRY RAMSAYE IN TOWN.

Terry Ramsaye, publicity man for the Mutual Film Corporation, was in New York last week for the first time since the Mutual offices moved to Chicago. He came down to assist in the concluding ceremonies of the big Mutual-Frohman deal.

H. A. SPANUTH LOOKS ABOUT BROADWAY.

H. A. Spanuth, formerly a New York film man, came on from Chicago, where he has been located for the past few years, to look over the situation in New York and to introduce his new co-operative motion picture service to his Eastern friends.

Steger to Direct Norma Talmadge

Head of Triumph Enters Into Agreement With Joseph M. Schenck—To Continue on Selznick Program.

JULIUS STEGER, president of the Triumph Film Corporation, has entered into an agreement with Joseph M. Shenck whereby the next and future screen appearances of Norma Talmadge will be personally directed by Mr. Steger and Joseph A. Golden. The Talmadge productions will continue to be released through Selznick Pictures. Messrs. Steger and Golden have a long list of successful photoplays to their credit, the most recent of which are "The Prima Donna's Husband," with Holbrook Blinn, Clara Whipple and Kathryn Browne Decker, and "The Libertine," with John Mason and Alma Hanlon.

Mr. Steger has selected for Miss Talmadge a powerful story, based upon a well-known play of modern life, which will afford the talented artist the fullest opportunities to display her dramatic gifts.

Mr. Schenck, who is president of the Norma Talmadge company, is also associated with Messrs. Steger and Golden in the production of a photoplay in which the leading part will be taken by Evelyn Nesbit. Mr. Steger describes the story as a "page from life," and he says he believes the leading role will aptly fit the woman who is to appear in it; that while in no way is it a reflection of her own experiences, at the same time what she has undergone will peculiarly qualify her for its portrayal.

In discussing last week with a World reporter the ethics of adaptation of classical plays and books Mr. Steger came out flatly for the ideas of the original author. "I believe it to be a matter of vital importance to follow with fidelity the story as outlined by the great mind that has conceived it, to retain the coherency and the power of the story. It should be the ambition of the director to imbue the player with the spirit of the part as we get it from the hand of the author. If the director is by nature sufficiently gifted with dramatic instinct to realize what the author intended to convey, then it is up to him to imbue the player with that spirit.

"How may we fitly characterize this craze for 'rescenarioizing' great books and plays? Would it be unfair to describe it as due to conceit and also as a wilful trespass upon the domains of great minds which have been regarded and acknowledged as such by generations of readers and theatre-goers?

"The hardest audience in the world to entertain with a short dramatic story—and I know it—is a vaudeville audience, because some little fellow away up in the gallery will upset matters on a single false note.

"In a screen play the man who has tried out on an audience the effect of a certain scene is the best qualified to judge what will impress those out in front of the screen, to judge what will hold them spellbound. Your old player knows too well what will make an audience attentive, to make it listen to the story. He knows better than to go far in trespassing on the product of a great mind."

Mr. Steger is enthusiastic about the work of Miss Talmadge. "I have seen the best on the dramatic stage both abroad and in this country," he said, "and I believe the qualifications of this young woman entitle her to the highest consideration. She has a rare combination of heart and intellect and a keen sense for and the deepest appreciation of tragedy. These, together with her wonderful personality and her photographic qualities, should in my opinion make her the foremost woman on the screen."

Brock Forms Corporation

Will Handle Feature Productions on State Rights Basis.

An organization for the purpose of handling big feature productions on a state rights basis was formed this week under the name of The Enlightment Photo Play Corporation, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street, and having at its head Harry J. Brock, who for a number of years has been the head of one of the largest firms of film exporters in the world.

Mr. Brock was the directing head of the firm of Winik-Brock, which conducted a general export business, and which concern maintained offices throughout the world. At one time, Mr. Brock controlled the foreign rights to a large per cent. of the films produced in this country. The Enlightment Photoplay Corporation, organized solely for the purchase and possible production of pictures exclusively for the independent market, will begin operations with the exploitation and distribution of Ivan Abramson's sensational dramatic feature, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," which picture aroused much favorable comment upon the occasion of its trade showing at the Broadway Theatre, December 21.

Robert Vaughn—Thanhouser Leading Man

ROBERT VAUGHN, Thanhouser leading man, has a number of invaluable picture assets—a hero's irresistible smile, a vilyun's terribly contorted face when enraged, an extensive gratifying stage experience and a colorful off-stage career that makes it easy for the press agent to write pieces about him.

Robert Vaughn.

Mr. Vaughn exercised his fiendish potentialities in "Her New York," the recently released Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster Play. He is a most captivating lover in "Mary Lawson's Secret," in which Charlotte Walker is starred. "Mary Lawson's Secret" is to be released in April.

Mr. Vaughn was Miss Walker's leading man in "A Woman's Way," a play written by her husband, Eugene Walter. When Edwin Thanhouser engaged Miss Walker for "Mary Lawson's Secret," she made a special request that Mr. Vaughn appear with her. However, at that time he was just finishing up "Her New York" and was in the midst of "The Vicar of Wakefield," in which he has the important part of Squire Thornhill. To accommodate Miss Walker, Mr. Vaughn arranged a schedule of his time for the next few weeks and worked in three pictures at once.

Mr. Vaughn is a natice of St. Louis. He attended Washington University in that city and studied to be an artist. He went abroad and took a course in decorative art and mural painting in Munich, Germany. So successful was he that he received a commission to make the mural decorations in the Missouri, Kentucky and Illinois buildings at the St. Louis Exposition.

He wanted to be an actor, however—and everybody's happy.

The Tenth Anniversary Number, dated March 10, will contain special articles by men who have made Moving Picture History. Greatest advertising opportunity ever. Advertising forms close February 23.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Values.

MANY exhibitors have rather peculiar ideas about advertising. They gauge the value of an advertisement by the cost of material and printing. If they spend ten dollars and do not build the receipts above that sum, they decide that advertising does not pay, and give it up. This is all wrong. The value of an advertisement does not depend upon the cost, but upon its drawing power and a piece of paper costing two dollars may bring twice as much money to the house as something else that costs ten. It is not the investment that counts, but the investment plus the brains behind it. If you cannot write good advertising yourself, it is better to give five dollars to a man who knows how to write a job that costs two than to spend seven dollars on the job alone and get no results. It is not the pretty picture, the two color inks or the rest that counts. Those help only when the message is there; the message that brings the business. If this were only understood there would be less money spent in advertising and more money made at it. If you have a ten-inch advertisement in the local paper that costs you two dollars an inch, print a message there that will bring more than the twenty dollars. Don't spend money if you have nothing to say, and if you have a message, tell it so that it will reach the greatest number of people. It is a waste of space to merely print an advertisement. Just lately a certain company spent several thousand dollars in an advertising campaign in the Saturday Evening Post. They took entire pages and advertised that their wares could be found everywhere. It was good advertising from a copy point of view, but it sold so much more than the company could deliver that it has been an even better advertisement for dealers in a similar line. We had to work a personal pull to get one of the advertised articles from the factory after vainly inquiring at the leading places most likely to keep the line. The advertisement was too good. It created a demand for a line that did not exist, and having created a demand, it was but natural that this want should be filled by other companies having full stocks of the same style of article. This example does not apply precisely to advertising pictures, but it does show that the mere purchase of space does not suffice. Buy your space and write your copy with your house and attraction in mind. These four things form a single whole and all four must be considered if advertising is to be effective. If you have the house, attraction and space, but not copy, you lose. If you have the space, copy and house, but no attraction, you lose again. Be certain that your advertising matches up.

Kalemized.

This is not the front of the Kalem offices, but the Belle Parrie, owned by Charles Freedman, and located in the Bronx, New York City. He has a Kalem night every Wednesday when he runs a Hazzard of Helen, an episode of The Girl from Frisco and a Ham comedy. Sundays he runs one of the Grant, Police Reporter series, and the cut shows the paper used for one week, with just a hint of the lobby over to the right. Sixteen sheets and a banner for one brand in one week is doing pretty well in these days of competition.

Extra Pages.

Some exhibitors complain that they cannot fill a small house program with a profitable quantity of advertising. It can be done. First election and then Christmas shopping has caused the Movie Fan, the organ of the Rex and Sterling theaters, Greely, Colorado, to run an annex to its regular eight-page, newspaper size issue. They have run mostly twelve and sixteen pages for the last couple of months. It can be done, very evidently.

A Woman Exhibitor.

S. E. Snyder, of the Balboa Publicity Department, sends in the picture of a woman exhibitor in Los Angeles, with this explanatory note:

> A short time ago a young woman came into my office,— a little woman, not much more than a girl—and asked for some pictures to help her advertise a Balboa picture-play which she had booked, and in course of the conversation it transpired that the young woman herself was the proprietor of the Empire theater, which is located at the corner of Pico and Lake streets, Los Angeles,
> The young lady's name is Alta M. Davis. This girl took charge of the Empire theater after two experienced picture play managers had made a conspicuous failure of it. It is the largest house in Los Angeles outside of the down town district. I asked the young lady to write a letter, setting forth her views from the standpoint of a woman exhibitor, and the letter reached me this morning. It is so clearly written and is so intelligently set forth that I determined to send it on to you, feeling sure that it would interest your readers.

Miss Davis looks more like a society debutante than a manager lady, but she shows an ample knowledge of her business as is evidenced by her views. The letter reads:

The subject of a woman successfully conducting a moving picture theater has often been discussed in my presence since I joined the ranks of the exhibitors, and because there are so very few women managers engaged in this modern line of commercial endeavor, I have been asked for an expression of opinion from my own viewpoint regarding the future possibilities and outlook for women exhibitors.

It seems to me there is a great field in the movie business, as yet practically unexplored by my own sex, for women of the progressive type who are not satisfied to let the masculine element of every community dominate, plan, manage and originate everything—and, of course, reap all the benefits that naturally accrue to those who have initiative, a quality possessed by women as well as men.

It is a known fact that women and children form the greater part of every moving picture audience, and it is but natural that a woman manager should be better qualified than a man to judge the kind of pictures the majority of her patrons like, when most of them are of her own sex. After all, the meat in the cocoanut of successful management, so to speak, is in obtaining the right kind of pictures—pictures that appeal to the greatest number.

This item, the proper selection of pictures has, perhaps, more to do with my success than any other one feature, but there are so many other details incidental to conducting a picture house, that some of them really should be considered along with the so-called paramount feature. For instance, the matter of advertising is of almost as much importance, for what profiteth it if you have the best pictures in the universe, and no one is made cognizant of the fact? Yes, I must say good advertising is an essential not to be overlooked, if the object to be attained is the pinnacle of success, and, of course this is the desideratum.

Another reason for successful management is the creating of a social, or cordial, atmosphere about your doors. Make every man, woman and child feel entirely and unreservedly welcome the moment they cross the threshhold of your theater, by having a member of the "diplomatic corps" stationed at the entrance to greet them with something; a nod, a word or a smile, either of which gives the impression, at once, of sociability and fellowship.

Finally, if I were asked how to build up a good business where it had not before existed, I would say that eternal vigilance is the price of success, and would add that to be alert at every turn of the game —a woman's game as well as a man's, if you please—and to keep abreast of the moving movie times by association with as many "live wires" who are identified with all angles of the game, as possible, is to spell success in capital letters!

If there were more women exhibitors there would be less chance for the censor agitators, and in many other ways a better business. Miss Davis is by no means the only one. But what has become of the Baroness Blanc, who was one of the very first?

Just Right.

The Frohman Amusement company sends in this cut of an advertising novelty, but fails to add any information as to its method of distribution. A clock face is, naturally, most appropriate for a play titled "The Witching Hour," but such a clock will be useful in any lobby, with the Roman numerals in place of the letters. The clock stands on an easel for lobby display, or may be hung up, and the hands are moved to the hour of the next showing.

For the Purple Mask.

Special press helps figure importantly in the success of serial campaigns, for there are comparatively few exhibitors who would, unaided, be able to keep alive interest in a serial during its comparatively lengthy run. One of the best books gotten out by the Universal Serial Department is for The Purple Mask, the new Cunard-Ford serial. It gives a resume of the story, some argument for the exhibitor, a series of poster reproductions in colors of the wall and window stuff: in itself a mighty aid, a complete "teaser" campaign, suggestions for running advertisements and an ample provision of special cuts for use in general advertising and a large line of novelties from ten-foot banners to lapel buttons. There are purple mask "detective" badges, pocket mirrors, masks themselves, puzzles, pennants and slides and some special stunts. We do not like one stunt that comprehends a woman in tights in the lobby "where the police will permit." Even where the police are liberal, we do not believe that the use of a woman in tights for a ballyho will work good to the house. It will attract those who will not attend and keep away those who might be interested in the serial. It is characteristic, for Miss Cunard will wear tights, but tights on the screen or stage and tights in the lobby are two different matters. There are other and better stunts, the best being the use of a purple mask for the ticket seller prior to the showing. This will make a lot of talk in houses where the patrons are fairly regular in their attendance. The booklet covers 28 pages and with no other aid than this any exhibitor should be able to clean up the money.

To Copy.

Here's a striking description from the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa. Instead of using a lot of superlative the program says: "You know that feeling of falling from a dizzy height you sometimes have in a dream? Here is a story that gives it to you—only you get it while you are wide awake." We think that conveys the impression of breathless thrills far better than just adjectives could do. But save it for some extra special film.

Another Pupil's Ticket.

Charles Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Col., sends in the tickets he uses for the prize pupil scheme. In his use of the idea all pupils who make 80% or better in their studies are given passes and not merely the best pupil in the class. Both schemes are good. Where the size of the house permits ill feeling may be avoided by extending the courtesy to all pupils whose markings reach a certain standard.

This scheme was one of the first suggested by this department, more than five years ago, and still holds as good as when it was first offered. Mr. Decker's tickets are on white paper 3¾ by 6 inches and are supplied to the teachers in pads for handy use. They are filled in by the teacher.

Paper and Things.

E. M. Erwin, of Erwin's Mystic theater, Denver, sends in some house programs and wants to know if we think he should use either a more glossy or a whiter glace of paper in order to get the best results from the cuts he uses. White paper would have nothing to do with the matter. The ink used does not seem to give a very good impression, but probably a heavier impression would mud up the cuts, which are the usual newspaper coarse screen. They are made to be printed upon rough paper and cannot be made to give results on a highly finished (glossy) paper, for which a finer screen cut and more careful make-ready must be used. As a matter of fact, it is probable that the cuts would show better on a cheaper grade of paper than that used. The paper sent in is not calendared, but has almost a calendared surface. A rough paper would take up the ink better, if the proper sort of ink is used, and would give better results. Glossy paper and fine screen cuts would give much better results, but the cost would be multiplied several times and the results would not be correspondingly great. Each cut would have to be made ready and it would be difficult and sometimes impossible to get cuts of the proper screen. The trouble with these programs seems to be that the paper is intermediate between the rough and the highly finished surface. It would work well with type alone, when proper impression could be given, but it would be better to use a little cheaper grade, more nearly approaching news or cheap book, and get better results at smaller cost. It is possible to get paper a little tougher than news but with the printing quality of news. We do not, as a rule, approve of cheapening a product, but this seems to be one of those cases where it will better to cut costs and at the same time gain results. Mr. Erwin uses a four pager, about 5 by 8 inches. We show the inside form. We think he would get a better result on the daily program if he used straight two-point rule in place of the rather fussy stuff the printer employs. Decorative material should not be employed too close to important reading matter, since it takes from the prominence of the latter.

Excused This Time.

Ray Bagley, of the Liberty, Long Beach, Calif., sends in a very noisy, but effective advertisement. It is four thirteens in red and black printed in the body of the paper. He writes that this was the first time the paper has used the "top deck" (second color press) in a year and it made a lot of talk. This advertisement would make talk if they ran two colors every day in the year and three on Sundays. It will not reproduce in a single color or we would run it here, but the main point is that having all the red ink he wanted, Mr. Bagley did not use too much. There is a 24-point border in red, a red handkerchief for Bill Hart's justly celebrated $1,000.50 cowboy suit and red for the film title. All the rest is black and it looks eleven times as good and ten times as strong as though the red had been smeared all over the space. Getting into the spirit of the thing, Bagley went out and bought a red lead pencil with which to sign his name to the letter. And he adds that the ad brought business "because it was read (red)" and the words in paranthesis are written in the red ink on his bichrome ribbon. We'll forgive him this time for the elderly pun, but next time we'll sic Fred Mace on him, and if Fred can't lick him he knows all of the Los Angeles pugs and can get help.

Three Good Things.

The Lyric, Lancaster, N. H., doesn't seem to have been running so very long; it seems only the other day that we made first mention of the house "Just across the bridge" but they seem to have cleaned up. L. W. Carroll writes:

> Enclosed you will find a sample copy of our weekly program. The stock is purchased from jobbers and the printing done locally. A stunt used to pull the kiddies for a matinee and incidentally call the grown-ups' attention to the film is the Bargain Matinee card which is enclosed. The teachers were persuaded to give these out the day before the attraction and of course it was talked at home. Practically every child in the whole school was on hand promptly at 3:45. And our evening business was very good.
> When our opposition closed they left the Iron Claw with five episodes to run and we have added it to our regular program on Tuesdays and have the good will of all who wished to see the finish.

Do you notice that last paragraph? He does not write about having closed up the opposition. He just says that when the opposition closed he wound up their serial for them. He might have added that he drew still others "Across the bridge" that way. Both samples are good work. The program is 2¾ by 3¾, a four pager with a phototone print tacked to page three and the program printed on the back of the sheet with the usual front page, nicely done. We take it that he gets the blanks with the player portraits attached and prints them up. The bargain matinee card will not print up well in cut. It is a salmon slip about 1½ by 4 inches, with this text:

Bargain Matinee

Any child under 12 years of age presenting this coupon and three cents will be admitted to the Bluebird film production "Little Eva Edgarton" with Ella Hall. Recommended by the Woman's Home Companion for the entire family.

This coupon and eight cents will also admit any child over 12 years of age to the matinee.

CARROLL & DONNELL, Props.

Any form of special ticket will interest, and this does not cut the price too heavily. We think Mr. Carroll is doing mighty good work.

Wholly Self Supporting.

William (Billkalem) Wright, of the Kalem Co., sends in a four pager gotten out by Harry Worth, of New Egypt, N. J. Mr. Worth calls it a herald for The Girl from Frisco, but it is hardly a herald. It takes part of three pages for the subject and gives the rest to the advertiser. The printing bill for 2,500 was $15 and the advertising represents $22 so that the advertising pays for mailing as well as printing and yet gives the house all the space it needs. There are fifteen advertisements, but the setting of the advertising is open and the announcement of the film is not crowded. That Mr. Worth is a live wire in other ways is shown from this tag to the story:

> After the show on Saturday night we have a dance, to which we charge an admission of 5 cents for ladies and 10 cents for gentlemen. If you have never stayed for one of these dances try it one night and see if you don't have some time.
> While you are in town you can do your Christmas shopping. You can get anything you need of the merchants here at city prices and many things cheaper and better.
> For the kiddies I will run a matinee every Saturday at 3 o'clock. Bring them to town and let me care for them while you shop, or, better still, come to the show yourself. Admission to matinee, 5 cents for children under 12.

He lets very little get by him, and in a small town he makes more than some big city houses can show on a season.

Nifty—but Empty.

M. J. C. Kornblum, publicity man for the Rowland and Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, and editor of the Film Forecast, sends a sample of the ticket case given when a certain number of books of tickets have been purchased. It is about what you would expect from the Rowland and Clark houses and something that no one need be ashamed to carry. It is real grain walrus leather, leather lined, with a pocket for the flap of the ticket book and another for cards. There is a snap fastener and a neat gold house cipher—but the book is empty. If we ever get to Pittsburgh we shall insist that it be filled.

The circuit is strong for system and we have several times reproduced their schemes for getting details of patronage. The latest is a card 3½ by 7 inches, printed up on both sides. It starts off by asking the recipient to help out the management, and follows with details as to attendance, favorite players and brands, the preference as to serials, long and short subjects, the receipt of Film Forecast, the papers read for amusement news and interest in kid matinees. Where possible the questions are so framed that they may be replied to with a check mark, all of the papers, for example, being listed for checking. And the card, properly filled in, is good for an admission to the Strand if presented to the doorkeeper.

About 300,000 are to be put out and so far an average of 20% of the cards have been promptly returned. As this information all comes from persons who are sufficiently interested in pictures to go to the trouble of filling in the cards, the information has unusual value to the house as a guide to its policies. Of course the information is of no use unless tabulated and analyzed. That is the point where many fall down. They read that some system of inquiry is good, so they get out cards and read them when they come in, but they do not digest the facts and so the information is of small value. It's the follow-up that counts.

Wall Paper Encore.

Balboa, looking about for some novel form of greeting, used wall paper as the stock for its Christmas cards. They did not tell the editors they were tearing paper off the walls of houses that showed the brand, they made more of a hit with the editors by explaining that it was because of the high price of white print paper just now, and that is something that apepals to every editor, great or small. The greeting was nicely worded in all save one respect. It wished plenty of sons and daughters to a lot of poor married men who had just gone broke buying presents for the ones they already have. And just to make it stick they omitted the usual press dope, which is a refinement of good taste, not that the press stuff is to be avoided but because they take even that suggestion away.

Were You?

Were you among those who Gave out calendars,
Used holly border
Printed in red and green or Spelled it "Xmas?"

You had plenty of company. They are all good stunts, but there are other newer ideas.

Painted Ads.

Evidently Mr. Blanchard finds that specially drawn advertising pays, for the Orpheum, Chambersburg, Pa., regularly uses this form now, a sample of which was shown in the department lately. It's a nice way to fool the compositor, for he cannot muss up a plate very well, and an artist can lay out his lines to better advantage. To permit the use of different sized announcements, the house name is set in type and may be shallow or deep as the space taken requires. If you cannot afford to have your attraction played up each week you can, at least, get a few designs and keep them in stock, with mortises for type. You do not even have to buy them. Get magazines that use frame and have these reproduced. A frame will make an advertisement stand out on a page with others and at a small cost will make it certain that you get all the use of the space that your money pays for.

In the Spirit.

We have spoken before of the intimate program stuff of the Avon, Utica, N. Y., and of Mr. Fait's trick of writing as though to a friend. His Christmas program did better. It told of an entertainment planned for the house people during Christmas week. Probably other houses entertained their employes, but Mr. Fait told about it, and it helped create in the minds of the patrons the feeling that they had something in common with the house people, even though they were not invited to the party. Mr. Fait gave out Christmas presents to his patrons, but his methods of distribution was unusual. Cards were given out during Christmas week and when filled in by the patron and presented after New Year's day were redeemed by a memorandum or telephone book. In this way Mr. Fait built up his mail list and also brought his patrons back.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

That Brain Polisher.

(Concluded from last week.)

FEW wrote dramatic action. They make the too-common mistake of confusing violence with drama. If Jim started to throttle Dora it must be a "strong" scene, though the mere throttling is not in itself dramatic. No stipulation was made to that effect, but since these stories were supposed to be written under "service conditions" it might be noted that only a small portion of them would pass even the most liberal of censors, and most companies would hesitate to make such stuff. Few realized that the dramatic is not always the violent, and that a scene in which the players did not touch each other might be stronger and more effective than one in which they clinched, rolled all over the floor and broke the furniture. One author even had a lamp broken and the house set afire to get a strong moment, but no one thought of putting in a train wreck or an automobile going over the cliff, which helped some.

If these replies represent the average of present day free lance production they justify the use of the staff writer, but we do not think that many of the better qualified writers came in. The technique, too, was careless, and one writer had nine scenes, though six of these were "back to" the scene immediately preceding, all of the first seven being the same scene.

Several cheated a little and came back with a second and even a third solution, though this was not contemplated in the offer to comment on the work. The next "polisher" will guard against this. And there probably will be another soon, though not too soon, for it has taken about five days of solid work to handle the scripts that came in.

As a matter of interest here is our own analysis of the situation. Clearly Dora must extricate herself from her difficulty. This is not alone hinted at in the premise as given, but good technique shows that what she does for herself will be more effective than what another does for her. Tom could rush in to her rescue or she could lean out of the window and yell for the police, but then she would not enjoy the sympathy and approval that would accrue from her own work. This being the case, we get down to Miss Brown's conclusion. It is a choice of intimidation or cajolery. Intimidation suggests violence, and violence is never so effective as appeal to the mental. Physically Dora is no match for the drink-crazed man. She cannot beat him up, and the moment he draws a gun the audience will stop following the action and wonder just how she is going to get the weapon from him. They expect it and the anticipation will spoil the result. It must be something that Dora does, and since she is his physical inferior she must use cunning or sex-appeal, and sex-appeal will not make for credit to her. No matter what her extremity, the spectator will not approve of her action. It is to be supposed that Dora knows Jim's modes of thought, since she has been married to him. Perhaps this would be the best way out:

ROOM—Dora on—working—Jim staggers in—she looks up—for a moment she is terrified, but she pulls herself together—lays aside sewing and rises—Jim draws gun and flourishes unsteadily—rage steadies him a little—he comes up to her with an ugly look on his face—sticks gun in her face—with a look of disgust she pushes him arm away—says

Cut-in—"You stopped in at Dorgans and you're crazy drunk again. Lie down." Jim looks at her stupidly—looks at gun—brightens up—remembers he came to kill her—turns gun upon her—she speaks sharply—takes gun from him—lays upon table—he starts to regain it—she catches him by the coat—starts to take it off—he struggles a moment—then yields to habit— looks about him stupidly—things do not look right, yet it is familiar enough—Dora strips off coat—Jim rallies—picks up gun again—once more she takes it from him—shakes him—takes off collar—leads him to sofa—forces him to lie down—covers with rug—watches him for a moment—he drops off—she tiptoes out—her face is now drawn and haggard—

HALL—Wall phone—Dora comes in—goes to phone—calls—so weak she can hardly keep on her feet—has to hold on to phone box—

OFFICE—Tom on—answers phone—surprised—shocked—springs up—grabs hat—rushes out.

Back to Hall—Dora tries to hang up receiver—makes a couple of futile attempts—crumples up in a faint.

This is not offered as an ideal solution, but it will give a certain dramatic effect and carries the story on.

The best solution was contributed by Anna L. Heath, who has Dora play drunk and so disgust Jim that he leaves her. She takes only one long and two short scenes, and she gets a really novel and dramatic effect.

His Ten Commandments.

William Wright Farmer plugged along for two years and built up a string of some 150 scripts before he made his first sale, and he seems to think he is doing pretty well to put one over about every four weeks. He knows that he is doing well for the times and does not complain because he does not sell more. He has drawn up a set of don'ts that epitomize his discoveries, and though they have been told before, they will stand the telling again. Paste them up somewhere:

DON'T think the Editor is interested in you, or try to make him interested in your troubles. Send a good story. and that will tell him all he wants to know about you.

DON'T think that every man that handles other people's money is a thief, neither must you think that an Editor steals because he has a chance to do so.

DON'T stick to the Eternal Triangle and expect to develop that most necessary new twist. Try to find a story from the unbeaten paths. Life is full of many situations of a ludicrous character that do not depend upon love interest.

DON'T write a slapstick comedy as such. Make your situation strong enough to bring laughs without slapstick, and if the Editor cares to make it slapstick, it is easy to add the rough stuff. Any fool can write knock 'em down, carry 'em out stuff, but it takes a writer to find a logical reason for doing so.

DON'T write with checks in mind, but write with the critic in mind and make it so good that you will get more pleasure out of the good criticism of your produced story than the check you received for it.

DON'T think, when you have made your first sale, that you have arrived. Better imagine you are still a novice, as you are more apt to keep on learning something. In the game of Authorship, the real author is the one who never arrives, but is always struggling to arrive.

DON'T feel satisfied that the reason you are not selling is because the Editor is incapable of discovering a good story. Better write such a delightful bit of original work that the Editor cannot help discovering it.

DON'T think that man has used every available idea for a Movie story. The author has just written three stories, that are in course of production, that were based on the plot germ that he found on the first page of a well known novel, and the book contains 300 more pages. I'll bet every work in a Standard Dictionary contains a plot germ for an original story, if an author feels disposed to seek and find it.

DON'T imagine that the producers are buying stories from their own set of personal friends and relatives and that you must have a pull in order to sell. There is no room for a genius to be left undiscovered, unless he himself refuses to develop his talent.

DON'T get discouraged at the sight of a rejection slip. Such things were invented as part of the modern scheme of business economy and not for the purpose of discouraging authors. The author that never saw a rejection slip was born and passed out before modern methods came into existence.

Do Your Best.

Production is at a pretty low ebb these days, but because you see so much poor stuff done, don't scimp your own work. In the first place you must do better work than usual in order to overcome the loss of effect due to poor production, and in the second you cannot tell the day when there will be a new man at the editorial desk; a man looking for the good writers, and if you send in slovenly stuff he will not mark you down for one of the elect. There is no telling when the chance will come in any particular studio, so now is the time to be on tiptoe.

On the Other Hand.

Undoubtedly some studios do assimilate the ideas of authors without sending out checks. There are one or two, though they are not open enough to get caught at it. But on the other hand a company lately paid $750 for a story, and later had to pay the actual author a fancy price. If this keeps up both sides will be forced to give bank references.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 171.

What do you think ought to be the attitude of the Local Operators' Organization with regard to over-speeding the films?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 163.

The Roll of Honor on Question 163 consists of W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; John W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; V. M. Kidd, Victoria, B. C.; E. H. Hitchcock, Somerville, Mass.

I have selected the reply of Brother Allen as being best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 163.

By W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada.

The Question:

If there are 100 turns in the transformer primary coil and 20 in the secondary coil, and the primary pulls 10 amperes, how many amperes will we get at the arc?

The Answer:

At first glance this question would give one the impression that it was rather simple, but when it comes to answering it, one finds it covers a lot of ground. First: you have to choose your secondary voltage and amperage which, we will assume to be 35 (approximately A. C. arc voltage) and 60 amperes. Therefore the secondary wattage equals 35 x 60, or 2,100 watts. The primary turns are 100 and the secondary is 20, therefore the ratio of transformation is $100 \div 20 = 5$; that is to say, the primary voltage will be five times the primary, the wattage being the same in both cases, i. e., 2,100. Thus we find a direct proportion exists between the pressures and turns in the two windings, and an inverse proportion between the primary and secondary amperes. Thus, primary voltage : secondary voltage :: primary turns : secondary turns, so that we have $X : 35 :: 100 : 20 = 175$ volts, which will be the primary pressure. The primary amperes equal secondary amperes divided by the ratio of transformation, thus $60 \div 5 = 12$.

Thus far I have assumed the transformer to have 100 per cent. efficiency, which is, of course, impossible, so that the primary wattage is always more than the secondary by a percentage equal to wattage output divided by the wattage input. In other words, primary wattage divided by secondary wattage equals the percentage of efficiency of the transformer. The maximum efficiency of the small transformer used for projection purposes is about 95 per cent. (I wish it was—Ed.), so there will be five per cent. loss in transformation, and the actual wattage delivered in the secondary circuit would be obtained by multiplying the primary wattage by the transformer efficiency.

Don't Keep Things Clean.

From a theater manager of St. Louis, Mo., we have the following:

> I would like to ask your views with regard to the matter of cleanliness in the operating room. We have a great many operators in this town who refuse point-blank to clean the operating room, claiming that to be the duty of the janitor. The janitor, on the other hand, says it is not his duty, and, as a rule, managers do not seem to care, so long as the picture is on the screen. I know I would like an expression of your opinion in this matter, and am sure a great many others would appreciate it as well.

Well, I suppose here is where I will get in bad with a lot of the St. Louis boys. I have been told that the St. Louis union takes the position that it is not the operator's duty to clean the operating room; also while in St. Louis I, in a number of instances, saw plenty of proof of the fact that the men, or some of them, rather backed up that idea to the very limit. Now I am sorry to say I cannot agree with the St. Louis men's idea on this particular point. In my opinion it is the duty of the operator to keep his operating room clean; also I don't believe it is right or proper to have a janitor blundering around in the operating room, where there is apparatus which he may very seriously damage. Of course, however, there is reason and common sense in everything. I do not mean by this that the operator ought to be compelled to paint the room, and all that sort of thing, although it is no great hardship for him to do even that. I do think, however, that so far as keeping the walls, floor and the apparatus clean, that duty in the very nature of things devolves upon the operator, and, frankly, gentlemen, I have not any large opinion of the progressiveness of the operator who, rather than spend perhaps five minutes each day cleaning up, will work in a nasty, dirty, filthy hole, or even in an operating room which is anything else but clean. I HAVE NEVER YET EXAMINED AN OPERATING ROOM IN A THEATER WHERE THERE WAS HIGH-CLASS PROJECTION AND FOUND THAT ROOM DIRTY OR IN DISORDER. I believe also that, taking the country over, there is not one operator in five who would be willing to leave the cleaning of the operating room to a janitor. I know I would not. When I was operating, the very first thing I did when I came on duty was to sweep the floor, and the next was to carefully wipe off all apparatus. I venture the assertion that the whole performance did not consume ten minutes a day, except once a week when I would carefully sweep the walls down, and once a month, the first day of the month, when I would go over the walls and ceiling with a cloth. Personally, I would not allow a janitor to do these things under any circumstances, because in the first place I had some rather expensive tools which might "look good to him"; second, he might do a lot of damage by the careless placing of a step-ladder, or something of that kind. As a matter of fact, I remember one instance where I went to the operating room with the operator when he began his show at night. He started the first machine and all was well. When the reel was pretty nearly over I went out and sat down to watch the projection from the outside. Presently the picture jumped off the screen by nearly a foot, and then began to wobble to beat the band. I went upstairs and found the operator trying to yank the machine back into place. At last the trouble was remedied, after a fashion, and he said: "That is the second time that d—— janitor has done that." It developed that the janitor swept out the operating room and in so doing he had blundered against one of the machines, moving its back end slightly, although it was pretty well anchored down, but with a 100-foot throw it takes but little movement to put the picture a foot off the screen.

No, St. Louis, I am of the opinion that the operator ought to keep the operating room clean; also I am of the opinion that the man who, rather than keep his room clean, will work in a dirty one is not and never will be a high-class workman. To ask an operator to post bills, sweep out the auditorium, carry reels to and from the exchange is absolutely wrong, from any and every point of view. On the other hand it is just as wrong and absurd for the operator to refuse to keep his operating room clean. There are extremes in both directions.

Gas Engine Power.

Curtis Motor Company, Bement, Ill., says:

> I would like information regarding power of gas engine required to drive dynamo for 150 seat moving picture show, requiring current for projection machine, house lights, two 16-inch fans, and two or three 100 watt lamps for front lights. Please give us size of dynamo required and horse power of gas engine to drive it.

Sorry, gentlemen, but the data is not sufficient to enable us to give the information you request. I can, however, tell you how to figure it for yourselves. First: The power of the gas engine required, so far as the projection lamp be concerned, will depend upon (a) number of amperes to be used for projection; (b) voltage of the dynamo; (c) whether it is intended to burn both projection arcs at once during the period of change-over or not. Assuming the current to be D. C., the amperes at the projection arc 30, and the voltage of the generator 110, we would then have a total power requirement for one projection arc of $30 \times 110 = 3,300$ watts, a large proportion of which is consumed in the rheostat, the actual power at the arc being only $50 \times 30 = 1,500$ watts. If the voltage of the generator be only 60, then the total power required would be $30 \times 60 = 1,800$ watts, with $30 \times 50 = 1,500$ watts actually consumed at the arc, the odd 300 watts being consumed in the rheostat. In the first instance you would have to have gas engine power equal to $3,300 \div 746 = 4.4$. In the second instance you only require engine power of $1,800 \div 746 = 2.4$. You will therefore see that, so far as the projection arc be concerned, the necessary power of the gas engine will depend to a considerable extent on the voltage of the generator. The less the voltage the less the power required, because the D. C. projection arc only operates at its best at between 45 and 60 volts, with an average of about 50, the rest of the line voltage being broken down in the rheostat.

As to the power required for the incandescent lamps, why you simply have to find out how many lamps there are going to be, the wattage of each lamp; add them all together and divide by 746, there being 746 watts in one horse power.

And now a third equation enters, if you are going to use two projection machines and the manager wants to dissolve one picture into the other. Then it will be necessary to burn both projection arcs for a period of one or two minutes, and this means that you must add just that much more generator capacity and engine power. For instance: if one arc takes 3 horse power from the engine, then you will have to actually supply 6 horse power in order to run both machines, even though it be only for a minute or two. After figuring up the power required, I would suggest that you allow a reasonable margin of engine power above that. You can use a 60 or 70 volt dynamo, the only objection being that 60 or 70 volt incandescent lamps or fan motors are not so readily obtainable as the 110 volt variety. Unless you have a dynamo especially designed to handle a variable length projection arc you cannot get along successfully without some resistance in series with the arc, and a 60 volt dynamo is about the minimum.

Lens Trouble.

T. W. Cannon, Greenfield, Tenn., orders a Handbook and says:

> I cannot get my condensers matched up right. Am using an objective lens 1⅝ inches in diameter, working at 2¾ inches back focus. According to Table No. 1, page 141 of Handbook, I should use two 6½-inch condensers, with the apex of the front condenser 16 inches from the aperture. I get my current through a 110-volt compensarc. It is 133 cycle current. The picture is discolored by blue streaks across the center, and yellow at top and bottom. By pushing the crater up very close to the rear condenser I am able to get by, but this causes quite a lot of lens breakage. I am not at all satisfied. Have been a constant reader of the department for the past two years and wish to thank you for the assistance you have rendered for better projection.

First, Brother Cannon, I don't think your lamp has sufficient angle; second, I suspect you are using a pretty low amperage. I personally would not undertake to project a good picture with less than 60 amperes A. C. I would suggest that you try the following combination. First, 17 inches from the apex of front condenser to film; second, two 6½ inch condensers. Yes, that is just what you have now, and it ought to give you very fairly good results, understanding, however, that the securing of high class results with low amperage is hardly to be expected. If you are using 60 amperes and set your carbons as per C, Figure 124, Page 297, shown photographically in Figure 126, Page 300 of the Handbook, you should have no discoloration, and you ought to get fairly good illumination. As to the lens breakage, you should have a Preddy or Elbert condenser holder, which you can procure either from the Picture Theater Equipment Company, or J. H. Hallberg, New York City. See their advertisement for address. I am inclined to think that your whole present trouble lies in the lamp not having sufficient angle; also possibly you are not using the right carbon set. The set shown in Figure 126 will be difficult for you to master if you have been using something else, since it requires very close adjustment of the carbons, but once having mastered it you will find a decided improvement. You won't get quite as heavy candle power, but you will get a whole lot better general results. You will then only be using one crator, the upper, and the set should operate approximately as at C, Figure 124. It is also possible that the blue streak is due to use of sets A or C, Figure 124, to carrying the carbons too close, as per E, 124, or the condition shown at D, Figure 124. Any one of these may cause the streak, but, as I before said, probably it is lack of sufficient lamp angle.

Watchman of the Department.

Roundup, Montana, says:

> As a subscriber to the Moving Picture World and watchman of the department, I want the following information. What size opera house would you suggest in a town of 3,200 population, which is swelled to 5,000 by including two coal mining camps. The house would be designed to run pictures and vaudeville stock companies. There is already one moving picture theater seating 400. Some parties are planning to build a theater, or opera house here next spring. What is your suggestion?

Why if you have a really good moving picture theater seating 400, my suggestion is to think a cuppla of times before investing money in another one. I could not tell you anything at all about what size house you should erect, since that would depend on a great many equations, none of which you have set forth in your letter. First: what kind of vaudeville stock could you get, and at what prices could you get it? Second: Is the town compact, with good sidewalks and well lighted streets, or is it scattered and dark so that it would be difficult for people to get to the theater, especially in bad weather? Third:—but what's the use? I could not offer you intelligent advice without absolutely knowing the local conditions. Sorry, old man, but it cannot be did.

New Reel Band.

J. B. Day, one of our old-time correspondents, formerly located at Sherman, Texas, writes from St. Paul, Minn.:

> Just a few lines to let you know I am still on the face of the earth, though considerably farther up in the general direction of the North Pole. Enclosed find sample of my film band which I am just putting on the market. I trust it will meet with your approval, and that you will give me a small write-up in the department, explaining the advantages of the new band to manufacturers as well as to operators.

First and foremost, Brother Day, I am glad to hear from you again. I thought for sure you had pulled the hole in after you so tight that you could not get it opened any more. Second: I don't give "write-ups"—only legitimate descriptions, based strictly on facts.

The new reel band consists of a thick strip of tough paper 7 inches long by 1 5-16 inches wide. To this slip, and in its center, is permanently fastened by "paper fasteners," a thick piece of clear gelatine 2 inches by 1¼ inches wide, in one end of each is a metal protected eye hole, and in the other end a similar eye hole carrying a disk to wind the string under. The whole thing is illustrated in the cut.

Brother Day claims for the band the following advantages: First, it is cheap, costing but 3 cents each in lots of ten thousand; second, it will wear well; third, the dice that the string fastens around will not break or tear like a paper dice; fourth, it only takes the fraction of a minute to attach a new string in case the old one breaks; fifth, the paper name plate may be changed by taking out the two paper fasteners and putting on a new name plate; sixth, it takes up little or no room, either at the exchange inspection bench or in the operating room; seventh, it is not so likely to tear or damage as is the long paper band; eighth, it requires a great deal less time to put on than does the old paper band.

It seems to me that Friend Day's claims are very well founded, and we wish J. B. Day & Company, which firm is putting out the band, all possible success.

Chillicothe, Missouri.

J. W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo., writes:

> Am enclosing my first answers to the questions. Don't suppose they are correct, but I have at least tried. The questions sure do make one study, and that certainly is beneficial. I would like to have you visit Chillicothe when on your trip. We are not very far from St. Joseph, one of your stops. Believe I can get about eight or nine operators and helpers together, and the three managers. We have two houses, but no union. If we cannot get together I will try to hear you in St. Joseph.
> I visited the Grand and Le Graw theaters in Brookfield, Mo., recently. At the Grand there are two Powers machines and a Fort Wayne motor generator set. The operator, Mr. Green, will however, in my opinion, do well to study the projection department, and the Handbook. I do not think I ever saw projection light so badly discolored as was that of the Grand at times, and he had direct current too. Several times the whole picture was obscured, and at other times the whole lower half was brown. At the De Graw Mick Walsh was using a Wagner converter and two Simplex projectors. The picture was brilliant, and the projection, in general, good. In closing I wish you and yours the best of health.

Now wouldn't that pull your whiskers? Brookfield is one of my old stamping grounds. My Dad ran an engine out of Brookfield on the Hannibal and St. Joe (now a part of the "Burlington Route"), and I lived in that classic burg for almost two years, attending the "Brookfield Academy" which has long since disappeared. I wonder if Mike DeVoy, a H. & St. Jo engineer, one of my old time friends, is still there.

As to my stopping in Chillicothe, why it can't be did. As I remember it Chillicothe is considerably more than fifty miles from St. Joseph. I would like to come, old man, but I am afraid it is out of the question. By-the-way, I also lived in Chillicothe a couple of months once; about 1891, I think it was.

Salting Carbons.

R. W. Hastie, Stroudsburg, Pa., says:

> In your late Handbook yeu refer to the salt treatment of carbons. Can you give me the solution used? Can this treatment be applied to both cored and solid carbons? Am using National ⅝ inch cored above and ⅝ inch solid below. What, in your opinion, is the best American made carbon? I am using Power's Six B, and Westinghouse compensarc, pulling 60 to 65 amperes. Have some trouble in holding the arc.

I would suggest that you procure from your supply dealer a few of the National Silver Tip negative carbons, and give them a trial. As to what is the best make of American carbon, why I would suggest that you try the Speer and the National and decide for yourself. I cannot answer questions of that kind in the department. The salt treatment consists merely in soaking the carbon in a salt brine strong enough to bear up an egg. Soak the carbons about a week and then let them dry thoroughly. Be very sure they are dry. It is best to insure this by placing them on top of lamphouse before using. You can try the matter out and decide for yourself whether or not it is beneficial. The salt stunt is intended for A. C. only, hence only applies to cored carbons.

The New Tables.

Brother Ralph Martin of Los Angeles, Cal., has sent in a criticism of Griffiths' new tables, November 4th issue. His complaint is that the new tables do not in all cases produce a standard spot of 1½ inches in diameter.

I submitted this complaint to Friend Griffiths, who says:

I really enjoy these mental tiffs with Martin. In them we help each other by scattering the chaff, and getting at the kernel of each other's ideas. In these criticisms there is absolutely nothing but friendly feeling on my part, and I am sure there is nothing else on Brother Martin's part either. No matter how harsh the criticism may appear to be, they merely add spice to what would otherwise be very hard and monotonous work. His criticisms with regard to the size of the spot produced by application of the new tables are approximately correct, but he is mistaken in assuming that I ignored that point in compiling the tables. I had both the size of the spot and the heat of the crater in mind when I choose the distance in Table B. The one thing that Martin has overlooked is that the ordinary projection lenses, almost without exception, call for 16 inches or more between the condensers and aperture, and the tables published in November 4th issue were constructed to meet as nearly as possible the faults of the present condenser and objective systems, not taking into account those things which may in the future be invented. If we could really have a range for distance Y of from 9 to 20 inches, as indicated by Martin's criticism, that would be quite another thing, but since the minimum distance is automatically set at about 16 inches by the objective lens diameter, and since the imperfection of appartus makes the maximum distance from 20 to 22 inches, why Martin's proposition won't work.

As a matter of fact the variation in size of spot is easily taken care of by plano-convex and menisucs-bi-convex condensers, and even with the new tables it is necessary to be familiar with Table 2, page 143 of the Handbook, showing the enlargement of the image over the object. In this connection Table 2 can be further improved, and I have an idea in mind which will eliminate the apparent deficiencies in the new tables.

Really I don't quite know what to say as between Martin and Griffiths, but anyway I do not think it is wise to run the risk of confusing matters by publishing Brother Martin's charts at this time, because, while I have every respect for Martin's ability as an experimenter, still I am not at all certain he is right in this matter, and if he is not it would, it seems to me, be very unwise to in any degree upset Griffiths work at this stage of the game. I must perforce move cautiously in this matter, and be pretty certain I am headed in the right direction before throwing in the clutch. It is all right to have the engine running while reading the sign-board, but if the clutch is in you will have left the sign-board far behind before you are certain you are headed on the right road.

From Chicago.

Chicago, Ill., sends check for new Handbook, says "please don't use my name," and then proceeds as follows:

Am enclosing a few samples of splices which pulled apart in running through rewind and cupping slightly to detect loose patches. These were taken from one reel of a five part ——————; the other four reels were perfectly all right. I have been running the Triangle Kay-Bee, Fox, Metro, Paramount, Triangle Keystone, and Triangle Fine Arts for eighteen months, and rarely have a break on any of them with the exception of ——————. Some of the reels of —————— are good and others are literally awful. The splices look like machine work, and I have about concluded that it is the fault of not using enough cement, or else cement of poor quality. I have heard several complaints on this particular make of film, therefore it would seem I am justified in making this kick. We have reported the matter to the local office, but as a rule such complaints do not reach the right place. I would consider it as a favor to myself and many others who have to handle Fine Arts features if you will take the matter up with the manufacturer. I have been a subscriber to the Moving Picture World for many years, and appreciate the projection department greatly.

I have taken this particular matter up with the manufacturer and the trouble will very soon be completely remedied, although it may still appear to some extent for a few weeks.

I appreciate your kind words, Chicago. I have to smile every time I get a letter from Chicago, however, because it contains the legend "don't use my name." It's really funny the way the rule or ruin element have you fellows buffaloed. However, I do not blame you, as you cannot afford to deliberately butt into trouble.

Columbia, S. C.

From Albert H. Estes, Orangeburg, S. C., comes the following:

Am sending you a report sheet I have been using which lets the man behind me know just what condition the film I send him is in. Maybe some day he will get his eyes opened and try to help the crank twister next behind him.

Am working in a new house, and some of these days am going to send you some real photographs of a classy, little operating room. I have two motor driven Powers 6A projectors, pulling current through a Fort Wayne A.C. compensarc, with a nice size, well lighted booth. Am projecting a 12-foot picture at 80 feet.

Understand you are going down to Columbia, S. C., on your next hike. Please let me know, through the World, when, and I will try and be there. We have a clever bunch in the Columbia local, and I can safely say they will all be glad to see you.

Huh! Brother Estes, I am afraid you have another "say" coming. Richmond, Va., Columbia, S. C., and Macon, Ga., are the only three locals in the south which seem to be calmly and peacefully sleeping. Some of the locals did not even wait for a letter, but asked me to include their city as soon as the itinerary of the trip was first published. Outside of these three locals, however, every other local in the south has responded to a letter, and only one, Memphis, Tennessee, has turned the matter down. I have, however, written to Richmond, Va., Local No. 87, Columbia, S. C., Local No. 347, and Macon, Ga., Local No. 594, twice, and have not even received the courtesy of a reply. Now I have absolutely no feeling of resentment in the matter, but would most respectfully suggest to these locals that it is customary, merely as a matter of ordinary courtesy, to reply to a business communicaion. It will be a matter for very genuine regret if it becomes necessary to leave Richmond, Columbia and Macon off the trip. Personally it makes no difference to me, because there are already fifty-eight cities which have either, without waiting for a letter, demanded or requested that I stop, or have responded promptly to a communication by mail, and there are quite a number yet to hear from. As a matter of fact I am afraid I won't be able to include all the cities that are going to ask for time. As the matter lies right now it will take fully ninety days to cover the route, and there will be at least fifteen or twenty more cities in which I probably will be obliged to stop. You can therefore see that in speaking of this matter my only regret is that these three cities are likely to be deprived of something they really stand in need of. This sounds like an egotistical statement, but I believe that every city in which I have delivered this lecture will agree with it.

As to the film report, it is a mighty fine thing, but if the top line is to be included it is up to the operator to make good. Of course if every operator does make good, then the film needs no inspection. The including of this slip, however, in this form, will promptly remove the operator from the lazy man's class.

I will be glad to have photographs of your operating room, but object to that "well lighted" part of it. An operating room should be painted black inside and should have no light at all while the picture is being projected.

Size of Carbons.

P. A. Wentzel, South Bethlehem, Pa., writes:

Kindly advise as to size carbons, solid or cored, and make to use on 30-60 amperes, 110 volts A. C.

For 60 amperes A. C. I would suggest either two 5/8-inch cored, or a 5/8-inch cored above and a 7-16 inch cored below, set according to C, figure 124, page 297 of the Handbook; also illustrated photographically in figure 126, page 300 of the Handbook, giving your lamp enough angle so that only the light from the upper crater will be used. If you haven't a Handbook, why the set referred to is the same set that is used for D. C. It requires much closer adjustment of the carbons, however, than when using D. C., because the crater is much smaller; also the candlepower is not as high, but the illumination is far more even and steady. I would not advise the use of as little as 35 amperes A. C. for the projection of a picture larger than eight feet. Forty ought to be the minimum. For 40 amperes I would suggest that you experiment with two ½-inch cored carbons. If they do not work to suit you, use one of the sets named above—whichever one gives the best results. On the whole, I am a little skeptical about it paying you to bother with 7-16 inch carbons. They are not so easy to get, and the possible advantage through their use would not be anything very great.

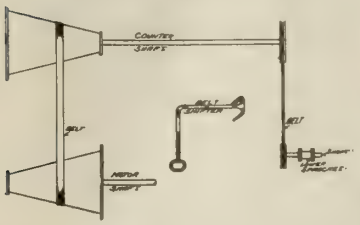
Home-Made Motor Drive.

George Arbuckle, Argyle, Neb., asks:

Could you tell me how to make a motor drive for my machine which will work satisfactorily? I have the motor and plenty of groove pulleys of different sizes. The boss refuses to buy a motor drive, but has no objection to his humble slave making one.



Well, slave, there are a number of ways of accomplishing this particular thing. I would suggest, however, that one shown in the attached drawing will perhaps serve as well as any. It gives almost unlimited variation of speed, the only objection being that it necessarily requires a rather narrow, flat belt, and the belt is likely to stretch. This, however, can be taken care of by means of an idler. The two cones can be turned from hard wood by any wood worker. They must, of course, have exactly the same slope. The rest of it is shown by the illustration, and I think you will have no trouble in building one.

A Serious Business.

From Hibbing, Minn., comes a letter containing newspaper clippings and statement of what purports to be facts with regard to a theatre fire which recently occurred in Hibbing. The Duluth, Minn., Tribune's account of the affair is headed: "Panic In Hibbing Theatre. Operator Burned. Persons Trampled in Rush Following Explosion." (You will note the resurrection of that hoary headed old joke "explosion of the film.") The Tribune then says in part:

> Glen Wilson, AGED 15, movie operator at the Princess theatre, was perhaps fatally burned, and several persons were trampled in a panic which followed an explosion of film in the operator's cage. (Cage is good. Ed.) Women screamed and fainted. The exits were jammed in the rush which followed the outbreak of flames. * * In the meantime fumes had filled the tiny coop (It's a coop now. Ed.) and the building became ignited. Wilson's clothing caught fire, and his efforts to extinguish the flames proved futile. Crying for help, he threw open the door of the small enclosure and started for the open. A rush of flame and smoke followed him. By the time Wilson reached the street and started for a mad dash for the Rood Hospital, more than a block away, the audience had awakened to what was going on, and the aisles were filled with a fighting mob, all intent upon reaching the street. * * * Wilson's approach was seen by physicians at the hospital and they tore the flaming garments from his body. His head, face, neck, chest, arms and back are severely burned. The doctors hold out hopes for his recovery.

The letter accompany the clipping says, in effect:

> Here is a sad case. A boy 15 years of age, whom I am given to understand is the support of a mother, now in the hospital, and perhaps a cripple for life. He took a man's place, receiving the magnificent salary of $30.00 per month, running (not operating) two projectors, sweeping out the theater, hanging posters, running seven matinees and fourteen shows per week. His employer, an ex-cigar maker, who formerly belonged to the Cigar Makers' Union, is now running two theaters, one in Hibbing and one, the Lyric, in Virginia, Minn. He has a knack of picking up poor boys, placing them in the operating room, working with them for a couple of weeks, and then leaving them to "run the show." The operating room of the theater is a veritable fire trap, and under any other city's regulations would, I believe, be condemned. The foregoing are facts, and as such I am ready to back them up in any way, shape, or manner.

Yes, I agree with the correspondent, it is a sad case. The boy himself is not so much to be blamed. You cannot expect very much wisdom in a fifteeen-year-old head. It is also within the range of possibility that this particular manager picks up these boys and gives them a "chance" from pure goodness of heart. In other words, his motives may be all right, and his intent might have been to assist this boy in supporting his mother. I, personally, however, most emphatically question that particular proposition. I only name it as a possibility. But in any event, allowing that the manager's primary intent was not the securing of the very cheapest kind of cheap labor, and that his intent really was good. (In other words, giving him the full benefit of every doubt.) Still, has he the moral right to place the reproduction of a photoplay which costs perhaps many thousands of dollars in the hands of a fifteen-year-old kid, who admittedly only has a "few weeks" experience, and who therefore possessed no knowledge whatever of the finer points in the art of projection. Has that manager the moral right to place the reproduction of the work of some of the best artists in the world in the hands of a fifteen-year-old boy? Mind you in asking this question I am laying aside the danger to the audience, which this case proves is a very real danger. This ex-member of the Cigar Makers' Union would probably have thrown a fit had any philanthropic (?) employer undertaken to hire a fifteen-year-old boy at a figure far below the union scale, yes, and even far below the scale of common decency, and put him to making cigars. Yet when he becomes an employer of labor he promptly proceeds to forget all that. At least in making cigars the child would not be endangering the lives of the smokers. He might make it very unpleasant for them by rolling some "horrible examples" in the way of smokes. In this case, however, he not only made it unpleasant for the audience by failure to produce the best possible projection with that which is given him to do with, due to lack of knewledge, but he actually endangers their very lives.

It seems to me it is time the placing of children in operating rooms be forbidden by law. It is not fair to the audience. It is not fair to the bona fide, genuine operator, who must earn his living by the sweat of his brow (and in some of the "cages" and "coops," like the one named they are likely to earn it by the sweat of their whole body.) It is not fair to the artists—to the producer, or to the film exchange. IT IS NOT RIGHT FROM ANY POSSIBLE POINT OF VIEW.

Reason for the Rule.

Ralph Fuller, Ogden, Utah, says:

> I have an important question I would like to have answered through the department, though it has nothing to do with projection. Some time ago I bought a one-half interest in a theater in this city. I have been a member of the I. A., Local 358, for two years past. When I bought the interest in the house I expected to do my own operating, but the local has passed a law prohibiting an owner from running his own machine. Do you think this is fair?

Yes, I do, Brother Fuller, and I believe you will yourself concede its fairness when you understand the matter fully. The local has, however, apparently erred in not explaining to you, in detail, its point of view. First: you are now AN EXHIBITOR. Do you think it is fair for you to run your own machine, and thus eliminate the operating expense which your competing exhibitor is compelled to stand? Does not this give you a decidedly UNFAIR ADVANTAGE over your non-operating competitor? But this is not the reason the union passed the law. The union point of view is just this: While not wishing to be understood as intimating that you would do anything of this kind, still it has been found that there are men who have been given a fake "interest" in a theatre purely and entirely as a wage reduction proposition. It is worked this way. The exhibitor, finding he could not sidestep the union scale legitimately, made the following proposition to his more or less weak-in-the-spine operator: "On the face of things I will sell you an interest in the theater. You will pay me the sum of $1.00, so that the transaction may be of record, and thus appear to be legitimate. You will at the same time deed this interest back to me, or to my wife. I will then give you a permanent position at"—whatever wage they may have agreed upon. This particular scheme, Friend Fuller, has been worked in a great many instances. The operator claimed to be "running the machines in his own house," and supposedly was not receiving any salary at all, but a share in the profits. As a matter of fact he was not receiving a share in the business, but an under-the-scale wage. This particular scheme is the thing responsible for the law which many unions have passed prohibiting the owner from running his own machines. Sorry, old man, but I cannot agree that the union is in the wrong in this matter. Even though your buying an interest in the theatre be perfectly legitimate, and you are in fact running your own machines, and not working for wages, still it would be unfair to your fellow exhibitor. If, on the other hand, it were the other thing, it would be unfair to the union—and there you are.

Not Available.

Recently a correspondent suggested the possibility of using Cook-Telar lenses for projection. These lenses have very short back focus, being so constructed that they work at about half the back focus which ordinary lenses require. It was suggested that this might aid in solving the difficulty encountered in the divergence of the light ray behind the aperture. This, however, is not feasible because of the fact that, first, the Cook-Telar lenses are not made for projection purposes, and it is not certain they could be used for projection; second, they come in only one focal length for each size of lens. These lenses are made particularly for use in small hand cameras, and therefore have rather small diameters; also they are only available at this time in one focal length. All of which I believe disposes of the claims of this particular lens to be considered for projection purposes, at least at this time.

TAKE-UP: The take-up is the device by which the exposed film is wound up into the lower retort as fast as the film is exposed. Since the film is wound upon a reel which constantly increases in size as it takes up film it is not possible to have a take-up of constant speed. There have been numerous devices invented for giving a constant decrease in speed of the take-up spindle which would correspond to the change in speed due to the constantly increasing size, but none of them have proven more successful in practice than the simple one of some kind of a slippage which will permit the take-up to revolve only as fast as the film is fed onto it, the most common of these being the friction clutch and the spring belt. The spring belt is a coil of steel spring which will slip on the take-up pulley whenever the tension of the film is sufficiently great. The friction clutch consists of two discs held in contact by a spring with sufficient friction to revolve the spool spindle as fast as the film feeds from the lower sprocket. If the tension of the take-up device is too great for the celluloid to bear the strain, the sprocket holes will be torn out, losing the lower loop, with consequent buckling and snarling. If, on the other hand, the tension is too loose it will be insufficient to revolve the spool spindle and wind the film up compactly as it feeds from the lower sprocket. The spring belt take-up is adjusted by stretching the spring belt, or by shortening it, so as to decrease or increase the friction with which it grips the take-up pulley. In the friction clutch some way is provided for increasing or decreasing the tension of the spring which holds the two clutch discs in contact. Friction clutches should be carefully watched, as an excess of oil will cause them to slip, even under considerable spring tension, or if the lubrication is not sufficient they are liable to "freeze," or bind, together. The friction clutch is, however, much more quickly adjusted than the spring belt. Moreover, the spring belt often has a tendency to stretch and relax its tension, or to wear down the diameter of the take-up pulley, which also decreases its grip.

Gears: On the quality of the gears and bearings of a camera depend its length of service. The workmanship, material and design of the gears and bearings should be fully described as they have so much to do with the intrinsic value of the machine as an instrument of precision. The gears in some of the cheapest cameras are cast from soft die metal; others are carelessly cut from soft brass, while the best are carefully cut from hard brass or steel. A camera in which the gears are made of die metal or soft material will wear down quickly, the gear teeth break easily, the bearings become loose, and it must be soon cast aside, while one which is carefully made of good materials will last for many years. It must be remembered, however, that even the best of materials and workmanship are not proof against abuse, and that grit and dirt and lack of oil will soon ruin the finest of workmanship.

Bearings: Bearings are an important part of the gear chain, and it is important to know that they are made of such material as will prevent their wearing loose in a short time. All important bearings, especially those working at high speed, should be properly bushed with good bearing bronze, preferably in such a manner that the bushing may be replaced if necessary. All bearing surfaces should have proper provision for being easily lubricated, and such places and parts as come in contact with the film, or may throw oil upon the film during their movement, should be provided with shields or other devices to prevent splattering of oil. Lubrication and cleanliness are up to the cameraman, and too much oil is apt to cause more trouble than not enough. For example, a case where a small drop of oil splattered on the interior surface of a lens, where it could not be seen, ruined several thousand feet of negative.

Footage Indicator: The most general type of footage indicator is a graduated dial with a pointer geared down from the mechanism which indicates roughly the number of feet of film run through the camera. Some of the better ones have a second dial indicating the number of frames up to 32 or 48, after which they repeat again. This type of indicator does very well for keeping track of scene and total footage, but is very liable to error since the hands have friction ferrules for setting back to zero and are apt to work loose or become changed in setting through some inadvertent contact. Many kinds of trick work demand a more accurate method, and many cameramen have had revolution counters placed in their cameras which indicate either the footage or the number of frames. These little counters may be obtained with two sets of figures, one giving the total footage and the other the scene footage, in which the scene footage can be set back to zero by turning a small button. A few of the up-to-date manufacturers are now installing such counters upon their cameras.

Speed Indicator: A few makes of cameras are provided with the tachometer, or speed indicator, which indicates the number of frames which are being made per second. While this is a refinement often demanded by amateur cinematographers it is generally disdained by the professional, as he is generally proud of his ability to turn any particular number of frames per second from long practice, and from the fact that the addition of the speed indicator has a considerable retarding influence upon the ease with which the camera may be cranked.

Sprockets and Rollers: As the sprockets in a camera are the means of feeding the film to and from the gate, their material and design is important. They should be accurately cut from hard brass or steel and relieved in the center so that they do not come in contact with the film except at the edges. If they are not accurately cut, with the teeth properly formed, they will have a tendency to tear the sprocket holes or crimp their edges, or even cause the film to ride up over the points of the teeth, which, as one can readily see, would cause several kinds of disaster. If the sprockets are of soft metal the contact of the edges of the sprocket holes will in time wear the sides of the teeth until they become hook shaped, when they will then either tear the film between the sprocket holes or crimp down an edge on one side of each hole, causing several brands of trouble which it is not necessary to dilate upon here.

Rollers: One or more rollers, or guides, are used upon each sprocket to keep the film in mesh with the sprocket teetch. They should be provided with a double bead at each end, the two beads riding the sprocket teeth so as to press upon the film close on either side of each row of sprocket holes, but should not come in contact with the film at any other point. Their bearings should be such that they can revolve freely without lubrication and without play. They should not come in contact with the bare sprocket, but should be just near enough so that one thickness of film can pass over the sprocket freely without the roller bearing unduly hard against it, but just turning freely as the film feeds from the sprocket. In some cameras these rollers are fastened securely at the proper distance from the sprocket and the end of the film must be threaded through by turning the sprocket. In other makes the rollers are mounted upon an arm which may be thrown back so that the film may be placed on the sprocket without threading the end through, after which the roller arm is snapped back into position and held in contact with the film by means of a spring. In such case a stop is provided which holds the arm at the proper distance to keep the rollers from coming in contact with the sprocket itself.

Aperture Plate and Gate: There is a great variety of materials used by different manufacturers for aperture plates. The best material for the aperture plate is that of a very hard metal capable of a mirror-like polish, not easily corroded, and over which the film can pass with a minimum of friction and without danger of scratching either the celluloid or the delicate emulsion. Hardened steel, ground and lapped to a finish, hard silver or Monel metal are among the most desirable. Among those to be religiously avoided, although often used, are soft brass, velvet, die casting metal, or any soft metal. Velvet and soft metal aperture plates, become scored or scratched, or catch and retain small particles of grit and dirt, which cause long, longitudinal scratches on the surface of the emulsion. Even a plate which is smooth and flawless to the touch, and to the eye, will often retain a particle sufficiently large to plow a groove in the soft gelatin of the emulsion and accumulate upon the plate a considerable heap or ridge of the emulsion substance, not only causing horrible rain storms on the screen, but also scattering emulsion dust over the surface of the film, thereby causing innumerable dust specks in the negative. It is a difficult enough matter to keep a clean aperture even under the best of conditions, without being handicapped by having a large percentage of negative spoiled by ugly scratches. Working in a humid atmosphere softens the emulsion of the gelatin and increases the danger of scratching. Wherever scratching is encountered the aperture should be cleaned after taking each scene, a soft brush or the ball of the finger being best for this purpose.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

Announcement.

ANY questions concerning music for the film, suitable instrumentation for motion picture theaters, questions relating to the pipe organ; in fact, any questions, criticisms or suggestions dealing with musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered by Mr. Stuckey through this department. Inquiries should be addressed to Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York City.

The Development of the Film Player.

The limits of the film player should command the attention of every exhibitor who contemplates the purchase of such an instrument for depicting the action on the screen.

The automatic player-piano, combined with the organ is the surprise of the musical world and late improvements and inventions have made this instrument the most satisfactory single intsrument for the musical accompaniment of moving pictures. The automatic film player has developed from a very small and imperfect player-piano, driven by an electric motor, into a huge affair in which the organ feature predominates. It is well that the exhibitor understands the limits of the film player and he should also have a comprehensive knowledge of its possibilities. Many exhibitors, hearing the film player for the first time, are immediately impressed with it, but intelligent understanding should enter into the purchase of such an instrument and architectural and acoustical limits should be thoroughly considered.

What may be called architectural limits is of first importance. The average theater, by the conditions of its size, shape and manner of building, limits the development of the film player. Few theaters are constructed with a view to having the music well located so as to get the best results. The orchestra pit, the location of the organ, the piano or the film player usually receive the last consideration from the architect. As a rule the builders have an idea that the music should be somewhere in front of the stage and they usually leave this important phase until last—until it is too late to arrange the proper architectural and acoustical scheme for the location of the film player.

Little by little prospective builders of film theaters are coming to figure ahead on their musical reequirements. That means to say that the purchase of an organ is often considered and even completed before the theater itself is finished. At present the ordinary moving picture theater is designed with rectangular floor plan and semi-cylindrical roof. The type is almost ideal for all purposes of sound, save for its sharp corners, which have a tendency to promote echoes. These corners could, of course, be rounded off, but it is too much to expect most architects or even managers to consider little things like these.

The arrangement of pipes is also highly important. The roof of the theater is usually low, and the organ pipes often have to be put on a gallery on account of there being no space for them on the floor. Hence sixteen-foot pipes are sometimes too long or else come to near the roof. It is necessary in planning the typical organ for film purposes, especially in smaller houses, to see that the Bourdon and other sixteen-foot stops, if there be any more, are placed down as low as possible, for if they are placed too near the roof, they will tend to sound heavy, rumbly and echoish.

An organ must have a good foundation, and any instrument of this sort which is to fill a hall seating 500 people must be provided with at least one strong bass, sixteen-foot stop, and two good eight-foot Diapasons on the manuals. Let these be provided first, and the remaining stops are not then half as important. Excellent results can be obtained if the organ contains an eight-foot stop of clarinet tone, a four-foot oboe tone, a four-foot flute, an eight-foot Gamba and a four-foot Salicionel. With these one can do anything an organ needs to do for the interpretation of screen action.

If there is plenty of room, let there be added to this a stopped diapason of eight-foot tone, another Gamba, and an eight-foot trombone or trumpet. The sixteen-foot Bourdon will be on the pedal, while on the first manual will be the eight-foot metal diapason, the stopped diapason, one Gamba (low) and one flute. On the other organ will be the open diapason, the other Gamba (high), the oboe, the clarinet and the trumpet or trombone. Enclose these in swell boxes and you have an expressive organ of small size that can be played by hand most satisfactorily, and that by a double roll system can be played also as a solo automatic organ of considerable capacity and of good tonal quality. It will sound well, with strong middle voices, clean bass and not too squeaky a treble. Suppose such an organ divided, and placed with one organ on each side of the screen, while the sixteen-foot pedal stop is cut in two also and placed half on each side. There you have an arrangement quite feasible wherever a motion picture theater has any spare room in front. In many cases, where space is hard to find, a gallery arrangement can be used for the manual stops, leaving the pedal stop on the ground floor level.

Of course, we are counseling an ideal; but it will soon be seen, upon analysis, that it is much better in every way to have pure organ tone with good foundation and no fancy stops than to put in the fancy stops at the expense of the foundation. If you have a good diapason tone and plenty of it, then the next great requirement is that the manual stops shall be enclosed in swell boxes. With a two-manual organ this means that you have in reality two organs each in its swell box, placed on either side of the screen. It is just as easy to have two swells as to have but one, and the result—that the organ becomes expressive in every stop; a result to be desired by every exhibitor who wishes the best musical results. Add expressiveness to solid tone and you have as much as you really need in an organ of relatively small size.

Even the above catalog of stops could be cut down by removing the stopped diapason and the trumpet or trombone stops. But the idea of two manual organ should be rigidly adhered to, at any cost, for the single manual instrument is not, strictly speaking, an organ at all when played by hand.

The same remarks apply to the pneumatic player attached to the film organ. As a matter of fact, a double-roll system, with one roll for each manual and couplers allowing the pedal to be hooked up with either organ as required is quite adequate, A double tracker system with two rows of perforations, and roll to correspond, is even better for convenience sake but more complex to read, not to mention the patent rights that cannot be disturbed for some time to come.

There are many little problems to be solved, as will be seen from the above brief considerations; yet they are quite simple when taken up in an intelligent manner, with real knowledge of the requirements.

To play an organ for moving pictures is an art in itself. and there are very few organists who are now practicing the art of playing for moving pictures who have any conception of how their playing sounds out in the body of the theater. The idea too often is that an "effect" can only be made by pulling out all the stops. And another mistake many organists make is the use of the tremulant. Organists playing organs equipped with a vox humana should use this effect sparingly and not play every number with the tremulant or vox humana. The acoustic properties of the average moving picture theater will not stand the excessive use of certain stops and they should be used with discretion. A simple plain diapason tone is the necessary basis for successful organ playing in a theater of the architectural type common to the majority of moving picture theaters; and exhibitors should not fail to realize this when they consider the purchase of an instrument.

It is highly important to remember that good solid tone, based on the open diapason of the organ proper, with a few stops of soft reed quality to provide variety, is the best possible equipment for any sort of organ in any sort of room, and especially the sort of room the average motion picture theater is. The resources of the moving picture theater in space available and in respect to the money to be laid out, are not usually large enough to permit the erection of a great concert organ. The film-player for general use must have first of all a good organ foundation and the diapason should receive first consideration. If to this are added stopped diapason, octave, twelfth, one "mixture" of three ranks, flute, trumpet and salicional and gamba, no more will be needed. Any more will do more harm than good and will be simply wasted.

It is hoped that in time there will be enough musicians available for playing the organ, but to put such an instrument into the hands of a young lady who has just graduated from piano playing is mere foolishness The subject "Film-Players," "Organs," "Photo-Players," etc., will be thoroughly dealt with in a series of articles now in course of preparation.

Music Every Musician Should Know.

"1812" OVERTURE—TSCHAIKOWSKY.

In 1805, Napoleon's power was at its height; from then it waned until his final overthrow at Waterloo, 1815. In 1812 he decided to invade Russia. He reached Vilna, hesitated and then went on. He defeated the Russians at Smolensk. Again he hesitated, yet again went on and reached Moscow, where he stayed until October. There he determined on the terrible retreat from Moscow. Five-sixths of his army had perished.

The stupendous solemn overture, "The Year 1812," by the great Russian composer, Tschaikowsky, is a vivid expression of patriotic exhaltation.

It opens impressively with the great Russian hymn, "God Preserve Thy People." Then follows a turbulent movement, wherein are heard prominently the "Marsellaise" broken by characteristic Russian folk-tunes. The introductory Russian hymn reappears and there occurs a mighty musical struggle between French and Russians, symbolized by their respective national anthems. Finally the "Marsellaise" is wholly silenced by the overwhelming surge of the familiar Russian National hymn, with which the overture closes amid the exultant pealing of cathedral bells.

VENETIAN BOAT SONG—MENDELSSOHN.

Mendelssohn composed forty-nine "songs without words" of which the "Venetian Boat Song" is one. It shares a world-wide popularity with the "Spring Song," the "Spinning Song" and "Consolation."

The form of this composition, so wholly lyric in spirit—the beautiful "singing" melodies sustained by wonderfully appropriate accompaniments—was originated by Mendelssohn, as was also the general title.

In the Venetian Boat Song we hear the melodious gondolier as he urges his swaying scraft over the rippling waters.

Eighteen "songs" had been published when, in 1839, Mendelssohn' writing to his publisher in reference to certain works he was engaged upon says: "But they are not 'songs without words' for I have no intention of writing any more of that sort." It is fortunate for music lovers that Mendelssohn did not adhere permanently to this resolution.

The "songs without words" might also be called, "songs without titles," for to only six of the forty-nine did the composer give individual names. The titles by which the originally un-named ones are popularly known were suggested by Stephen Heller, a contemporary pianist-composer, and a friend of Mendelssohn.

IDILIO—LACK.

Among the great quantity of music composed by this French musician, the present "Idilio" is among the best known and the most popular. It is really an unpretentious bit of writing, but it boasts the charm of simplicity of manner and contents. Its mood is almost pastoral, its bass very simple and unostentatious, its melody as graceful and bucolic as though piped by some shepherd. There is introduced a contrasting section which is slightly more dramatic in mood but which does not lack the easy grace of the initial theme. The contrasting episode is very brief, and the return of the main mood and melody is heightened in effect. There is appended a short coda, which rounds out the composition gracefully.

HUNGARIAN DANCES—BRAHMS.

Johannes Brahms won for himself a place among the world's great masters by composing noble works in many forms—symphony, sonata, requiem, songs, etc. His four symphonies are especially valuable, because of their classical style. The Hungarian Dances are exactly what the title indicates—Hungarian themes that were put into their present shape by Brahms. Many of them were of Gypsy origin, but some were in the native Hungarian style, which does not show the Gypsy scale. Taken together, the three dances form a most attractive study in rhythm and accent.

Composer Strauss Dead.

A Vienna despatch announces the death of Eduard Strauss, the composer of dance music.

Strauss was a member of a famous musical family. His father Johann Strauss, was considered the most notable composer and conductor of dance music of his generation and wrote 246 pieces of dance music in addition to a series of comic operas.

Eduard's brother, Joseph, was known as "The Waltz King," and was the creator of 283 popular waltzes. More than 200 pieces of dance music are credited to Eduard. He was conductor of court balls in Petrograd for several years and visited America in 1901-1902. In recent years he made his home in Vienna. He was eighty-one years old.

Brevities.

Geraldine Farrar, star of "Carmen," "Joan, the Woman," and other features, made her reappearance at the Metropolitan Opera House on New Year's day, singing the title role in Puccini's masterpiece, "Madame Butterfly."

The program of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Carnegie Hall on January 6th included Tschaikowsky's first orchestral suite in D-minor, which is seldom heard here. The Suite is in six parts, comprising an Introduction and Fugue, a Divertimento, an Intermezzo, a March Minature, a Scherzo and a Gavotte. Of these the Gavotte is the most familiar to musicians and the public.

At the Rialto, during the recent showing of the picture, "The Steel Wall of France," showing the French troops marching into action, Hugo Riesenfeld, conductor of the Rialto orchestra, composed with Mr. Rothapfel, a special musical number for that portion of the program.

The Overture was Dvorak's "Carneval." Mme. d'Epinoy sang an aria from "Louise" by Charpentier. Vicente Ballester gave "Largo et Factotum," from "The Barber of Seville." There was an organ solo by Dr. A. G. Robyn and a harp solo by A. Kastner.

Three musical productions are scheduled for Broadway during the present month. Fred C. Whitney, producer of "The Chocolate Solider" and other notable successes, and engaged in the presentation of musical comedies for nearly two decades, is to enter the producing field again offering Oscar Strauss's latest operetta, "Boys Will Be Boys." The original book, by Ferdinand Stallberg, touching briefly, in a few of its scenes, on certain romantic phases of the present war, has been adapted for the American version by Edward Paulton, co-author of "Erminie." Gastano Merola will conduct the music.

The entire chorus has been selected for "The Beautiful Unknown," the new Viennese operetta, music by Oscar Strauss, to be produced by the Shuberts.

Comstock-Elliot Co. will present "Oh, Boy!" the new Bolton-Wodehouse-Kern musical comedy. Max Hirschfield is the musical director.

"Pasadena, California."

A SERIES of excellent views of this beautiful Californian city, lying twelve miles distant from Los Angeles, are contained in "See America First, No. 69." These views include the Arroyo Seco Valley, the Busch sunken gardens, covering thirty-three acres, and among other interesting and picturesque points describe the German legendary in miniature images of fabled personages, statoined at various places about the gardens. We are also shown the Colorado avenue bridge, the Horace Mann High School, the San Gabriel Mission, the First Christ Science Church, Orange Grove avenue, the Santa Rosa driveway and other attractive and interesting scenes about Pasadena.

"The Heart of the Blue Ridge."

In No. 70, of the "See America First" series, we are again treated to scenes of romantic Virginia, and are taken into the very heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Scenes around Lexington are of particular interest. The Washington and Lee University, the church in which "Stonewall Jackson" taught a Sunday school class, the ruins of Liberty Hall, a relic of the Scotch-Irish element in Virginia; the Virginia Military Institute and other buildings of historic interest are shown. While among the more attractive scenic bits are Buena Vista, reflections in the North River, Goshen Pass and also some beautiful waterfalls on the North River. An amusing animated cartoon, entitled "The Gormand," closes the reel.

"The Foothills of the Pyrenees."

"Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 10" presents some beautiful scenes in the neighborhood of Pau, Laruns and Luchon, France. Among these scenes are the Hourat Gorges on the Ossau River and many beautiful perspectives among the mountains. Particularly attractive are the scenes on the Ossau River, as it runs in torrents toward the town of Laruns.

"Budapest, Hungary."

This interesting travel subject, appearing also in "Mutual Tours Around the World, No. 10," shows us the exact situation of Budapest, capital of Hungary, on the Danube River, lying partly on one side and partly on the other. It states in subtitle facts with regard to the incorporation of the two towns, Buda and Pest, into one city, called Budapest in 1872. One of the interesting sights is the Kutten Brucke, one of the longest bridges in the world, of which several comprehensive views are given. The Houses of Parliament of Gothic style architecture and a mediaeval fort, now transformed into a beautiful castle, are among other interesting sights.

"Life in Egypt."

Also contained in No. 10 of "Mutual Tours Around the World" is "Life in Egypt." This subject shows us the women of Egypt transporting water, carried in huge bottles on their heads, it shows us the primitive methods of agriculture employed by the Egyptian natives and also their methods of irrigating the land. The procession of the sacred carpet and drilling of the native soldiers are other scenes of interest.

"High, Low and the Game."

Another excellent film from the Educational Films Corporation of America is that in which Robert C. Bruce presents the principal episodes in one week's travel in the Olympic mountains. The subtitles of this picture represent extracts from his diary. The film presents some glorious "snow stuff," along with other interesting sights, with a delightful contrast of scenes when we reach the Pacific after mentally sliding down the mountain sides. Delightful beach and surf scenes form a part of the charm of this reel, interspersed with comedy incidents.

"The Valley of the Hoh."

In this beautiful scenic Mr. Bruce has again displayed a fine discrimination in choosing from among many beautiful scenes, those which might be most appealing to the eye. In the valley of the river Hoh we travel with the cameraman through dense forests, over steep hills and finally find our way into the Olympic mountains and the big tree district, stopping a second to view closely a Douglas fir measuring 42 feet in circumference. The Great Dane Slim and his master, Slimmer, are the chief movers in this picture. It is interesting to note the companionship between the two. A subtitle referring to their camp near a sign, denoting Broadway and Forty-second street, erected in the mountain wilds, reads thusly: "Wonderful days were spent near the camp, but the night that the Boss and the Cook took a flashlight picture their companion left them forever."

"Making Old Glory."

The "Universal Screen Magazine, No. 6" contains a detailed illustration of how the American flag is made. The scenes contained therein were taken at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where the official flags for our warships are made. From the cutting of the stripes, including the sewing of the flag, the making of the field of blue, the making and sewing on of the stars, the pressing of the flag, the placing of rope and canvas heading, to the final folding of the flag, are given a comprehensive showing.

"Turpentine from Waste Timber."

"Reel Life, No. 36" contains as its opening subject an interesting treatise on the extraction of turpentine from waste timber, showing how in the South stumps are removed from the ground and blown to pieces by means of explosives, after which by a distilling method the turpentine is extracted from them.

"English Walnuts in United States."

Another attractive subject contained in "Reel Life, No. 36," whereby we are taken to the huge walnut groves of California to watch the gathering of the walnuts as they are shaken from the trees to the ground, the pickers working only one tree at a time. It is interesting to further note the careful manner in which they are sorted after being dried in the sun, tested for meat values, and placed in boxes or bags as the case may be before being shipped to the market.

"Homes of the Rich."

This number also seen in the "Universal Screen Magazine, No. 6" refers to New York as "the center of home life for many famous kings of finance," and shows us exterior views of the home of C. K. G. Billings, the horseman, whose estate has recently been purchased by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and presented to the City of New York to be used as a park. Other homes exhibited in the film are those of Commodore Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, Andrew Carnegie, William A. Clark and Henry Clay Frick.

"How to Keep Your Hair Beautiful."

In the "Universal Screen Magazine, No. 6" Catherine Calvert gives a comprehensive demonstration of the proper care of the hair. From the film we learn the proper method of attending to the hair previous to retiring, the treating of the hair to a little fresh air in the morning before combing, and various other important things of value to those who would preserve the "crowning glory."

"Egg Inspection."

An interesting and instructive subject contained in No. 6 of the "Universal Screen Magazine," showing the work entailed by the Board of Health of the City of New York in supervising the estimated 1,800,000 eggs that are annually consumed in the city. The demonstration includes the handling of the eggs, the stamping of cold storage eggs and the opening and separating of eggs which are then placed in cans, each containing thirty pounds, after which they are put through a freezing process and sold for use at the various city bakeries.

"The Mysteries of Crystallization."

An interesting micriscopic study from the educational Films Corporation of America shows the crystallization of a tear drop, the crystallization of a portion of sal ammoniac placed on a piece of glass, and the crystallization of a drop of copper in silver nitrate.

"Serene of Index."

While most of us love a good travel picture it is of rather rare occurrence that one appeals to us as being totally different from all the rest in general character. "Serene of Index" is a masterpiece of photography and arrangement, made by Robt. C. Bruce for the Educational Films Corporation of America, and must be seen to be thoroughly appreciated. It presents closeups of waterfalls that have the appearance of suddenly disseminating fluffs of cotton tumbling helterskelter over rocks and precipices, and others photographed against the sun and perhaps less in a hurry to make away over the rocks have allowed the very drops of water, more substantial than spray, to be photographed glistening in the sunlight.

Under Water Photography

Remarkable Exhibition in Universal's Adaptation of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

ONE OF the most remarkable pictures of an educational as well as fictional nature that the season has produced will be found in the adaptation of Jules Verne's novel, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," by the Universal Company. The most remarkable point about this eight-reel production is the underwater photography. We peer through the magic window of Captain Nemo's submarine at the wonders of the sea bottom, at the coral beds and wonderful gardens of the ocean, at the various kinds of fish, including the man-eating sharks that inhabit the deep, and at the wreck of an old blockade runner. We watch the hunters of the deep don their undersea garments and wander on the floor of the ocean shooting with guns discharged by compressed air methods at the sea game. We also see them charged by a man-eating shark. This film, which was reviewed in our issue of January 13, is well worth putting forth an effort to see.

Promoter of Better Film Movement Talks of Her Work and of Her Experiences With Exhibitors.

MARY GRAY PECK, during a recent visit to New York, spoke interestingly of her experiences and accomplishments in the better film movement. Owing to the frequent references made to Miss Pecks' work in the columns of this magazine it is unnecessary to repeat the nature and extent of this work.

During her middle western tour Miss Peck came in contact with a possible two hundred exhibitors and a goodly number of exchangemen; and while in many cities which she visited she addressed large audiences gathered in most instances under the auspices of the women's clubs, in a number of other cities and towns she confined her efforts not to speechmaking, but to quiet investigation and to imbibing the views of the exhibitors on the question of the better film movement. These exhibitors with scarcely an exception were more than willing to lend their services in creating better conditions; even the small man expressed himself willing to do his mite providing he did not have to lose too much money, and few were unwilling to take some chances.

One of the most interesting meetings in which Miss Peck participated occurred in Kansas City, where a number of exhibitors and exchangemen met under one roof and discussed the question in a lively and somewhat irate manner, the exhibitors throwing the blame for certain unseemly conditions on the exchangemen, and the exchangemen in turn throwing the onus of recalcitrance on the exhibitor.

Speaking of the gravity of the present situation Miss Peck referred amusingly to the vast army of those whose Puritan minds are filled with a feeling of disapproval toward moving pictures, whose children insist on seeing the pictures, whose moral indignation is fanned to fiercer flame by a consciousness of their own moral weaknesses, and whose natural curiosity is drawing them to the picture show anyway, whether good or bad. It is this element of the public, Miss Peck states, with which the manufacturer has not had to cope previously, but which is now threatening the life of the business with legalized censorship. This disturbing shadow, she suggests, might be dispelled by exhibitors setting aside one night in the week for a specially selected program.

Among the addresses to be delivered by Miss Peck in the east, two of these at least, have been scheduled for New York. The first was delivered at the Washington Irving High School on Sunday evening, January 14, under the auspices of the Recreation Committee of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of New York City, and was devoted to the subject, "How the Movies Keep the Children Off the Streets." The second will be delivered on Thursday evening, January 18, at the Park Avenue Hotel. A full account of Miss Peck's New York addresses and other details regarding these meetings will appear in next week's issue.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

Beginning with February it is expected that the Universal Screen Magazine will be issued weekly instead of fortnightly, as previously. The demand for the class of material, which is being shown in this magazine in film, has made it exceedingly popular, the result of which is a request for its more frequent appearance. Each issue of the Universal Screen Magazine contains four or five educational subjects of popular character, and closes with an animated cartoon in clay, which is a product of the remarkable sculptural talent of Willie Hopkins.

One of the developments of the past few years exists in the fact that no industrial exhibition is deemed complete without a display of moving pictures covering some phase of the industry which is being exploited. At the recent poultry show at Madison Square Garden the auditorium on the second floor was almost constantly employed by lecturers, some of whom used moving pictures by way of illustration. Among the films shown were some taken at the Government poultry farm, at Beltsville, Md., and others taken at the Dictagraph Poultry Farm, at West Nyack, N. Y. A lecture on "Modern Methods in Game Breeding and Preservation" was also illustrated by moving pictures.

Miss Varian Wins Fox Art Prizes

Young Woman Takes First and Second Awards on Study of Annette Kellermann.

MISS DOROTHY VARIAN, a student at the Art Student's League, New York, won both the first and the second prize for the best study of a full length pose of Annette Kellermann. One hundred entries, submitted by representatives from every art school in New York City and vicinity, opposed hers. Her monetary reward is $150, donated by William Fox, and the honor of having her work utilized throughout the world in publicity for "A Daughter of the Gods."

The decision was made at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, by Robert Henri, W. J. Glackens, John Sloan and Wallace Morgan, acting as judges. Philip Boileau and Prince Troubetzkoy, fellow judges, were unable to be present.

The competition began the latter part of last November, and ended with the old year. During its progress, the lobby of the Lyric theater was thronged with art students, who set up their easels and worked amid curious on-lookers. Seven oil paintings, twelve water-colors, seventy-six drawings in pencil and charcoal, five pastels, one wood carving and one bas-relief in plastline were submitted. Miss Varian's winning offering was a water-color, and the study, which won the second prize, a pencil drawing.

"GLORY" UNITY'S NEXT.

Miss Maud Lillian Berri, the well known prima donna, is the authoress of the next release of the Unity Sales Corporation, entitled "Glory," featuring Juanita Hansen and Kolb and Dill. Miss Berri's father left her a fortune and she has taken up the line of producing superior, clean picture plays, the first of which is "Glory."

The cast of "Glory" is exceptionally fine. Miss Hansen, who plays the title role of Glory, is one of the most attractive women on the screen, having been starred in the "Secret of the Submarine," and many other notable productions. Kolb and Dill, the famous comedians, have in this production proven themselves to be among the best actors in the line of comedy-drama on the screen, handling the comedy situations in the cleanest possible manner and the dramatic situations with a force worthy of the best men in the line today. Taken all in all, "Glory" will no doubt be received with open arms by exhibitors who want good, clean, interesting and forceful photoplays.

Miriam Cooper, in private life the wife of Director R. A. Walsh, has signed a contract with the William Fox Studios and will soon begin starring in a series of pictures under her husband's direction. Miss Cooper played important parts in "The Honor System," "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance." "The Honor System" is the only production in which she has worked for Fox Films.

Censorship Methods Abroad

Developments in the Situation Now Confronting the Exhibitors of Great Britain and France

In Great Britain.

THE situation in regard to moving picture censorship in Great Britain shows indications of developing into a repetition of American trade history. The entire industry—with one notable exception—is resolved upon immediate concerted action to combat the proposals extended by Mr. Samuel (the Home Secretary) which he regards as "model" conditions of censorship and which were detailed in my last letter on this subject. So far as the trade is concerned, and for that matter so far as the legislative opposition party is affected, the great bone of contention attaching to these conditions is the establishment at the expense of the industry of an official censorship which, while centrally scrutinizing moving pictures, reserves the right of local authorities to object to any film so censored. Any imposition along these lines could only precipitate in the country a state of affairs already experienced on a larger scale in the States, and it is for the purpose of tackling the impending danger in its pre-material stages that a joint body, the Cinematograph Trade Council, has been inaugurated with already a week's good work to its credit. The defensive work is indeed being rushed, a publicity agent is already at work, a wide screen campaign in preparation and means available for feeling, if necessity should arrive, the pulse of Parliament. And this before the actuality should give the case of the trade a weighty balance in its favor. British legislators are proverbially partial to long-cherished precedents. None affecting film censorship has yet been created outside a purely local area and it is now up against the trade's new fighting body to remove the probability.

The Cinematograph Trade Council is the outcome of a general trade conference called a few weeks ago to discuss the Home Secretary's suggestions. It is strictly a non-party committee that is representative proportionately of each section of the trade, manufacturer, exchange, exhibitor and author. Central offices with an efficient staff and a qualified publicity agent, if not at the moment open, are on the point of starting work under the careful supervision of the committee appointed at the trade conference and printed in The World at the time, with the following additions: E. H. Montagu (Selig), Will Jury (Jury's Pictures), H. Rowson (Ideal Film Renting Co.), E. Jepson (representing the Society of Authors), committeemen; Messrs. Goodwin (Exhibitors' Association), Kay (Ideal Film Renting Co.) and Lovesey (Ruffell's Pictures), trustees, and Cluet Lock (Exhibitors' Association), secretary pro tem.

The powers and rights of the many local licensing authorities to impose ambiguous conditions upon theater licenses within their respective areas is without doubt the root cause of the present deadlock with the Council and the Home Secretary. One of the first movements of the new body, I am informed, will be to select a suitable case as a test case to be taken to the House of Lords for a definite and final judgment. Many suitable cases for carrying to the last tribunal in the land have arisen during the past year, but the expense of advanced litigation through this course often renders it impractical for individual exhibitors. The finances of the Cinematograph Trade Council (nearly $5,000 was subscribed in the first week) would permit of this with a more equal distribution of the cost over the entire industry.

The Reply to the Home Secretary.

It is quite patent that the Home Secretary (Mr. Herbert Samuel) means to promote to the fullest extent the censorship scheme he evolved in collaboration with the numerous local licensing authorities and which are so universally distasteful to every section of the trade. At the Home Office conference Mr. Samuel invited the comments of the trade deputation upon the points he then set forth in support of the scheme. I have been handed a copy of the letter summarizing these observations which, briefly, are as follows:

The Right Hon. Herbert Samuel, M. P.
Secretary of State for Home Affairs,
Whitehall, London, S. W.

Sir: Taking advantage of the invitation you were good enough to give the deputation which waited upon you on the 13th inst. to communicate to you any further observations which seemed desirable, the Committee appointed by the Censorship Conference has carefully considered your courteous reply to its observations. It sincerely regrets that your reply is not convincing upon points which the Committee regard as of vital importance. Appreciating to the full your candid admission that no form of censorship could be regarded as satisfactory which merely added to existing censorships, it would venture to divert your attention to the disparity existing between the figures you presented and the actual figures as it is understood they exist from which the Committee is bound to conclude that you must have been seriously misled. There are at least 209 licensing authorities in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland. From these 126 answers have been received (to the Home Secretary's original letter suggesting his scheme of censorship). The number prepared to conform to your recommendations you have placed at 115. It is obvious from the illustration the Committee was able to give in the case of Bristol that, as sufficient care has not been exercised in scrutinizing the replies, it may readily be found that even the figure of 115 is misleading. The Committee is strongly of opinion that this is so. But assuming that 115 does represent the correct figure the percentage is not 92 as you affirm but only 60 and in the absence of any specific details as to the licensing authorities supposed to be consenting, it may well be that they do not represent anything even approaching 60 per cent. of the theaters. It is clear to the Committee that the present variety of decisions would be left not merely "unmitigated and unredressed" but further complicated by an additional variety.

However dissatisfied the trade may be with the existing unsatisfactory state of affairs it will cheerfully face the evil it knows rather than endure the serious risks of another experiment, in the process of which the whole business may be utterly ruined.

The Committee must confess its intense disappointment at the ambiguity of your reply upon the question of the Advisory Committee. It is still entirely in the dark as to the composition of that body and of its powers. While the admission that the claim for fuller representation has been made out it is welcomed such representation could have no meaning and no value unless it could be effective. If absolute power resides in the Home Secretary for the time being, whether that power is exercised bureaucratically or not, it is capable of being so used, and if those representing the trade become parties to establishing such a power by consent, they would be traitors to the best interests of the business. The Committee is confident that films would not be submitted to a censorship constituted in the manner proposed, nor would the trade provide the funds to maintain it.

Your attitude has made it clear that legislation at the moment is impossible. It is equally clear that without statute fees cannot be levied. The Committee, therefore, venture to express the hope that you will make some real effort to meet the clearly expressed wishes of those upon whom you rely to supply you with funds, otherwise it is certain they will not be forthcoming. War has changed many things, but it has not yet brought us to this pass—that outside of statute a trade can be compelled to pay for its own execution.

A. E. NEWBOULD,
Chairman of the Censorship Committee of the Cinematograph Trade and Inc. Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers.

A Commission of Investigation.

Meanwhile the first decisive movement to combat the root cause of this growing influence for censorship has been initiated by the Cinematograph Trade Council upon a basis eminently equitable and fair to those who may have charges to bring against the motion picture play. It has long been quite patent that the censorship fad was given its recent momentum from the many unjust, and in some cases absurd, charges leveled against it from the magistrate's bench and the parson's pulpit. Even within the past three months the film has been a general bowling alley for the Bishop of London down to the village curate as a wholesale perverter of public morals and for judicial magistrates in town and country as a proved incentive to the blackest crime. Clearly it is to these voices, fostered probably by local authorities seeking further powers, that the Home Secretary has given his ears and to establish or destroy their arguments they are to have an excellent opportunity. The National Council of Public Morals—an old established institution embracing such men as the Lord Bishop of Birmingham, Lieutenant-General Baden Powell and many equally famous authors, scientists, politicians, clergymen and psychologists—has been asked to conduct a special investigation into the allegations against the moving pcture.

A further letter summarizing the demands of the trade for a single, final and trade represented censorship has been sent along to Mr. Samuel and this will probably be the ultimatum. Every member of the lower House of Parliament has been sent a copy of the letter and it may not be many days before we can follow the American example of identifying each individual enemy and contesting him in his own electorate on the issue of censorship. J. B. S.

In France.

THE recent action of the French Government, acting through the Ministry of the Interior, for the regulation of motion pictures is of interest to American manufacturers of films. The ministry has created a commission of five, composed of four members from the department and the subchief of the Prefecture of Police of Paris, for the performance of duties similar to those of the boards of censorship in the United States, according to U. S. Vice-Consul Dives B. Levis, St. Etienne, France.

Before a picture may be shown it must be passed upon by this commission. If it is accepted, a permit is issued for its exhibition, subject to the action of local departmental and municipal authorities, whose approval may be given or withheld, and whose decision is final as far as their respective jurisdictions are concerned. The sanction of the commission is intended rather as an indication of the worthiness of the picture. The members have asked for the active co-operation of municipal authorities in the suppression of unauthorized and objectionable films.

A complaint from the manager of a large picture theater in St. Etienne calls attention to the fact that while the titles and subtitles of American pictures are in French, most of the comedy pictures have many signs in scenes of the pictures in English, such as "No swimming allowed," "Boarders wanted," "Beware of the dog," etc. There are also supposed speeches by persons and animals in illustrated cartoons, upon which the reason for the situation or the motive of the action depend, and much is lost to the audience because they are in English.

The manager quoted believes that while this might occur in an occasional film finding its way here, the fault could be obviated by a "take over" with the signs in the language of the country they are intended for. Although there are several French and Italian comedy subjects with a following, the American rough-comedy film is far in the lead here. The French polite farce or "vaudeville," as written for the screen by well-known authors and portrayed by artists of the Parisian theaters, occupies a high place of its own.

U. S. Consul John Ball Osborne, Havre, France, writing in "Commerce Reports," says that the moving picture form of amusement has witnessed an important development in Havre, France, since the beginning of the war, on account of the lack of other amusements, particularly regular theatrical performances, and the large military element in the population. All the picture theaters previously existing have been operated with full attendance. and a few new ones have been opened.

There has been an increasing use of American films, particularly short plays, both dramatic and comic. The managers of all the Havre motion-picture theaters assure this consulate that American films of all kinds are greatly appreciated and sought after.

In view of the widespread French interest in everything relating to the United States, it is regrettable that there are not more scenic films illustrating the beautiful and interesting spots of the United States. Important American occurrences, also, ought more frequently to be depicted in the current events shown in the French theaters. At present there is a rare sprinkling of these films.

The Cinema Omnia Pathe, 153, Boulevard de Strasbourg, is the largest and most important motion-picture theater in this region. It is a spacious, well-ventilated, circular building, containing seats for 3,000 persons. It is controlled by the Societe Omnia, which has a number of other picture theaters throughout France.

The performances in Havre are given nightly except Mondays, with matinees on Thursdays and Sundays. The performance lasts about two and a half hours. All classes of films are given, including those in several parts. Strict censorship is exercised.

The prices of admission range from 60 centimes (0.12) to 3 francs ($.58). Except on Sundays and holidays, these prices may be reduced about one-half by presenting "billets de faveur," which are given gratuitously to customers at tobacco shops. This system, which is common in Havre, necessarily discriminates against transients who know nothing of it and pay the scheduled prices.

The Select Palace, 123, Boulevard de Strasbourg, is controlled by the Societe Ouest Cinema. This theater has a seating capacity of 1,200. Its performances, which last about two and a half hours, include all kinds of films of all marks except the Pathe. The price of admission varies from 1 franc ($0.19) to 3 franc ($.58), the average being 2 francs ($9.39). At the Kursaal Cinema, 22 Rue de Paris, the performance lasts two and a half hours and includes all kinds of films. Those with dramatic subjects usually consist of two or three parts, sometimes four parts, and are of 600 to 1,200 meters. All marks of films are used in this theater except Gaumont and Pathe. The prices paid for their use vary considerably. The manager estimated 800 to 1,000 francs ($152 to $193) per week for the use of five or six films. For the purchase of used films the average price is 10 to 15 centimes ($0.02 to $0.03) per meter. The prices of admission are 40 centimes ($0.08), 50 centimes ($0.10), 60 centimes ($0.12), and 1 franc ($0.19). No billets de faveur are issued by this cinema.

The Gaumont, 16 Rue de la Comedie, run in connection with a cafe, has a seating capacity of about 400. The films are of all kinds. Dramatic offerings are usually in several parts. This theater has contracts with the Gaumont and Obert Companies, of Paris, whose films are used exclusively. The prices of admission are 40 centimes ($0.08), 50 centimes ($0.10), 75 centimes ($0.14), and 1 franc ($0.19). This theater also issues the half-price tickets obtainable at tobacco shops.

The Cinema Olympia, 14 Rue Edouard-Larue, like the Gaumont, is run in connection with a cafe and restaurant. It has 300 seats. The program is composed mainly of dramatic subjects in several parts. The films are rented from the larger companies in Paris, particularly Pathe and Gaumont. Many American and Italian films are also shown. The prices of admission are 75 centimes ($0.14) and 1.5 francs ($0.29), subject to 50 per cent. reduction on presentation of special tickets.

According to the reports made to the consulate by the respective managers, the total seating capacity of the five picture theaters of Havre that have been mentioned is 5,600, distributed as follows: Omnia-Pathe, 3,000; Select-Palace, 1,200; Kursaal, 700; Gaumont, 400; Olympia, 300.

Besides the houses mentioned there are a few minor theaters which bring the total seating capacity for the city and suburbs up to about 6,000. While Havre has a normal population of 136,159, which is increased to about 170,000 when the contiguous suburbs are included, the present population served by the motion-picture theaters mentioned is fully 200,000. This gives a ratio of one seat for every 33 persons in the community, apparently all that is required.

The publicity methods used are very thorough. Besides handbills gratuitously distributed at each performance giving the features of the program for the following week, similar announcements are made in the amusement columns of the daily newspapers, and large posters are used on the billboards. Some of these posters are elaborately illustrated in colors and compel the attention of the public. Certain of the moving picture theaters also employ portable billboards on carts which are drawn through the city.

Baby Lorna Volare

"THE UNMASKING," the sixteenth and final episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," Consolidated Film Corporation's super-serial, will be released this week. Photoplay fans who have been following eagerly Maurice Costello, Ethel Grandin, Olga Olonova, Thomas J. McGrane, Eugene Strong and others in their adventures with the mysterious Crimson Stain through fifteen thrilling episodes, will learn in this final episode, who Pierre La Rue, the implacable, is.

Baby Lorna Volare.

Maurice Costello who, as Harold Stanley, pursued a relentless investigation of the criminal activities of Pierre La Rue and his gangsters, succeeds by a coup-de-maitre in bringing the criminals to justice. So perfectly constructed is this final episode that the identity of Pierre La Rue is not revealed until the last fifteen feet of the film.

One of the big thrills in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" occurs in an adventure in which Baby Lorna Volare is the leading figure. Baby Lorna is only four and one-half years old and has been in the United States about a year and a half, having come with her father and mother from Melbourne, Australia, where she first saw the light of day. Acknowledged to be one of the child prodigies of the screen world, Baby Lorna has a commendable record in films. In "The Crimson Stain Mystery" she has been accorded a role which gives her ample opportunity to display her unusual talent.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

Victory for "Intolerance"

Cook County Commissioners and the License Committee of the Chicago City Council Give the Great Picture Unanimous Approval.

THE board of commissioners of Cook county and the license committee of the city council of Chicago have viewed "Intolerance," and have given the great picture their unanimous approval.

It will be remembered that in a former letter it was stated that certain would-be reformers had charged that the picture was a libel on public charities, and insisted on a pruning of the objectionable portions.

The resolution unanimously passed by the county commissioners commends "Intolerance" to the consideration of all persons. Alderman Toman, chairman of the license committee of the city council, after seeing the picture, was enthusiastic in his praise. "I wish we had twenty pictures like this," he answered in reply to a question. "I advise every man, woman and child to see 'Intolerance.'"

Col. Wm. F. Cody in Historic Pictures.

The death of Colonel Wm. F. Cody, more popularly known as "Buffalo Bill," has been chronicled by the press of every civilized country in the world. He was a picturesque, national character in his home country, and his name has been a household word.

His death recalls that among his numerous enterprises he engaged in the making of pictures showing the battles of Wounded Knee and War Bonnet, in the war against the Sioux Indians.

These pictures were made by the Buffalo Bill Historical Film Co., of which Colonel Cody was part owner. The other owners were Essanay and the publishers of the Denver Post.

In October and November, 1913, the pictures were made under the supervision of General Nelson A. Miles, with a strict regard to historical accuracy, on the orders of the United States government. As at first made the pictures were of eight-reel length, and they were released under the title, "Wars of Civilization."

Several regiments of the United States army were represented in the filmed battles, and over 1,500 Sioux Indians participated. The battles were fought before the camera on the original sites, and Colonel Cody was the leading figure throughout.

Assisting General Miles on the occasion were General Chas. A. King, General Maus and General Frank Baldwin. Col. Sickles, who was a lieutenant at the original battle of Wounded Knee, took part with his men in the filmed battle.

One of the most exciting incidents in the pictures was the singlehanded fight between Col. Cody and Yellow Hand, a Sioux Indian taking the part of the latter.

As the United States government has two prints of these pictures filed away in Washington as historical records, future generations will be able to see "Buffalo Bill" as he was in the flesh, both as scout and soldier.

The Photoplay League Aims at the Production of Artistic Photoplays.

Miss Helen Varick Boswell, of New York, was a visitor in Chicago last week, and made an address in the Tip-Top Inn at a luncheon, Friday, Jan. 12, on the aims of the Photoplay League. This league is a new national association, organized for the purpose of encouraging the production of better photoplays, the members including some of the most prominent people in the country.

Miss Boswell is a member of the advisory committee of the executive board of the organization. On the committee are many other people of note, including Mrs. Chas. H. Whitman, wife of the Governor of New York, Mrs. Chas. Dana Gibson, Mrs. Frederick Lee Ackerman, Mrs. Schuyler N. Warren, Miss Kate Douglas Wiggin, Mrs. Howard Gans, Mrs. David Rumsey, Mrs. Edward J. Gavegan, Robert Erskine Ely, Reginald Pelham Bolton, Frank Lascelles, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, E. H. Blashfield, Mrs. James Speyer, Julia Marlowe, E. H. Sothern, John D. Crimmins, Adolph Lewisohn, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Frederick C. Howe, Waldo C. Morse, Norman Hapgood, Henry Fairfield Osborn, Frederick A. Stokes, Isaac N. Seligman, Waldo U. Morse, Evart Jansen Wendell, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. J. Ogden Armour, and many other notables.

It is the aim of the Photoplay League to stir the great public which patronize moving pictures to form a body that will encourage the makers of moving pictures to produce a higher type of photoplay. This can be done, it is hoped, by refusing patronage to films of an inferior type.

The formation of the Photoplay League originated at an informal gathering in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dana Gibson, in the spring of 1916, at which Mr. Frank Lascelles and Miss Helen Varick Boswell (who is a member of the moving picture committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs) were present.

The plan found enthusiastic response from everyone approached on the subject. Cornelius Vanderbilt said that while he was too busy to attend the picture theatre often himself, his children were very fond of doing so, and he wanted to be sure that they were seeing the right kind of pictures. That was the feeling of others who wanted their names to be identified with this new organization.

The first meeting of the Photoplay League was held at the exclusive Colony Club early in December last. Miss Boswell and Miss Kate Douglas Wiggin were on the program, and at that time Mr. E. H. Blashfield was elected president, Mr. Waldo C. Morse, treasurer, and Mr. Schuyler N. Warren, secretary.

The second meeting will be held at the Rialto moving picture theater in New York, on Wednesday morning, Jan. 17. Several thousand invitations to New York's most prominent people have been sent out. At that time a history of the moving picture, showing the different steps in the progress of the industry will be given.

The leaders of the Photoplay League believe that the only censorship of moving pictures that will ever be successful is the censorship which is created by demand. It is their plan to have a League center in every community in the country, whose membership is composed of people who will support artistic and high-class photoplays.

Through the central organization, of which Miss Helen Duey (photoplay editor of the Woman's Home Companion) is to be active secretary, bulletins containing lists of specially recommended films will be sent out to each center. In turn, the members of the League will be expected to cooperate with their local moving picture theater owners. It is the plan to establish "Photoplay League" nights at local theaters, on which the specially recommended photoplays will be shown.

"Beware of Strangers."

Director Colin Campbell recently finished a feature in Los Angeles which William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., believes will not only be timely but of great value to the public at large, for the lessons that it teaches. "Beware of Strangers" is the title.

Not long ago the country was stirred by the exploitations of prominent and wealthy citizens by blackmailers and "sure thing" men and women. These evidently had been people of education and good standing who had gone "wrong." Chicago, New York and Philadelphia were the chief centers of their operations.

Walter Howie, at that time city editor of the Chicago Tribune, chanced to meet Mr. Selig and expressed his belief that a film treating of the evil work of these blackmailers, would be educational as well as valuable in warning the public against the dangers of becoming acquainted with strangers who might have impressed them by their dress, appearance and good manners.

Mr. Selig then called in Gilson Willets, the well known author and photoplaywright, who declared that such a film would be just the thing. He immediately got in touch with Mr. Howie, whose long experience as a newspaper man had familiarized him with the working methods of these blackmailers. After Mr. Willets had absorbed fully the methods of such criminals he set to work and wrote the scenario, of eight-reel length, for "Beware of Strangers."

This feature is based upon actual facts, showing that blackmailing syndicates, ably governed, fleeced victims in this country of over a million dollars recently. Clairvoyants, fake bookmakers and lures were discovered to be perfectly organized, with recognized chiefs and hundreds of "steerers," whose business it was to comb the country for "suckers."

Supported by the judgment of Federal Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, Detective Wm. A. Pinkerton, and others who are in positions to know the harm wrought by these clever and smooth criminals, "Beware of Strangers" will serve to educate the public in saving victims from cleverly conceived schemes and traps.

Mr. Selig has assigned the leading characters to a list of stars well known in the moving picture world. These include Tom Santschi, Fritzi Brunette, Bessie Eyton, Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich, Ed Coxen, Eugenie Besserer, Frank Clark, Harry Lonsdale and other capable people. It is announced that the scenic effects are elaborate and costly, while the lighting effects are described as beautiful.

It can be easily imagined that Mr. Willets has furnished many exciting situations in the photoplay, and when it is promised that a strong love interest permeates the story, everyone will wait its release with great expectancy.

J. E. Storey, manager of George Kleine's branch office in Kansas City, was also a visitor last week, arriving in Chicago Jan. 8 and returning the same evening. Mr. Storey informed me that business has been fair in his territory, and that for the last two months it has shown an increase.

Aaron J. Jones received a wire from Lewis J. Selznick last week, stating that the French director, Leonce Perret, had just arrived from Paris to engage in the production of Selznick pictures. Mr. Perret has been engaged to direct Robert Warwick in a feature adapted from one of E. Phillips Oppenheim's important works.

A most affecting incident, which is closely connected with the war in Europe, took place at the Colonial one night last week during the presentation of "Intolerance." Seated in the audience was a British soldier, who had been completely blinded in battle, and his wife. The soldier's name is Sergeant Major Robert Middlemiss, and his wife described the picture to him as it was run off. The veteran said that by this means, with the aid of the interpretative music, he was able to enjoy the picture almost as fully as if he had actually seen it. The blind soldier and his wife have come all the way from England to appear at the Allied Bazaar, which opened at the Coliseum, this city, Thursday evening, Jan. 11. The bazaar, which will be continued for nine days, is held in aid of the sufferers of the entente allies. The promoters of the bazaar expect to realize $500,000 at least. Each country in the entente allies will have a special day during the bazaar, and each with its associated charities will be represented.

The Rialto Theatre, on State street between Jackson and Van Buren, Chicago's newest playhouse, will be opened Monday, Jan. 15, with continuous vaudeville. The house has been built by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, at a stated cost of $600,000.

J. E. O'Toole, manager of the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation, tells me that the Studebaker, with "A Daughter of the Gods" as the attraction, was sold out every night for the week of Monday, Jan. 8, except Wednesday, when there was a severe snowstorm. Louis J. Jones, manager of the Studebaker, confirms this statement by saying that the big Fox feature has broken all records at this house. The attendance at matinees is also described as being "wonderful."

George Fawcett, who scored such a success as Judge Silas Whipple in "The Crisis," has started work at the Selig studios, this city, under the direction of Al Green.

The many Chicago friends of Bessie Eyton will be interested to learn that she was hostess to a theater party in Los Angeles recently, when "The Crisis" was given its Pacific Coast premiere.

William N. Selig has received notification from St. Louis that "The Crisis" is in its third triumphant week there, with the S.R.O. sign always out.

Chicago will see "The Crisis" whenever a "Loop" theater can be engaged. The great success of the dramatic season has kept every desirable house open thus far.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the ensuing week:

Colonial—"Intolerance" (D. W. Griffith) still doing capacity business.

Studebaker—"A Daughter of the Gods" (Fox), featuring Annette Kellermann, entered its third week. It is breaking all records at this house.

Ziegfeld—William Courtenay and Lucille Lee Stewart in "The Ninety and Nine" (Vitagraph) and the fourth episode of the Vitagraph serial, "The Secret Kingdom."

La Salle—Kitty Gordon in "Vera the Medium" (Selznick) opened Saturday, Jan. 13.

C. B. Price, Western Division Manager for McClure Pictures, has opened offices in the Mallers Building, 5 S. Wabash avenue, immediately adjacent to the new Triangle Distributing Corporation office, and has appointed T. C. Montgomery and J. A. Davidson as Chicago representatives.

Mr. Montgomery is well known by exhibitors in Chicago having been connected with the industry in various capacities for several years past.

Mr. Davidson, while not so well known in the immediate Chicago district, is widely known in other parts of the country, and is thoroughly conversant with the business, having been formerly connected with the Mutual Film Corporation and V-L-S-E.

While the offices have been opened only a short time, Mr. Price reports that never in his experience has such lively interest been manifested by exhibitors as has been shown in the forthcoming new series of seven five-reel productions of McClure Pictures, each of which is complete in itself.

BOONE LEAVES AMALGAMATED.

J. Allen Boone has resigned as vice president and secretary of the Amalgamated Photo Play Service and has taken offices on the seventh floor of Aeolian Hall, 38 West 42nd street, where he will act as business representative for a number of well known screen directors, players and writers and cooperate with Charles Emerson Cook in general publicity. Miss Helen Christene Haerle, who has been connected with the scenario departments of the Equitable, Fox and Rolfe-Metro companies in an editorial capacity, and who is widely known as an authority on scenario values, will be associated with Mr. Boone in the handling of photoplay material.

Mr. Boone is well known in the film, newspaper and magazine worlds. Previous to his affiliation with the Amalgamated Photo Play Service he was publicity director for Lubin. His work as a newspaper and magazine man has taken him to all parts of the world.

"Eyes of the World" Premiere a Success

W. H. Clune Puts on at Auditorium His Ten-Reel Adaptation of Harold Bell Wright Novel.

ON the afternoon of New Year's Day, W. H. Clune, local theater magnate and producer of "Ramona," presented to the Los Angeles public at his Auditorium Theater his second photoplay, "The Eyes of the World," a superb picturization in ten reels of Harold Bell Wright's well-known story. Every seat in the vast house had been taken and many prominent persons were present as guests of the producer.

"The Eyes of the World" is staged with the usual care that Lloyd Brown, general manager of the Clune company, puts on his productions. The opening stage embellishments are a marvel of scenic beauty and mechanical ingenuity. The curtain goes up on a heroic-size woman's face, filling the proscenium. Slowly the eyelids raise and a great pair of eyes look out over the audience with wonderful lifelikeness. Then during the clever manipulation of the lights the two parts which make up the face separate and resolve themselves into the face of a great owl. With a series of gauze curtains and the lights this dissolves into two hemispheres and in turn this view disappears to reveal in its place a magnificent California mountain scene. This is a cyclorama painted by Jack Holden, who did the "Ramona" scenery, containing over 11,000 square feet of canvas. It is said to be the largest cyclorama drop ever put up in a theater west of New York.

Harold Bell Wright personally took an active part in the interpretation of his story and characters for the screen. It is the belief of many here that Mr. Brown got far bigger results with his camera than Mr. Wright did with his pen.

In the cast of "The Eyes of the World" are three players who appeared in "Ramona." Monroe Salisbury, who in the first picture played Alessandro, has the role of Conrad La Grange and does remarkable work. Lurline Lyons, who will be remembered as Senora Ortegna, is Myra Willard. Arthur Tavares, the Senor Ortegna of "Ramona," is John Willard, the convict. Jack McDonald, who made a national reputation as Slapjack in "The Spoilers," scores heavily as the old roue Taine.

The music for "The Eyes of the World" was chosen by Mr. Brown and is cued to the nicety of a second with every changing mood of the play. It is played by an orchestra of 30 pieces, under the direction of Carli D. Elinor, the head of the Clune musical forces.

Following are opinions of "The Eyes of the World" expressed by Los Angeles critics:

Times—Another master picture has been added to the list of the few really great screen dramas. In some respects "The Eyes of the World," which made its debut at Clune's Auditorium yesterday, stands absolutely alone. Nothing approaching its photographic effects have been thus far produced in pictures. The play also stands pre-eminent in the matter of vivid character types. There is no other screen play now before the public in which the characterizations are so telling or so interesting.

Examiner—"The Eyes of the World" were opened yesterday at Clune's Auditorium. Opened to startlingly magnificent photography; opened to what has generally been termed the best form of photodrama—the narrative which commands. For it is all that long demanded product, a powerful drama with nothing that excites the baser instinct. No picture has been shown approaching in tensity various episodes, particularly the final fight on a mountain top; nothing in the way of a picture has been so totally devoid of faking effects, and no picture was ever more or probably equally healthy and sane in all its attributes.

Tribune—That Harold Bell Wright's story makes a better photoplay than it does a novel was conclusively proved at Clune's Auditorium yesterday afternoon. Without striving to make a spectacle, the producers have succeeded in making one of the most picturesque productions of the season.

Herald—Yesterday at his Auditorium Theater Mr. Clune revealed to an avid public his second cinemagraphic production, "The Eyes of the World," which not only equaled the former in the matter of scenic beauty and romantic theme, but far surpassed it in story, thrills, photography and human appeal. As an entertainment, "The Eyes of the World" is keenly enjoyable. It has the happy faculty of annexing your complete attention in the beginning and keeping your mind—and eyes—riveted on it until the last foot of the last reel has unwound itself—a feat seldom performed nowadays in film circles. The picture is not spectacular; on the contrary, it aims to please solely on merit of plot, and does.

Evening Express—"The Eyes of the World scored a great big hit at Clune's Auditorium yesterday afternoon. It has all the essentials of popular success. The audience that attended the premiere yesterday afternoon was the largest I have ever seen crowded into the auditorium. They liked the play immensely and showed it. The splendid transformation setting that precedes the picture got a tremendously big hand, and deserved it. Another very big factor in the success of this photoplay is the musical score that has been adapted for it by Lloyd Brown. The story is handled in splendid style. Climax piles upon climax and bursts in the tremendously dramatic fight on the narrow ledge of rock thousands of feet up the cliff. This scene is one of the most effective bits that ever has found its way into a picture, and it held the whole audience spellbound yesterday afternoon. There was absolutely stillness in the theater while it lasted and a sigh of relief and a burst of applause as it finished.

A synopsis of "The Eyes of the Word" will be found on another page.

American Increases Production

Radical Reorganization of All Departments at Santa Barbara Studios—Five Special Companies to Produce Multiple Features.

FROM the Flying A Studios in Santa Barbara we learn of radical reorganizations in the policy and management of the plant—which will mean still better photoplays from the American for the coming year.

Within a short time, we are informed, five special companies, each headed by a star of national reputation, will be producing super-features of five reels or more.

These enlargements of American activities are the direct result of the recent visit of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the company to the Santa Barbara Studios. Mr. Hutchinson, during his brief stay on the coast, has effected a radical reorganization in every department of his plant.

Mary Miles Minter.

President Hutchinson is in New York, we understand, completing negotiations for players and directors of highest caliber. Announcement of the individuals who are to contribute to the standard set is expected very soon.

In the front rank of featured players will continue to be Mary Miles Minter. The youthful American star, under the directorship of James Kirkwood, is to be the central figure in pictures whose stories will be of unusual type. It is realized that her chief appeal is in her distinct personality, and to emphasize this, themes and scripts which depart from screen convention have been and will be chosen.

William Russell, whose series of pictures have won popularity in their depiction of Russell's strength of character delineations, is another American star whose photoplays will be leading features. Extensive plans have been laid for increasing Russell's personal following among picture patrons. Francelia Billington, new to American productions, has already begun her work as Russell's leading woman, and has created a favorable impression at the studio as Virginia Leighton in "A Son of Battle," a costume play of the Reconstruction period.

William Russell and Young Stars of Mutual-American Studio.

Directing Russell and Miss Billington will be Edward Sloman, who produced, among other features, the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" for the American.

J. R. Crone is now general manager of the plant, succeeding the former studio manager, P. G. Lynch. Mr. Crone has been associated with Mr. Hutchinson and the Mutual enterprises for several years, and brings to the studio valuable experience in every phase of the industry.

Mr. Crone has made several changes in the personnel of his assistants. John Coakley has been made head of the technical department, while C. P. Morrison is the new general superintendent of the plant and superintendent of construction.

In the office staff Mrs. A. K. Whelan is auditor and in charge of the clerical department, while L. Ransome heads the purchasing department.

Clifford Howard, who continues as scenario editor, has rearranged his department in such a way that the fullest value will be obtained through his efforts. Emphasis was placed by President Hutchinson on the necessity of strengthening the stories used as foundations of productions.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH THE SIERRA.

This week a representative of The Moving Picture World paid a visit to the studios of the Sierra Photoplays, Inc., a film manufacturing enterprise recently organized by Los Angeles capital to produce one-reel comedies and five-reel feature dramas. Dr. C. W. Bachman, a local theatrical man, is the president of the company and Roy Clements, the former Essanay director, is the managing director.

Group at Sierra Studio.

Clements is one of the oldtimers in the business and will be remembered as producer of the Essanay "Snakeville" comedies. The new comedy company he is directing will release under the "Three Star" trademark, featuring Ruth Hennesey, formerly of the Essanay Chicago forces; "Big" Ed Sedgewick, lately featured comedian of Universal, and George Barnes, a recent recruit from the vaudeville stage.

During our visit the above picture was made for our special benefit. From left to right is Sam Comly, Ed Sedgwick, George Barnes, Roy Clements, Ruth Hennesey (featuring The Moving Picture World—Thanks, Ruth!) President C. W. Bachman and several members of the supporting cast of the comedy company in the background.

CAREY COMPANY'S "REGULAR" DINNER.

Harry Carey and his cowboys, ably abetted by Director Fred A. Kelsey, gave a "chuck-wagon" dinner for their friends Monday this week at the Universal Ranch.

The invitations were burnt on a piece of cowhide.

The dinner, which was declared to be a typical "round-up feed," was cooked in a "Dutch oven"—with coals under and over the pots, and was arranged by Fred A. Kelsey, Harry Gant, chief cameraman of the company, and S. W. Lawson, assistant to Kelsey. Gant presided at the Dutch oven and was assisted in the preparation of the steaks and other viands by Steve Clemente, famous roper, and Al "Daredevil" Thompson, who rides horses over cliffs and performs other hair-raising stunts.

The dinner was followed by an entertainment for the many guests. There were all kinds of riding stunts, rope throwing, races, etc. Some marvelous riding was done by Bud Osborne, Johnnie Tyke and other Carey boys.

Among the guests of honor was Al Jennings, the reformed ex-bandit, who entertained the crowd with tales of many of his experiences as an outlaw. Tom Jay, one of the wealthiest stockmen of Wyoming, was also present.

Everybody had a good time. Thanks, Brother Carey, for sending us an invitation.

LOS ANGELES FILM BREVITIES.

Cecil B. De Mille, the Lasky director-general, Jeanie MacPherson, author of "Joan the Woman," Alvin Wickoff, director of photography, and Howard Ewing, director of electric lighting, have returned from the premiere presentation of "Joan the Woman" in New York City. Mr. De Mille will personally supervise the opening of the production in Los Angeles and San Francisco, to take place next week.

The burning of an entire log cabin colony at night is one of the features of "The Girl of the Timberclaims," featuring Constance Talmadge. These night scenes were staged in the Santa Cruz mountains at an altitude of 6,000 feet. A full corps of carpenters and property men made the trip to the Santa Cruz mountains to build the cabins. Almost two weeks were required to build the cabin city, but it required only a few hours to destroy it. A. D. Sears plays opposite to Miss Talmadge. Clyde Hopkins, Beau Byrd, Wilbur Highby, Bennie Schuman, Joseph Singleton, F. A. Turner, Charles Lee and Mrs. Talmadge play important parts in the production. The scenario was written by Mary H. O'Connor.

Balboa signalized the advent of the new year by starting work this week on a new stage. As soon as it is finished a glass-inclosed studio is to be added to the Long Beach plant. The Balboa company has contracted for the producing of several new features and has found it necessary to expand its quarters. Balboa will put on two new companies soon.

Kathleen Clifford, Balboa's new star, arrived Saturday and started to work this week under the direction of Frank Crane. She will make her initial appearance in "The Twisted Thread," a fifteen episode serial of romance and adventure which Pathe will release.

Clifford Gray, better known as "Tip" Gray, is back at the Balboa studio. He played leads for the Horkheimer Bros. several years ago and then went East, where he has appeared in some large feature productions.

Myrtle Bauer, a beautiful Philadelphia girl of twenty-three summers, is a new member of the Balboa beauty squad. This young woman has been specially engaged for "The Twisted Thread," a new serial by H. M. Horkheimer, which Balboa will begin about January 1st to produce for Pathe. Miss Bauer arrives from the musical comedy stage.

Jack Cunningham, a former newspaper man, who recently joined the staff of writers at Universal City, has been assigned to write comedies exclusively for the Joker Comedy Company, of which William Beaudine is director. Cunningham has written many short stories in a humorous vein and some of these may be revived for the films.

Owing to the rain, the work on the erection of the Lasky administration building, carpenter shops, etc., has been delayed. The foundation is now being laid for a large addition to the wardrobe department. As soon as this is complete Alpharetta Hoffman, director of costumes and designer, will be able to manufacture costumes for any production the Lasky Company may make. A large force of seamstresses will be employed and only the raw material will be purchased in the future.

Edward J. Le Saint, Lasky Director, has been transferred to the Morosco studio to direct a forthcoming production, and Morosco Director E. Mason Hopper has been transferred to the Lasky studio to direct Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman in a forthcoming co-starring vehicle.

Louise Huff has arrived at the Morosco studio and will shortly start work on a production as co-star with House Peters, under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint.

George Beban has finished the filming of his forthcoming production in which he is seen as an old Italian artist. One of the scenes in this production was a reproduction of an entire lower floor of an old fashioned New York boarding house, on the stage at the Morosco studio.

Marie Doro has finished her production under the direction of Frank Reicher and will in all probability be granted a month's vacation.

An entire Overland Express was hired by Director Otis Turner for a scene in the George Walsh picture he is making for the Fox Company. A train hold-up was staged near Inglewood, and the company was at work until five o'clock the following morning. The express carried about three hundred passengers and one hundred pieces of baggage. A band of thirty "desperados" made the spectacular attack on the train.

One of the Universal companies treked to the desert at Playa Del Rey, California, this week to make a number of scenes on the hot sands for a current feature production, entitled "Beyond the Pale." There were several hundred people in the company, a large number of whom were Hindus, 100 horses and a dozen camels from the Universal zoo. One of the most effective scenes taken on the desert was an attack on a caravan by the Hindus and a brilliant rescue by English troops.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," the spectacular Universal production, we are informed, played to remarkable business at the Cabrillo theater in San Diego last week. At each performance the theater was crowded to the doors and there was a long line outside. Stuart Paton, who directed the picture, both in the West and the East, and at Universal City, motored from Los Angeles with his cameraman, Eugene Gaudio, to witness the opening performance, and both men were called upon for curtain speeches during the intermission, when it was discovered that they were in the audience.

Mr. Paton described many of his exciting experiences in the making of the film story based upon Jules Verne's novel. He also told some droll Scotch stories, which caused much laughter. Gaudio thrilled the audience with his story of how many times he expected the glass tube in which he was taking the undersea picture would be destroyed by huge sharks and other denizens of the deep.

Later in the week Allen J. Holubar, who played Captain Nemo in the production, addressed the audience.

A representative of The Moving Picture World recently spent a very interesting afternoon at the Hollywood Studio of the Vogue Film Company, of which Allen E. Stone has recently been appointed studio manager by President S. S. Hutchinson.

Vogue Company Making a Comedy.

Several hilarious scenes were produced at the studio that afternoon by Director Robin Williamson and J. Davis.

The above cut shows Director Williamson's company, consisting of Ben Turpin, Gypsy Abbott, Arthur Moon and Ed. Lowne, enacting a burlesque situation, soon to be seen in a forthcoming release of the Vogue Company.

J. G. Hawks, the Ince scenario writer, returned to Culver City this week from San Francisco, where he spent the holidays. The Bay City is the gifted writer's native heath, and he was therefore kept busy renewing old friendships. He is now again at work on a new play, which will shortly be placed in course of production.

Director Reginald Barker is working at Inceville, this week, filming scenes of trench warfare for the new play by Monte M. Katterjohn, in which Louise Glaum is being starred. Appearing in support of Miss Glaum are Charles Gunn, Roy Laidlaw, Milton Rose, J. P. Lockney, Will H. Bray, Thomas S. Guise and Lydia Knott.

The foggy weather this week is proving a veritable "Jonah" to the big flood scenes now being filmed by Director Todd Browning for the Fine Arts' production of "Jim Bludso." The big scenes were to be staged near San Pedro. After being completely destroyed by a heavy wind storm the sets were rebuilt. But the sun refuses to come out and consequently Director Browning has thus far been unable to "shoot" his pictures. The flood scene, we are informed, is to be one of the most realistic of its kind ever staged, showing the washing out of a big levee, with a raging torrent washing away and completely destroying an entire city. Wilfred Lucas is being starred in "Jim Bludso," with Olga Grey playing the leading feminine role. The supporting cast includes George Stone, Charles Lee, Winnifred Westover, Sam de Grasse, James O'Shea, and Monte Blue. The scenes of "Jim Bludso" are laid in the romantic atmosphere of the Mississippi river during the Civil War. Spectacular features include a thrilling race between two big river boats, a hand-to-hand fight aboard one of the boats, just before it catches fire, burns to the water's edge, explodes and sinks, and an entire city wiped out by a flood.

Seena Owen, who has been absent from Fine Arts pictures for quite a while, will soon be seen again. Miss Owen will appear in a feature drama now being prepared by Roy Somerville, of the Fine Arts scenario staff. Seena Owen is by many conceded to be the most beautiful of the Griffith stars, and scored a great success as Princess Atterea, in "Intolerance."

Edyth Hoskins, pretty, petite and pert, is playing ingenue leads opposite Hank Mann in the Foxfilm Comedies which he is now directing. This is Miss Hoskins' first appearance for William Fox. Though she was born in Philadelphia, this young lady is far from slow, as her rapid rise in the motion pictures proves. She entered the picture game a few years ago with the Lubin Company's Philadelphia studios after she had gained local recognition as an actress in musical comedy and vaudeville.

Other members of the Hank Mann Company are Lee Morris, Charles Mack, Sydney De Grey and George Fields.

General Representative A. Carlos, of the William Fox Western Studios, went to San Francisco last week to be present at the opening of "A Daughter of the Gods."

At Universal City, Director Lynn Reynolds has almost completed a five-reel Alaskan drama entitled "The Code of the Klondike." Charming Myrtle Gonzales and George Hernandez enact the principal roles.

Director Rex Ingram is preparing to film "The Flower of Doom," a five-reel Chinese drama, written by Eugenie Magnus Ingleton, the scenario editress at the Big U plant.

"Pawned" is the title of a five-reel melodrama, the production of which is to begin this week. Ella Hall has been cast to play the feature role.

Director Allen J. Holubar is nearing the completion of "The Reward of His Government," a five-reeler in which Holubar also plays the principal role.

"Marcel's Birthday Present," a five-reel production, was practically completed at Universal City this week, under the direction of Rupert Julian, who also plays the feature role, with Louise Lovely opposite.

With Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran as his featured players, Director Louis Chaudet is filming a one-reel comedy, "How It Happened." Edith Roberts supports the stars.

The producers who build and burn cities and wreck trains and steamships for their features have nothing in realism on Al Christie in his one-reel comedies. For one of his stories he needed auto racing scenes and the overturning of a car. He arranged to take this part of the picture at the Ascot track on Christmas Day, using the Omar racer, No. 13. He expected to turn the car over gently and dispose Harry Ham among the "wreckage" to take these important scenes. But the wind that blew ill to Wilbur D'Alene, the driver of No. 13, when his car went through the inner barrier and turned over in the mud, blew good fortune to Mr. Christie in the shape of a number of scenes showing the wrecked car and the rescue of the driver, the curious crowd and all the accompanying incidents just as required by the story, and better than they could possibly have been staged. The best of it is that the driver and mechanician escaped with only the slightest injuries.

Guessing the Motion Picture Business

By Richard A. Rowland

A Matter of Fact Statement from Richard A. Rowland, President of the Metro Pictures Corporation—Puts His "Guess" on Four-Reel Subjects

GREAT as it is, magnificent as are its investments, the motion picture industry or art today is in the middle of the River of Doubt and there's a heavy fog hanging over the river.

We have no prophets who speak by the book. Those who say most seem, in the light of recent motion picture history, to be the bad guessers. We are treated continually to solutions of motion picture problems, but they seem to emanate from those whose experiences have failed to net their stockholders a return on the investment or add to them more prestige and standing as successful picture men.

The only silence in the motion picture business is on the screen. The rest of it is rich in conversation, promises and prophecies, but they don't seem to solve anything or settle anything. Seeking the light I read a multitude of interviews and at the end of each I am almost impatient with the dreams—shall I say publicity dreams?—of which they are made up.

Please understand me. I have no desire to indulge in personalities nor do I wish to criticise those who seek publicity for their pictures or their organizations. But I believe the eternal grind of empty conversation results in nothing of value to the industry. It helps neither exhibitor, distributor nor manufacturer.

In motion pictures interviews spring eternal from the human breast. They would be of value if they would shed light on the problem we all of us have to meet.

Cutting aside the brushwood of fancy, let's see if we can get down to some of the facts.

We can all agree on one proposition. This is, that motion pictures will have to be made to supply the public demand. Just what form they will take, just how long they will have to be, just how many the market is to require are all matters of guesswork. No man in the industry, and I make no exceptions, can speak with knowledge or authority on these things. The best we all can do is to guess. It may be my guess and the guess of my associates that the feature program supplemented with short reel novelties will continue to solve the exhibitors' problem. But I insist that we are guessing as well as we can guess and nothing more.

One other thing seems certain. No manufacturer can survive if he has to put his middle grade pictures on the shelf. He must get some return from some source for every picture. The costs of the business are such that this is a necessity. If most of his pictures are satisfactory and a fair percentage of them very good, this is all that can be required of him under present and, I believe, under futture conditions. The manufacturer who keeps on turning out the better pictures, the pictures of box office appeal, which at the same time are clean pictures, is the manufacturer who is to survive in this struggle of the survival of the fittest.

My idea and the idea of my associates is that we shall keep ourselves prepared for anything the market, otherwise the public, may demand. All of our problems will be settled by the public. What the public wants it is bound to have and the manufacturer or exhibitor who seeks to force the public to take what it does not want is merely a poor business man. Our guess based on our experience is that the present demand is for great big appealing stories told simply and plainly with an eye for good photography as well as good acting and a star to top the bill. They may be three, they may be four or five or more reels long, but they must be clean, strong pictures or they must be clean, pleasant pictures with plenty of sunshine in the plot.

There is a field also for special pictures of greater length if they are really special pictures and not padded footage.

As far as we are concerned, we shall make it our business to keep our organization so elastic that we shall be in a position to respond quickly to popular demand. Proceeding on the idea that there must be pictures and that the public is the judge, the rest of the problem is a matter of detail and performance. But I want to repeat that the guessing contest is still on; that the man who guesses wrong is going to lose and the man who guesses right is going to win.

I believe that a plain, frank recognition of the real facts will not harm the industry nor any one in it. If we continue to feed on the foolish prophecies we shall all be the worse for it.

To conclude, I may be permitted to hazard a guess which comes from a recent visit I made to a number of theatres during the holidays. My guess is, that the four reel picture is to form the backbone of the standardization of the industry. Think it over.

National Drama Corporation Seizes Prints of "Fall of a Nation" in Suit Against Mellinger Bros. and R. R. Roberts.

SUIT was instituted Tuesday in the District Court of the United States at Baltimore by the National Drama Corporation of New York against Mellinger Bros., managers of the Maryland Theater, Cumberland, Maryland, and one R. R. Roberts. The suit grows out of a controversy between the National Drama Corporation and R. R. Roberts in connection with photoplay entitled "The Fall of a Nation." The complainants alleged in their bill that Roberts had infringed their copyright in permitting the picture to be reproduced outside of the territory leased by the National Drama Corporation to Roberts.

Late Tuesday night Judge Rose after due inspection of the certificate of copyright of "The Fall of a Nation" issued an order directed to Fuller Barnard, Deputy Marshal of the United States for the State of Maryland, directing him to seize, attach and hold in his possession any film or films located at the Maryland Theater, Cumberland, connected in any way with the photoplay, "The Fall of a Nation."

W. C. Burns, treasurer of the National Drama Corporation, and his counsel, Louis A. Tuvin, of the firm of Knapp, Ulman and Tucker, Baltimore, arrived in town Wednesday morning. They were met by Fuller Barnard, Deputy United States Marshal, and the latter gentlemen armed with a writ of seizure took charge of the film "The Fall of a Nation" just as it was about to be shown at the matinee performance at the Maryland Theater, thereby causing considerable disappointment to the large crowd waiting to witness the afternoon performance.

The National Drama Corporation was compelled to institute this proceeding inasmuch as it had certain contracts outstanding for the production of "The Fall of a Nation" in Maryland. Any production in Cumberland at this time according to its bill of complaint was without its sanction and consent and in violation of previously assigned territorial rights.

The defendant Roberts had heretofore produced "The Fall of a Nation" at Lynchburg and Roanoke, Virginia, and several other cities outside of his territory. Suits will be instituted by the National Drama Corporation against all theatres which have reproduced "The Fall of a Nation" in violation of the copyright act.

Willis Wood Damaged by Fire

The Blaze, Which Was Not Serious, Occurred Just on Eve of House's Turnover to Pictures.

THE Willis Wood Theater, of Kansas City, one of the most beautiful theaters in the Middle West—or in the United States for that matter—was damaged by fire recently on the very eve of its return to pictures. Readers of the World perhaps will remember the description of this house in these pages, after many thousand dollars had been spent on it to make it worthy the big plans for transforming it into the moving picture house de luxe of the Middle West. That was two years ago. The house ran pictures for a year, and then went to other things, lately to a stock company. Very recently the announcement was made that it was coming back to pictures, and Richards & Flynn, the lessees, were in New York at the time of the fire, preparing for this change.

The building is not much damaged; it is protected by insurance of $105,000. The improvements and fixtures were covered by some $30,000 of insurance, but this does not meet the value of the decorations, and especially of the organ, which alone is said to have cost $10,000.

The lessees have a lease for eight years, it is said, and they probably will rebuild and proceed with their moving picture plans.

Mary Fuller to Support Lou-Tellegen

Engaged by Lasky to Appear in "The Long Trail," Which Will Be Directed by Howell Hansel.

MARY FULLER, one of the best known stars on the motion picture screen, has been engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to appear in support of Lou-Telegen in "The Long Trail," the director of which will be Howell Hansel, newly engaged by Lasky to direct productions for the Paramount Program.

The name of Mary Fuller is identified with the old Biograph when she appeared in the production of that concern at the time that Mary Pickford, Owen Moore and many of the old stars of the present day were all beginning their careers. Like so many of the youthful players of that time, Miss Fuller had had only a brief stage experience, but by persistent effort and the cultivation of her natural ability, she rapidly developed into a great favorite.

Mary Fuller.

Joining the Edison Company, Miss Fuller quickly became its principal star and has the distinction of appearing in the first big motion picture serial success ever screened—the famous "What Happened to Mary" pictures. These were followed by "Who Will Marry Mary?" another successful serial, some of the episodes of which were staged in London.

Miss Fuller was likewise the star of the first multiple reel productions issued by Edison, scoring a great personal triumph by her excellent portrayal of many difficult roles. One of Miss Fuller's never-to-be-forgotten feats was her escape from the window of the seventh story of a New York apartment house by means of a rope, down which she slid in great peril. It was considered to be one of the greatest "stunts" ever attempted by a girl at that time, and Miss Fuller's blistered and aching hands were a source of great pride to their owner.

When Universal began to produce five-reel features, Miss Fuller was one of its first and her personal success in these pictures is well known. But the constant strain of ceaseless work for several years without any interruption for vacations began to tell upon Miss Fuller, who was ordered to stop work at once by her physician. Accordingly, Miss Fuller resigned and departed for the mountains after a short visit to her home in Washington.

Now, after several months spent in complete seclusion, Miss Fuller has returned to the camera "feeling ten years younger," as she expressed it herself.

Howell Hansel, who has been engaged to direct "The Long Trail," has a long record of stage and screen achievement behind him. He is a rare combination of artist and executive, as he has already proven by his consistently excellent work. Mr. Hansel's latest screen achievement is the direction of "The Deemster," which introduced Derwent Hall Caine, son of the distinguished British author, to the motion picture public.

NEW ADVISORY COMMITTEE FORMED.

The second of the advisory committees which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is planning for all the film centers of the country was organized in Minneapolis, Minn., on January 8th. Thomas Furniss has been active in the plans for this advisory committee ever since the Chicago committee was organized in November. The new Minneapolis committee is headed by Henry Friedman, manager of the Pathe Exchange. W. K. Howard, manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, is secretary and treasurer, and L. N. Robinson of the Fox Exchange is vice chairman.

The work on the California committee is to be taken up by P. A. Powers, who is going west this month chiefly for this purpose, and Donald J. Bell of Chicago, who is also in California this month.

Jennie Lee, Character Actress

THE career of Jennie Lee, Triangle-Fine Arts character actress, who plays the part of a grandmother in "Nina, the Flower Girl," the new five-reel drama in which Bessie Love is starred, has been so remarkable that a recitation of events in her life sounds like the weird happenings of a fairy tale.

Mrs. Lee, who in private life is the wife of "Billy" Cortwright, the veteran minstrel, is sixty-seven years old, and has been in the theatrical profession sixty years of that time. Here is part of the story from her own lips:

My mother died when I was seven years old, and my aunt, who had a big family of her own to care for, bound me out to the owner of Lee & Ryland's circus, one of the old-time, one-ring shows that were the pioneers of the business. I was apprenticed as a bareback rider, but it was hardly necessary to apprentice me, as I took to a horse's back like a duck to water. In a few weeks I was taking part in all of the riding acts. By a strange coincidence, my present husband, Mr. Cortwright, used to look after me when I was a little girl in the show. If you ask the old rascal his age now he will tell you fifty-six, but that doesn't jibe very well with the fact that he was a youth in his teens sixty years ago.

"I was with Lee & Ryland five years and then joined the Jack Wilson circus when I was twelve. There I learned to be a trapeze performer and worked with Dan du Crow, brother of Tote du Crow, the famous pantomime clown. I tired of the sawdust and ran away from the circus when I was fourteen and sought adventure in other lines of the show business until the old Montgomery Queen circus started out in San Francisco thirty years ago. Just for fun I joined them for a day and drove a chariot in the parade. It was a call of the spangles I couldn't resist. Afterward I felt more reconciled to the more prosaic life of the theater."

Until a few months ago, Mrs. Lee was as spry as a girl, but she was severely injured in an automobile accident and has not yet fully recovered. Mrs. Lee was known to the sawdust arena as Jennie Lee, and has kept the name through all the years of her professional life. She is of Spanish parentage, but has become a loyal American through long association.

Marie Cahill Mutual's Latest

PRESIDENT John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation announces the closing of a contract with Miss Marie Cahill, under the terms of which that brilliant young actress will appear in a series of two reel comedies to be released every two weeks.

The date of the first release has not yet been set, but studio operations are already under way in New York, where the Mardan Photoplay under contract with the Mutual Film Corporation is preparing for immediate work in connection with Miss Cahill's engagement.

Marie Cahill.

Miss Cahill is the latest among many distinguished stars, including Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neil and Gail Kane, with whom contracts have been recently announced by Mr. Freulier, and the engagement of the clever comedienne is renewed evidence of the Mutual's determination to live up to Mr. Freuler's announced policy "only big stars for the Mutual."

Marie Cahill is known from one end of the country to the other as one of the cleverest comediennes on the American stage. Before signing a contract with the Mutual, Miss Cahill had appeared but once on the screen, when her most successful comedy, "Judy Forgot," was screened.

Miss Cahill is to be surrounded by a thoroughly capable company of actors and actresses, Mr. Freuler having declared an intention to give personal attention to the selection of her support.

A View of Trade Conditions By H. M. Horkheimer

President and General Manager of Balboa Says the Industry Is Suffering from Lack of Co-operation

THERE is no secret, among those in touch with it, that confusion prevails in the motion picture industry. But why? Quiz a dozen persons active in a dozen different ends of the business and you will get a dozen different reasons. In each one there will probably be some truth; yet, it is doubtful if the entire lot lumped will sum up the situation intelligently.

Personally, I do not believe that any one person has a big enough grasp of the film game—I call it a "game" advisedly for, up to date, the best any of us has done is to play at picture making—to enable him to analyze the situation adequately.

H. M. Horkheimer.

I say this because cinematography is too young to have developed any very definite tendencies, as yet. Down to the present, producers have been doing little more than experiment—feeling their way, as it were.

We seem to be just beginning to learn how to lisp in this new mode of expression. Although picture-talk isn't new, cinematography is. When a baby learns to talk, it begins by repeating what others say. In a similar manner, film-play makers have done little more than reproduce before the camera what has been done time and again in other ways—on the stage, the printed page, etc.

Of course, I realize that a few men have endeavored to strike out along new lines; but so far, their efforts have resulted in little more than trail-breaking. True, they seem to be getting along; but it is too soon to determine if we are headed in the right direction cinematographically—that is making the best use of our tools and materials.

In my discussion of motion picture expression, I refer to the photoplay. This form of story-telling is scarcely twenty-five years old. Can you imagine the state of development of poesy a quarter century after the first attempt to express thought in rhythmic language? Or consider the drama! As we know it, about four thousand years have been devoted to its perfection.

But to get down to brass tacks, as to what ails the motion picture; Thomas A. Edison diagnosed the trouble recently as principally a lack of team-work among picture makers. I am inclined to believe that he came pretty near the truth. Things seem to be at "sixes and sevens," with no well defined line along which the producers as an aggregate body are working.

While not as matter-of-fact as the textile industry or the making of shoes, we must admit that cinematography is basicly a manufacuring process. The manufacturers concerned in other lines usually get together and work together. Motion picture producers have not yet reached that stage of co-operation. They have failed to see the mutuality of their interests, strange to say.

Because there have been a few fortunes made out of producing for the screen, notably in the early days, many have been tempted to jump in and attempt to duplicate the enriching process. But I venture to say that for every dollar that has been taken out, not less than ten others have gone in and been lost.

Formerly, the theatrical business used to be considered as a gamble. But another generation of producers found it amenable to the rules of business and a consistent money-maker. And just so, a lot of people have gone into pictures as they would sit down to a card game—to take a chance. As a result, there has been no definite purpose guiding many of the productions. They have just been ground out. Wherefore more or less confusion has been the natural outcome.

While this business has its artistic aspect, it is not a fine art in the same sense as painting, sculpture or literature. Unfortunately, the fine arts have been available only to the few. But happily, it has been possible for the multitude to enjoy the motion pictures. In fact, they have become a necessity to the mass. In consequence thereof, they must be turned out in quantity—almost by the wholesale, as it were.

All business is governed by the law of supply and demand; but photoplay producers seem never to have realized this fact. They have gone ahead and made pictures at their own sweet will. Wherefore, not so very long ago, there were offered in New York City—the selling center of the industry—each week three times as many feature productions as the market could absorb.

Naturally, a cutting and slashing of prices followed. Those concerns that couldn't weather the storm went under. Others piled up productions on the shelf. Unsold pictures don't remain an asset very long because they go out of date speedily. Producers have often met and talked over the situation; but no solution has suggested itself which they have seen fit to accept.

Because of the youth of the business, those in it seem unable to find a common ground. It took the shoe manufacturers and the sugar people a long time to get together. But they found out in the end that they must—or go under.

This sums up the most vital problem confronting the motion picture industry today, as I see it. Team-work, co-operation, that is what we need most. The other ailments are all offshoots of this. So far as costly productions, overpaid stars and poor stories are concerned, they can all be handled, if the producers will only get together and regulate the supply to conform more nearly to the demand. I do not mean that a monopoly should be organized. I simply advocate a reasonable working understanding which will let everyone in the industry live and prosper, to the end that the screen's best interests be conserved.

In the last analysis, there is nothing wrong with the motion picture. It is here to stay as a form of amusement and is bound to progress. It seems to me that we have just been through a blossom period in film production. The downness that appears to be on may be only a season of rest. When it is over, another period of advance will come and so the industry is bound to keep on going on.

I incline to the belief that whatever trouble seems to prevail is with the people engaged in the picture business. They must get straightened out and gain a proper perspective. Our vision must be adjusted and our short-sightedness overcome.

Rialto Books Metro's "White Raven"

Production Starring Ethel Barrymore Is Put On at the Big Forty-second Street Showhouse.

Ethel Barrymore's magnificent Metro-Rolfe production, "The White Raven," will be the feature attraction at the Rialto theater, New York, the home of important first-run features, for the week beginning January 14. Hamish McLauren, representative of Director S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto, saw the picture and immediately booked it for his theater. He was enthusiastic in praise of the star's powerful acting in the strong emotional and dramatic scenes of the production. "'The White Raven' is a winner," said Mr. McLauren; "we want it."

ADLER IS EDUCATIONAL'S LOCAL MANAGER.

Vice President and General Manager E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has appointed Bert Adler as New York manager of that concern. Mr. Adler is a pioneer in the giving of children's shows and has been interested in straight educational film work for a number of months.

OHIO APPROVES MOSS SUBJECT.

Announcement is made from the B. S. Moss office that the Ohio Board of Censorship affixed its seal of approval to that concern's latest release, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know." It is a five part picture, with an unusually brilliant cast of players headed by Marie Empress, an actress with a motion picture reputation both here and abroad.

Griffith Plans to Clean the Screen

Heads Committee of National Association for That Purpose and Proposes a Moving Picture Art League.

DAVID W. GRIFFITH, heading a committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was on Friday, January 11, placed in control of the entire nation-wide campaign against the censorship of motion pictures. This committee was authorized by the resolution adopted by the executive committee of the National Association. It was decided that in view of the necessity for prompt and concerted action, a small committee was desirable, as it would have behind it the united support of the entire industry and could act quickly and definitely.

This winter is the first time that the entire motion picture industry has presented a solid front on the censorship question, a position which was taken five months ago when the National Association, after thorough deliberation, decided that it would oppose all forms of legalized censorship. Mr. Griffith was active at that time and the campaign of this winter has been turned over to him because of his willingness to see the issue through and arrange for the presentation of the industry's side to Congress and to the legislatures which are considering censorship legislation. Mr. Griffith said:

"One of the first things that I think we shall do is to form what we may call a "Motion Picture Art League," which shall determine some limit and reach some idea of how far we shall go. The stage has a limit. The stage has never shown a naked woman. And that is about the only thing you hear from people of culture and breadth, that we show in motion pictures what they don't show even on the stage—nakedness. My idea of this Motion Picture Art League is to form a body to which all questions of ethics shall be submitted and by whose decisions the industry will abide, with the support of the industry as represented completely in the National Association."

"Our battle today is the same battle that John Milton fought when he presented 'Paradise Lost.' I believe that the written and printed word has made the human race what it is today; it is that which divides us from the brutes that snarl at our heels. And of all words expressed in pictures or in writing, I believe that the motion picture word is a more wonderful, a more beautiful and a better word than any. It is threatened today by enemies of every sort, not least of them the fanatics and the office-seekers."

"I think all other evils are small compared with the threatened blight of censorship, of which the frightful menace of Federal censorship is the most terrible. Here is something which would make our business childish, which would soon have us making pictures so innocuous that no one would go to see them. Every prejudice would have its innings, every political axe would be whetted to razor edge upon our backs, every suggestion of the truth about abuses of government and society would be weeded out by a power greater than the power of the sovereign people. It is to save society as well as ourselves from this blight that we are united in the campaign against censorship. And before we have gone far we shall have a united people behind us, for we are fighting the people's battle."

Present at the meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E, presiding; William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation; P. A. Powers, Treasurer of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.; J. E. Brulatour of Eastman Films; Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' League of America; Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York City Exhibitors' League; Louis F. Blumenthal of the Auditorium Theater, Jersey City; Louis L. Levine of the Regent Theater, Brooklyn; William M. Seabury, general counsel, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, and Mr. Griffith.

HUMPHREY JOINS IVAN.

William Humphrey, who for the past seven years has been a leading player and director in the Vitagraph organization, has been engaged by the Ivan Film Productions to direct several of its forthcoming photoplays.

Mr. Humphrey has selected as his initial offering a powerful drama purchased by the Ivan Film Productions from the well-known dramatist, Willard Mack. The play, the director and the cast promise an interesting development in the steady progress of the Ivan Film Productions. The scenario has been prepared by Don Dundas.

At the Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Jan. 14 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Great Expectations" at the Strand.

GERMAN Official War pictures and a photo-dramatic adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations" headed the Strand Theater program the week of Jan. 14. Louise Huff and Jack Pickford are co-stars in the Dickens' picture, and the Famous Players Film Company, who produced the film, have given it a well balanced cast, including Frank Losee, Marcia Harris, Grace Barton, Herbert Prior and W. W. Black.

The German pictures have some interesting scenes, consisting of several captured regiments of Goumiers, Russians, Mohammedans, Algerians and East Indians going through their native religious ceremonies, each creed worshipping as is their custom. Other film attractions were a new comedy and the Strand Topical Review. The vocal soloists were Grace Hoffman, Enrico Srenzen and Anthony Leseant.

"The White Raven" at the Rialto.

Ethel Barrymore's admirers had an opportunity to see her on the screen at the Rialto in "The White Raven," Charles A. Logue's tale of the Alaskan gold fields and the world of grand opera. Sidney Drew supplied the comedy element of the program by appearing with Mrs. Drew in the latest of their popular domestic adventures.

In "The White Raven" Miss Barrymore is seen first as a dance hall singer in short skirts, and later as a grand opera prima donna. The Metro Pictures Corporation has given the picture artistic production. Prominent in the supporting cast are William B. Davidson, Walter Hitchcock, Ethel Dayton, George A. Wright, and Viola Fortesque.

"Spots of Interest in American History" and the topical digest were on the program.

Amparita Farrar and the newly organized Rialto Male Quartette were the special musical features.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" at the Broadway.

The engagement of the Universal photoplay founded on Jules Verne's celebrated story, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," is proving a huge success at the Broadway Theater. The run will continue for four weeks longer.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater, four pictures were shown: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dorothy Gish in "The Little Yank," and a Keystone comedy were on the bill.

On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Frank Keenan in "The Bride of Hate," and the latest Mack Sennett comedy were seen.

EXCEPTIONAL CAST FOR MARY PICKFORD.

In selecting his cast for Mary Pickford's new Artcraft production, " A Poor Little Rich Girl," a screen adaptation of the popular Eleanor Gates play and novel of the same name, Maurice Tourneur has succeeded in assembling a company of artists of exceptional talent and experience. Particular care has been evidenced in surrounding "Little Mary" with players that are especially fitted for their individual characters.

As the careless mother of Gwendolyn, who seeks high social standing rather than the love of her child, is Madeline Traverse. In the part of the father of Gwendolyn, who prefers the excitement of Wall Street to his home, is Charles Wellesley. Gladys Fairbanks, who appeared in the original stage production of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," again displays her talents in the play before the motion picture camera. As Jane, the nurse, Miss Fairbanks appears to good advantage in an important supporting character to the star. Frank McGlynn portrays the part of the kindly plumber.

Other important characters in "A Poor Little Rich Girl" have been intrusted to such sterling actors as Emile La Croix, Marcia Harris, Charles Craig, Frank Andrews, Herbert Prior, George Gernon and Maxine Hicks.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION TO GIVE TRADE DINNER.

Plans for the big dinner and entertainment of the general division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on January 26th are going forward most satisfactorily. The difficulty encountered is that most of the Broadway restaurants have no private dining rooms large enough to accommodate the crowd of 200 or 300 people who are expected. Both men and women are to be present. The entertainment side of the arrangements is going along under the direction of Harry L. Reichenbach, chairman of the committee, and he promises a line of novelties.

Bryson in Big States Rights Deal

Minneapolis Film Man Pays $50,000 for "Twenty Thousand Leagues" for Five States.

J. V. BRYSON of Minneapolis last week in Chicago closed a contract with Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, whereby for $50,000 he secures the rights for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" in Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. Mr. Bryson will open offices in Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Butte, Mont. It is his intention to put out five companies completely equipped and to carry his own musicians.

Mr. Bryson has been many years in the film business. He is best known to the trade, perhaps, through his connection with the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, of which he was for ten years the manager. For the past year he has been at the head of the Northwestern Motion Picture Company, with the agency of the Power and Simplex machines for the northwest territory. His connection with this company will continue.

The new entrant into the states rights market admits he has got a man's job on his hands, but he believes he is going to win out. He has abundant faith in the drawing power of the spectacle he has taken over for the five states and believes that enthusiasm and properly directed energy will achieve success.

In New York, where Mr. Bryson has been for a week pushing matters in connection with his new enterprise, he has arranged for a mass of publicity. He is out hunting for a regulation diving suit or three of them if he can obtain them. He has wired Seattle for two specimens of the octopus, which with the diving suit he intends to use in his lobby displays. Among other things he has purchased five thousand copies of Jules Verne's book, to be placed on sale in book stores in the cities where the film may be shown. He admits the salesman he approached on the latter deal looked at him rather hard when he mentioned the number he would require. The books also will be used for a window display.

Mr. Bryson hands a bouquet to the Universal's publicity department. He says it is the most complete he has ever seen, and adds he intends to make full use of it. It is probable the first exhibitions of the Universal film in the territory Mr. Bryson has taken over will be given early in February. It is the intention to put on shows in the larger cities for indefinite runs at a top price of $1.50, making $1 the maximum in the smaller cities.

"The Buffalo Bill Show"

The Death of Colonel Cody Releases An Authentic Motion Picture In Which the Old Scout Appears.

THE Wild West Film Co. is now able to release the great historic film, "The Buffalo Bill Show," which has been stored in their vaults awaiting the permission which only the death of Buffalo Bill (Col. Cody) could give. This great photo drama of genuine Indian life, personally supervised by Col. Cody, and directed by John D. O'Brien, was intended by the great scout as his offering to posterity. And now the magnificent photoplay is being exhibited simultaneously at the Rialto and Strand theaters, New York City.

Into this now posthumous camera record has been put the genius of the great army scout—it is his confession. Other men have told his story in their own way; but in this personal history Buffalo Bill shows his real self. The grinding, whirlwind life of the great Indian fighter is laid bare. Against the Indian and the bad man he dug out the heart of the West and made it beat for freedom. Millions now live happily in the land he rescued from lawlessness, and millions now await his message of blood, iron and manhood. Every shot this man fired was for posterity, and his thrilling story is now posterity's own picture book.

LEO DELANEY JOINS RAVER'S APOLLO.

Leo Delaney, late Vitagraph favorite and more recently appearing with Jean Sothern in "Whoso Findeth a Wife," has been engaged by Harry Raver, president of Apollo Pictures, Inc., to support the Apollo star, Alma Hanlon. Mr. Delaney is now at work on his first Apollo production under the direction of Richard Ridgley, who has just completed "God of Little Children."

The added prestige given to your advertisement in the Tenth Anniversary Number of the Moving Picture World is invaluable. Rates will remain the same. Forms close February 23.

Fairbanks Retires from Triangle

Athletic Player Says Action Is Based on Clause in Contract Stipulating Supervision by Griffith.

DOUGLASS FAIRBANKS has severed his connection with the Majestic Motion Picture Company, the productions of which have been released on the Triangle program. Mr. Fairbanks is now in New York and in consultation with the heads of various companies looking to another engagement. It is announced at his office that the player will take plenty of time in making any new association. One of his representatives declared the star was not seeking any engagement at a figure so high that the pictures in which he will appear will carry a prohibitive rental. He realizes that the higher the cost of a subject to an exhibitor the smaller in proportion will be his public.

Mr. Fairbanks bases his action in resigning from the Triangle forces on a clause in his contract with the Majestic company that stipulates that in all his pictures he shall have the advantage of the supervision of D. W. Griffith, "and in the event of said Mr. Griffith severing his connection with the company or discontinuing the active management of the same, the said Mr. Fairbanks may at his option withdraw from the employ of said corporation."

Mr. Fairbanks says he has come to no conclusion as to his future plans, but it is known many of the prominent concerns are making large bids for his signature to a contract, and it is altogether likely that if Mr. Fairbanks desires he can sign his name to a figure that will make a salary record.

Forman Renews Lasky Contract

TOM FORMAN, popular juvenile and leading man, has renewed his contract with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in the productions of which he has been appearing for some time. Mr. Forman's new contract will insure his appearance on the Paramount Program for a long time to come.

A native of Texas, Mr. Forman was first led into the paths of grease paint by the arrival of a "Romeo and Juliet" company in his home town when he was but nine years of age. As a result of this thrilling incident, the youthful Thomas spent all his summer vacations while still in school playing Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." As soon as he finished school he joined one of the old Belasco stock companies.

Tom Forman.

Realizing the possibilities of the then newly-developing motion picture business, young Forman decided to try his hand at registering emotions before the camera and was engaged by the Kalem Company as leading man. He later became a Lubin director, leaving that concern to play opposite Edith Taliaferro in Lasky's "Young Romance."

So successful was Mr. Forman in this picture that he has been appearing in Lasky productions on the Paramount Program ever since. Among the Lasky photoplays in which he has played important roles are "The Woman," "The Clown," "Chimmie Fadden," "Chimmie Fadden Out West," in the last three of which Victor Moore starred. With Blanche Sweet, he appeared in "The Evil Eye," "Public Opinion," "Ragamuffin," "Unprotected," and "The Thousand Dollar Husband," in which Theodore Roberts played the title role. Mr. Forman will also be seen in two forthcoming Blanche Sweet productions, "Those Without Sin" and "Tides of Barnegat," in which he plays Bart Holt. He will shortly be seen with Theodore Roberts and Maude Fealy in "The American Consul."

One of the sources of Mr. Forman's popularity is the fact that he is one of the few really young men who have devoted themselves to juvenile roles instead of playing character parts, as many actors of his age are now doing.

Regarding "An Unfair Condition"

Henry R. Raver, President of Apollo Pictures, Inc., Explains Conditions in the "Star Market"—Says "Mazie" Is Right.

I RISE to take issue with certain statements in your special article, "An Unfair Condition," and to agree with you in principle that present conditions in the "Star Market" warrant the prophecy that "fluctuations" are likely to occur.

It must be remembered, however, that not so long ago motion picture devotees were largely "the great unwashed," who enjoyed the thrills and sobs and death struggles of the cheaply produced picture. They were eminently satisfied with that sort of entertainment.

Then certain far-sighted producers, believing the more intelligent public could be induced to attend the motion picture theater began to make more intelligent pictures.

A natural competition between producers developed, each striving to outdo the other in quality of production and prominence of stars and plays. Theatrical stars were quick to take advantage of the fact that there were more producers seeking big stage stars than there were stars and, in the spirited bidding which followed, salaries went up sky-high and long time contracts were signed in many cases. In short, the public, the exhibitor and the distributer were for a time forgotten in this mad scramble for stars until the producer began to check up his production costs and found his schedule of selling and rental prices would have to be raised or he would go broke.

Competition for the rights to well-known stage plays added much to production costs as well. It is not unusual to see a producer pay ten thousand dollars for the rights to a play, many of which were failures on the stage. Add ten to fifteen thousand more for a star and we have an item of twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars without estimating the cost of production, which may run ten to twenty thousand more, for a five-reel subject.

To get this money back it was necessary to place a "Star Tax" on the exhibitor, through the various channels of distribution and, now that things have settled down to a sound and more sane basis the exhibitor begins to realize he is carrying a much too heavy burden. And the producer finds he has stars on his hands at two-hundred-thousand-a-year salary and the only way he can keep his head above water and remain in the "class" he has established for himself is to alternate his expensive "star" productions with cheaper made films, using a two-hundred-a-week picture star. But he is compelled to charge more for the cheaper made production than it is actually worth in order to cover his average cost and make a profit on his output of both classes of production.

This is brought about through the program scheme of distribution, whereby the exhibitor pays a contract price for service.

Now, suppose we take up the "Mazie" situation of your article and see if the girl is to blame. Every young actress is ambitious and anxious to get to the top. This ambition is not original with "Mazie"—we all hope to attain great heights in some line or another, and "Mazie" is a damphool if she doesn't get all she can. The fault lies with the producer. When he finds a "comer" in the ranks it is his duty to tie her up on contract for a long period and then proceed to develop her as a star. If she isn't tied up and accepts a better offer elsewhere, who can blame her?

Canada Has New Producing Company

National Features Has Engaged a Number of American Players, to Be Directed by Barry O'Neil.

A definite move to place Canada on the map as a film producing country is being made by a syndicate of film men, including a number of theatre managers and exhibitors, who have organized the Canadian National Features, Limited, with a capitalization of $500,000. Announcement has been made that contracts with a number of film stars have been secured, while a studio at Toronto, Ontario, is near completion and will be ready for occupancy in February.

The prominent screen players who have been engaged, according to contracts in the hands of the new company, include Marguerite Snow, William Riley Hatch, June Daye, Mabel Trunnelle, Clifford Bruce, Frederick Lewis, Herbert Prior, Mrs. Allan Walker, Sadie Weston, Hugh Jeffrey and Fred Tidmarsh.

Barry O'Neil has been engaged as director in chief, it is declared, while the chief cameraman will be Fred Chaston. The technical director will be Lewis W. Physioc and the scenario director selected is Archie P. McKishnie.

The officers of the company are: President, Jerry Shea, Toronto, owner of several vaudeville theaters; vice president, G. W. Brownridge, of Toronto; secretary, E. J. Wills; treasurer, Frank Regan; manager, G. W. Brownridge. A large shareholder is said to be William Cranston. Louis Fieghen, an exhibitor of Toronto, is also a director of the new enterprise.

The Canadian National Feature., Limited, claims to have made arrangements for the opening of exchanges in various cities of Canada and the company aims to do business in foreign markets. The company is also said to be negotiating with a number of exchanges of the United States for contracts. One multiple-reel feature will be made each month, according to the present plan of the company.

The temporary Toronto office of the company is in the Dominion Bank building, and W. H. Cooke, Toronto, is looking after financial arrangements.

Two Metro Companies Going South

Under Guidance of John W. Noble and John H. Collins They Will Be Gone a Month.

DAVID THOMPSON, of the Metro forces, has left for Jacksonville, Fla., to arrange for the Metro-Rolfe companies headed by Ethel Barrymore and Viola Dana, whose next features will be partly photographed in Florida. Director John W. Noble, who is screen Miss Barrymore's feature play, "Egypt the Gypsy," the Metro screen adaptation of Edward Sheldon's "Egypt," in which Margaret Anglin appeared on the dramatic stage, has selected his Southern company. This will be Miss Barrymore's first trip South in connection with the silent drama. Many scenes will be made along the beautiful Florida East Coast, and a few are planned at Tampa. Mr. Noble's Philippine experience as a regular army officer, his knowledge of the Orient, where the exterior scenes are laid, serve him in good stead, and into this tremendous Metro production he is putting all his art and experience.

Besides Miss Barrymore and Mr. Noble, the "Egypt the Gypsy" company will consist of eighteen others, of the cast and executive staff. These will include William F. Davidson, Robert Whittier, William C. Mandeville, Hugh Jeffrey, Miss Walker, Herbert O. Carleton, photographer; Fred Sittenham, Mr. Noble's assistant, and property men, electricians and others.

Arrangements are being made by Mr. Thompson for the Barrymore-Noble party as well as for the Viola Dana company, which will be under the direction of John H. Collins. In the latter company will be, besides Mr. Collins and Miss Dana, Mr. Collins' assistant, Albert Kelly, Photographer Arthur A. Cadwell and his assistant, Dwight Begeman; Robert Walker, Henry Leone, Augustus Phillips and about eight more of the cast and executive forces.

Mr. Rolfe will accompany the parties as an advisor and will make of the trip a "working vacation." The companies will remain in the South about a month each, and perhaps longer.

MASTBAUM TO BOOK FONTANA PRODUCTIONS.

One of the largest film transactions was completed in Philadelphia just as the bells were announcing the arrival of the new year. Stanley Mastbaum becomes the sole representative in many states for the exclusive booking of all the productions that are released under the name of the A. G. Fontana Productions, Inc. The magnitude of this deal can best be appreciated when it is taken into consideration that this company controls the rights of "Civilization," "Intolerance," and several of the other great film masterpieces for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia and West Virginia, except only the state of New Jersey for the presentation of "Civilization."

Mr. Mastbaum will be in absolute control of all this territory, and all the present and future bookings of the production company will be conducted exclusively through him.

World Representative Drops in on Theaters Near Corner of Broad and Market Streets of the New Jersey Metropolis—Finds Things Lively

NEWARK, New Jersey's thoroughly wakeful and hustling manufacturing city, is by no means lacking in physical beauty. New Yorkers can glance across the river and see Hoboken near the docks, and those who travel by rail can see the Passaic mud flats at low tide. But if they walk about Newark, hunting for picture theaters, they will see how much beauty and elegance there is on all sides. There are only two cities in all the United States that do so important a manufacturing business as Newark. It is one of this country's big, thriving centers. There are seventy picture theaters in the city limits. The population is reaching the half-million mark.

The World man dropped in on those picture houses near the corner of Newark's two main arteries, Broad and Market streets. In a week or two I hope to visit everyone of the seventy. The picture houses I called on this week, on Monday afternoon, when the presses begin and the staff takes it easy, are the Terminal, a Fox house; the Paramount and the Goodwin, all on Broad street; the Strand, the Carlton and Proctor's on Market street; Keeney's, a vaudeville house on the next block, Branford place, and the Court theater on Brientnell place, are both within sight of these. These are fine houses and in appointments and elegance equal to the best—of course, there are a few magnificent houses like the Strand or the Rialto on Broadway, and perhaps others in the middle west, that are in a class by themselves. Newark sends a fair-sized army across the river—it's only a half hour's ride in the tube to Broadway and Thirty-third street—to the attractions of a musical or dramatic nature every week day night.

The first picture theater one reaches coming from the tube station is the new Fox Terminal theater, over which Manager A. P. Waxman presides. The foyer of this theater fairly shines as one looks in from the street. It is hung with life-sized paintings of the famous Fox stars in glowing colors, and the electric lights pour down upon them so that one gets the impression of a flash as he hurries past on the sidewalk just outside the plate glass. The house seats 1,600 and for elegance is excelled by no house I have seen. The William Fox interests have been in it only a few months. The former house on the site was quite a lemon. The situation is of the best. The Fox people took it over, spent a lot of money and put Mr. Waxman in charge. The result is not only a beautiful house but a filled one.

The Goodwin Theater.

About five blocks further south along Broad and on the west side of the street one comes to the Goodwin theater, a somewhat smaller house, seating 800, but cheery, bright and pretty. Mrs. L. Webb is the presiding genius at the Goodwin. I was unfortunate in not finding the manageress in; but I had a pleasant chat with her representative. This is the first picture theater this writer has visited that is conducted wholly by women and it surely is perfectly conducted. It is a house any one would take pleasure in seeing and it is no wonder its business is flourishing.

The Paramount Theater.

Two blocks further south on Broad is the Paramount, a 1,300-seat theater, with a long white marble foyer, furnished with the kind of carved marble bleachers that the ancient Greek theater managers affected, but each covered with a red cushion for modern comfort. The Paramount is running a two-feature policy at ten cents in the afternoons and ten and fifteen at night. We had an interesting talk with Manager W. B. Putman, who says business is vindicating the theater's policy.

The Strand Theater.

Manager J. B. McNally of the Strand, on Market street, not far west from Broad, also finds business good in his 1,200-seat theater. This also is a thoroughly up-to-the-minute house, and its prices are ten and fifteen cents in the afternoons and the same at night except that a quarter is asked for the best seats. Manager McNally believes in super-features and says that any big house can make good with them. He likes pictures made from popular books. Most people have read them, he says, and want to see how the picture handles the story. He finds that patrons generally are of better quality and more intelligent than was the case a few years ago.

The Carlton Theater.

A smaller house on Market street, but one not at all less pleasant to visit, is the Carlton, a Fox house, in charge of Manager Lewis P. De Wolfe. This is the oldest picture theater in Newark now running. It seats 850. It charges ten cents for all shows except on Saturdays and Sundays when the price of admission is fifteen cents. The program is a five-reel feature and three short subjects. The patronage at the Carlton is of the middle class and the pictures that are most popular are stories of American life and good comedy. Costume plays are not particularly wanted unless they are markedly out of the ordinary. The house is doing an excellent business under Mr. De Wolfe, who has been in charge since 1914. I enjoyed my call upon the manager of the Carlton very much.

The Court Theater.

The Court theater is on Brientnell place, close to the city's splendid City Hall. I missed seeing the manager, Nathan Myers. The person in charge did not want to take the responsibility of telling me even the number of seats in the house, though I was treated with politeness.

Keeney's and Proctor's Vaudeville Houses.

These two fine theaters are within a block of each other. Their business does not regularly fall within the interest of motion picture exhibitors. I dropped in at both to shake hands, but was able to meet only Lewis J. Fosse of Keeney's. He is a vaudeville man and believes that to him pictures are of no use at all. The Proctor house is managed by R. J. Crowley and Lewis H. Golding.

GOLDWYN NOT ALLIED WITH ANY DISTRIBUTOR.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation issues an emphatic denial of rumors that it has made an arrangement with any distributing organization to handle the Goldwyn productions, when made. This denial, given out by Samuel Goldfish, its president, is as follows:

"Seemingly deliberate rumors are being spread by one or more producing and distributing organizations that they have closed or are closing a deal with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to distribute the Goldwyn Pictures.

"These rumors are utterly false.

"Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has made no arrangement or contract of any kind for its distribution. This corporation has announced specifically that no effort will be made to release its pictures until at least six and perhaps as many as twelve complete pictures are on its shelves. This plan will be followed to the letter."

"Panthea"

Five-Reel Screen Version of Monckton Hoffe's Stage Play Made by Selznick Pictures, With Norma Talmadge in the Title Role, Is Drama in the Fullest Sense of the Word.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OPINION is bound to differ regarding the moral aspect of the sacrifice made by the heroine of "Panthea," but there can be only one conclusion as to the story's power to arrest attention and hold it unbroken to the end. Such a condition means drama in the fullest sense of the word, and the screen version of the Monckton Hoffe stage play which Mme. Olga Petrova, the Russian actress, brought to this country, preserves this indispensable quality through its entire five reels.

The production, made under the auspicies of Joseph M. Schenck and Lewis J. Selznick and directed by Allen Dwan, is admirable; and Norma Talmadge and the members of the supporting company act their parts with a commendable degree of earnestness and artistic appreciation. The transfer from stage to screen has been accomplished at the loss of considerable character study in ultra-English types, but a corresponding gain in dramatic intensity is to be noted.

The explanatory scenes in Russia, showing Panthea's reason for leaving her native land, which are not found in the stage play, are graphic and illuminating; and the shipwreck on the English coast which is the means of introducing the Russian girl into the household of Sir Henry Mordaunt is picturized with effective realism.

Although it is necessary for Panthea Romoff to meet, fall in love with and be married to Gerard Mordaunt before she comes face to face with the Baron de Duisitor, in Paris, it is not until this moment that the objective point of the plot is foreshadowed. When the titled gentleman makes the proposal to Panthea that she give herself to him for one month in exchange for his securing her husband's opera a public hearing, every possible extenuating circumstance has been marshalled in the wife's behalf. It is on this situation that the play finds its measure of praise or condemnation. Whatever its ethical standing, its dramatic worth is beyond dispute.

The ending, showing Panthea and her husband on their way to Siberia, detracts from the story. The woman is innocent of murder, her father-in-law is a wealthy English nobleman, and, so long as it is clearly intimated that she is to be set free, it should come at the moment when the Baron is about to betray Panthea to the Russian Prefect of Police. A slip in the Baron's communication to this official, is the manner in which he signs the letter. Barons and other gentlemen with handles to their names are not in the habit of prefixing their titles to their signatures.

The burden of acting borne by Norma Talmadge in "Panthea" would tax the ability of an emotional actress of the highest rank. The star of the screen play never suggests the land of her supposed nativity or the more erotic type which Mme. Petrova associated with the character; but, she does sound every emotion that stirs the heart of this woman who makes the supreme sacrifice out of unselfish love, and wins additional sympathy by reason of her youth, comeliness and the excellence of her histrionic method.

Earle Fox, as Gerard Mordaunt, has the most important male role. Panthea's infatuation for him is easily understood, but he is not English and his big scene tries his powers to their utmost. Roger Lytton has the bearing and the sensual refinement which belong to Baron de Duisitor and George Fawcett repeats the success he has hitherto achieved as a police official of high rank. The actor who plays Panthea's Russian sweetheart and aids her to escape to England, should be credited with lifting a comparatively small part into prominence by reason of a flawless performance. Murdock McQuarrie, Count E. Von Stroheim, Norbert Wicki, William Abbington, Winifred Harris, Elaine Persey, Stafford Windsor, Dick Rosson and Frank Currier are the remaining members of a judiciously chosen cast.

"Panthea" is not brain food for callow youth, but will be enjoyed by those who are capable of appreciating its mental stimulation and the care bestowed upon its making.

"The Bondage of Fear"

Ethel Clayton in Five-reel Peerless-World Photoplay That Is Told in Narrative Rather Than in Drama Form.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SKILL in construction is not a marked feature of "The Bondage of Fear," a five-reel Peerless photoplay, written by Rosalind Ivan, and released by the World Film Corporation. The story is passable and the character drawing quite good, but the best thing about the production is the work of the cast. Ethel Clayton gives personality to a rather colorless heroine and embodies her varying moods with her usual earnestness and skill. The best member of the supporting cast is Arthur Ashley, who plays a low class crook in a most realistic fashion. Frances Miller acts Mandy Lee to the life, and John Bowers, Rockliffe Fellows, Edward Kimball, William Nish, George Morgan and Elsa Bambrick are qualified for their several roles.

"The Bondage of Fear" tells of a young girl who is compromised by a former sweetheart after she is happily married. The infatuated man follows her to her lodge in the country and is killed by a burglar in the young wife's bedroom. The secret is kept between the murderer and the woman, for the sake of her reputation. As a consequence the thief resorts to blackmail and drives his victim to the point where she shoots him dead, and so frees herself from the fear of exposure.

The settings are well chosen, and the direction, by Travers Vale, is an important factor in the success of the picture.

"The Image Maker"

Pathe Gold Rooster Play Links Egypt of Pharaohs With Life of Today—Valkyrien Star of Tanhouser Five-reel Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is more than ordinary ingenuity displayed by Emmett Mixx, the author of "The Image Maker," in weaving the two periods together which are used in the five-reel Gold Rooster play, of which Valkyrien is the central figure. The story is one of reincarnation; a prince of the House of Pharaoh and a lowly slave, who were lovers in the distant past, are reunited in the prosaic present, at the side of the tomb in which the Prince of Tsa was buried. The picture follows the usual photoplay construction, alternating the two periods of time at brief intervals. This is deftly done, however, and the incidents are numerous and of a gratifying variety.

Such a theme demands all the liberty granted to every well regulated romance, and the broad sweeps of color supplied by the followers of the ruler of the Nile and the Arabs of today, in the ancient and modern Egyptian scenes, are in keeping with the character of the story.

The locations have been selected with care. New York, Florida, Cairo and the sands of Egypt are all made the scenes of the action, and the director has maintained an excellent quality of illusion. Valkyrien, in "The Image Maker," does the best acting of her moving picture career, and is ably supported by Harris Gordon, Arthur Hauer, Inda Balmer and Morgan Jones.

"Betty to the Rescue"

Fanny Ward Has the Lead in An Interesting Lasky Subject That Makes a Strong Finish.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "BETTY TO THE RESCUE," the Lasky subject released January 15, Fanny Ward is most effective in the latter part, in the role of a woman. In the beginning we see her as a child of the orange groves, splashing barelegged in the irrigation ditches, damming the water and sending it in the wrong direction. Later we see her as a young woman with trouble descending upon her; it is here she comes into her own. The story provides good entertainment, and in the last two reels it contains suspense and measurably moves. Miss Ward in the earlier stages surrounds herself with kittens and puppies, the accepted hallmarks of screen waifdom. In the later passages of the story we see her in khaki skirts, with a cartridge belt and pistol strapped about her waist and looking much different.

The plot turns on the discovery of gold in a mine inherited by Betty and which for several years has been supposed to be minus the yellow metal. Friendly miners have "salted" the gravel, that the disappointment of the owner may be mitigated. One of the biggest moments of the play is that where Big Jim, looking over the bag of nuggets Betty has turned in, discovers a bit of foreign metal. It means the mine is not dead, that Betty is rich.

Jack Dean has the role of John Kenwood, guardian of Betty, and in love with her. Lillian Leighton is Constance, Kenwood's sister. Charles West is Fleming, a mining expert who knows all along there is gold in the mine and tries to win control of the claim by purchase at first, and then by obtaining the hand of Betty. He narrowly loses out. Ted Duncan is Big Jim, a wholesome character, the friend of Betty's father and of Betty. It is a good cast.

"Betty to the Rescue" will be liked.

"The Happiness of Three Women"

Morosco Five-Reel Photoplay With a Trio of Heroines, Written by Albert Payson Terhune—House Peters and Myrtle Stedman Head the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE are three heroes, as well as a trio of heroines, in the Oliver Morosco photoplay, "The Happiness of Three Women." The theme, for this reason, is unique, and Albert Payson Terhune, the author, has dovetailed the different interests together very deftly. In fact, the twists and turns of plot recall the workings of a French farce, and admiration for the neatness with which the dramatist gets his three sets of loving hearts in and out of trouble occasionally outweighs the human interest in the play.

"The Happiness of Three Women" is not easy to classify.

Scene from "The Happiness of Three Women" (Morosco).

It starts off, apparently, as a comedy, an innocent enough motor ride taken by a married woman and a former sweetheart being the first complication. A note of real drama gets into it, however, when the husband of one of the other heroines is accused of robbing a bank, and the auto riders, who can prove an alibi for him, dare not speak for fear of compromising themselves. The result, which is never very much in doubt, admits of a number of clever complications before it is worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned and the three sets of loving hearts once more beat in happy unison.

The success of the Terhune screen play depends largely upon the manner in which it is acted. This important point has been given due consideration by the producer. The air of good breeding and moral worth imparted to the characters played by House Peters, Myrtle Stedman, L. W. Steers and Daisy Robinson lend the right tone to the story, and Wm. Hutchinson and Lucille Ward as Judas, and Mary Fletcher are excellent as an amusing but highly respectable married couple. To refer again to the two featured players, Myrtle Stedman displays great physical charm and fine acting ability as Constance Barr, and House Peters as Billy Craig is the embodiment of a clean-limbed, quick-brained, well bred American. Milton Brown leaves a good impression by his work as Monck.

The production is in keeping with the demands for generous and expert settings for the scenes.

Ethel Barrymore in "Egypt."

Ethel Barrymore will be starred in the Metro-Rolfe production "Egypt," Edward Sheldon's famous play in which Margaret Anglin appeared in the spoken drama. Miss Barrymore's picturization of the play will be directed by John W. Noble, who also directed her screening of "The Awakening of Helena Richie," which will soon be released on the Metro program.

"God's Crucible"

Five-Reel Bluebird Photoplay, Written and Directed by Lynn Reynolds, Is Full of Beauty.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of the Bluebird five-reel photoplay, "God's Crucible," refers to the Grand Canyon of the Arizona. Many of the scenes are laid in this wonderful spot, and a man with a peanut soul, as he is described by the author, is brought here and his nature undergoes a complete change under the spell of the beauty and grandeur around him. There is a human interest story also in the plot. The man's son has led a fast life in the East, and when his father turns him out to shift for himself he becomes an Arizona ranger and then a bandit. Father and son meet in a trapper's cabin in the Grand Canyon, make up their differences and are joined by the younger man's sweetheart.

Such a story does not make anything out of the ordinary, but it has considerable novelty and its moral lesson is worth the telling. The incidents where the three men make a brave attempt to celebrate Christmas in the "snowed-in" cabin, for the benefit of the trapper's little boy, will appeal strongly to many; and, although the picture is more narrative than anything else, there are plenty of admirers for this class of fiction.

The production is on a level with the Bluebird standard and the screen drama is well played by a cast that includes the names of George Hernandez, Val Paul, Frederick Montague, Myrtle Gonzales, Jack Curtis, Edward J. Brady, Frances Lee and Harvey Griffith.

"Her Right to Live"

Domestic Drama in Five Reels, With Peggy Hyland the Star of Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN SELECTING a cast for "Her Right to Live," the five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature written by Paul West, the man in charge has had the courage to give Peggy Hyland the part of a heroine of the most pronounced soubrette type. All the stage tricks that tradition has bequeathed to the simple but roguish village maiden, are to be expected in the character of Polly Biggs. The star of "Her Right to Live" discards them entirely and makes the orphan girl a natural human being with a bright sunny nature, and an innocence that is not more wise than nice.

The plot of the Paul West picture turns upon the question of a young girl's reputation. She and her young brother and sister have spent the night in a bungalow in company with a young man who is accused later of murder. The girl's testimony will clear him, but he is in love with her and does not want her to speak. Polly takes the stand, however, and tells the whole story with a frankness that releases the prisoner and leaves her name unsullied. It is in this scene that Peggy Hyland does her best work, her personality and stage experience being perfectly adapted to such a situation.

"Her Right to Live" is an uneven piece of work. The atmosphere is that of a small city and many of the touches are true to life; but the plot is along conventional lines and is not always well put together.

The production is of fair quality, and Antonio Moreno is a manly John Armore. Three small children, in the persons of Bobby and Helen Connelly and Mildred Platz, are a pleasing feature of the picture. Mrs. Costello, John Robertson, Jack Ellis and Eulalie Jensen complete the cast.

Colin Campbell has started the work of producing another Selig Spectacular Special at the Selig studios in Los Angeles. The cast includes Fritzi Brunette, Bessie Eyton, Tom Santschi, Edward Coxen, Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer and others.

"The Gilded Youth"

American-Mutual Star Production of Five Parts Features Richard Bennett.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

EXCELLENT entertainment can be gathered from the many comedy situations that this five-part production presents. At the same time it displays a frequent and distressing fault noticeable among moving picture plays, an evidence of a slip-shod working out of the theme which impresses the casual observer with a sense of shallowness of plot, and the critic with an aggravating consciousness of an absence of professional construction, or a thorough working out of comic or dramatic possibilities, as the case may be. Also the subtitles are often too obvious in their intention of comic suggestion to be effective, and, in fact, often retard rather than accelerate the natural comedy of the situation in the present instance.

Richard Bennett and Rhea Mitchell are both pleasing in their interpretation of their respective roles; the former that of an eccentric youth who in spite of evident stupidity fell in with millions through speculation; and the latter that of a humble little servant in a boarding house and sweetheart of the "gilded youth."

According to the story, a youth is sent by his uncle to the city to try and make good, and, incidentally, to make preparations to marry his uncle's ward, for whom he cherished no love. He falls in love with the little serving girl, starts a bank account, and after going unshaven and illy kept while his bank account grows, he suddenly gets the notion of "dolling up," and finally works himself into the speculating business referred to.

This is the sum and substance of the plot, with the exception of a few side issues in connection with the love interest—a good comedy foundation if worked professionally.

"The Princess of Patches"

Mark Swan's Melodrama Produced by Selig, with Violet De Biccari, Vivian Reed and Charles Le Moyne in the Able Cast.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GILSON WILLETS performed wonders on the script of Swan's melodrama to reduce it to working shape for Director Al. Green, who, in turn, has succeeded in giving us a well connected and interesting story for the screen. And William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., has given us real southern scenes in Mississippi, the locale of the story, where the producing company spent several weeks. He has also furnished a company of players that ably meets the requirements of the cast.

Thanks to Director Green there is no need to outline the story of "The Princess of Patches." The pictures tell it throughout without a single "dark" spot. There are several places where these "dark" spots might have easily occurred, but the clear vision and the care of the director have avoided them.

Everyone who sees this picture will be delighted with the acting of Violet De Biccari in the part of "Patches," when she was a little girl—bare-legged and shabbily-clothed. The scene showing her scanty attire is carried off by the well-meaning knight of the road, Waggles, will raise many a smile, with pathos close beside each of them.

Vivian Reed is "Patches" "growed" up, and very charming does she appear. The scene where the designing young lady teaches her lover how to propose will stir mirth in the hearts of both old and young.

The leading "heavy," Judas, is very well acted by Charles Le Moyne. I understand that this young actor is the son of that fine old actor of the same name, who, years ago, was the recognized leader in refined comedy roles, and who made such a hit in "The Charity Ball." I wish for the son the great popularity of his father.

Frank Weed's Waggles, a somewhat different tramp, is a fine characterization. As Jack Merry, the "prince," Bruce Wilbur will demand his share of attention, and the Colonel Silverthorne of Hildor Hoberg should win favor as a well drawn southern gentleman.

The release date is January 22, through K-E-S-E.

Triangle Program

"The Crab," Five-Reel Kay Bee, Starring Little Theima Salter With Frank Keenan, and Two One-Reel Comedies, "The Pipe of Discontent" and "Love Under Cover."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE CRAB," by Gardner Sullivan, is chiefly remarkable for the strong characterization in the two leading roles. The little girl, Theima Salter, is a perfect little actress, quite capable of conveying thought and feeling by silent and subtle methods, far better in some respects than older people of the pictured story, very sweet and charming to the eye, and bound to win as she is, but her methods will improve with experience. They are not quite subtle enough—she is obviously acting. Her role is well devised by the author to draw sympathetic interest. It is that of a homeless child sheltered by a hopeless and bitter cynic whose heart was buried in the grave of his wife, the only creature who had ever sounded its depths.

Frank Keenan handles this hard and unsympathetic part with such skill that a powerful contrast is set up, the opposition of coldly selfish egotism to the impulsive natural affections of a little girl sweet to the core. His role is a disagreeable and a difficult one, but he is too much of an artist to offer a moment of relief until the proper time, when the little girl goes on the witness stand and tells a noble lie in his behalf. A cold-blooded liar himself, like most financiers, the almost dry well of his affections is reached and set flowing through admiration for the plucky little girl—she lies to save him from the consequences of cruel treatment. Something in his silent sorrow has appealed to her sympathies, and she has learned to love him with adoration. As a character study the story ranks very high.

"The Pipe of Discontent" is a short comedy of circumstance, intricate enough to suit the idea of Scribe that such plays should depend entirely upon complicated situations. It seems to have been devised with ingenuity, but it is so lacking in characterization that a great deal of its natural humor vanishes in thin air. By process entirely logical, the accidental exchange of similar articles at a soda fountain by two young wives, their domestic felicity becomes seriously involved. The tangle grows more and more complicated, in strict accord with the French playwright's idea, until the last scene of explanation, but interest is confined entirely to the ingenuity of structure.

"Love Under Cover" is a good title—for some other play. Its only connection with the subject is so remote, that of a book of poems which causes the heroine to imagine herself in love with the author, that the application will not be readily grasped. The infatuated heroine finds that the author is an old and peevish man and returns to the arms of a handsome cowboy she has liked at an earlier period. This slender material has been used over and over again in other small releases. It presents nothing new, and its humor depends upon the influence exerted by the poetically-inclined heroine on a group of cow punchers in her father's employ. Their efforts to express themselves in music, painting and sculpture are supposed to furnish the fun, but the comedy of action is not swift enough for farce and not human enough for character comedy.

"God of Little Children"

Five-Reel Apollo Art Drama of Brilliant Performance by the New Star, Alma Hanlon.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ALMA HANLON, of sweet and engaging personality, an ingenue capable of high emotional interpretation, is given her first opportunity to shine under the direction of Richard Ridgley in "God of Little Children." Born and brought up in a dramatic environment, a child of the stage, she is without theatricalism. With the native grace of an ingenue, she reveals almost unconsciously capabilities far beyond that colorless role. Very simply, without ostentation, she gives an almost constant view of what is passing in the mind and heart of the character she represents, and this is the true art of motion-picture interpretation. Harry R. Raver of the Apollo Company is to be congratulated on a veritable find. With a strong support, under capable handling, in a good story, Miss Hanlon's acting clearly indicates that she is to be a fixed star.

The story deals with an attempt to prey upon the weakness of a lonesome and childless man of wealth. To accomplish this purpose, two crooks plant an innocent looking girl in his office as a typist, a girl really innocent of evil design, incapable of it on her own account, on whom two scheming crooks have obtained a hold through knowledge of crime she committed in a moment of desperation. Terrorized by menace of betrayal, she becomes their active agent until her whole nature revolts against the part she is compelled to play—she learns to love the very man she is expected to betray. She vaguely confesses her unworthiness when he proposes marriage, but she is again urged on by the evil influences and drifts helplessly into the new relation. Shortly after her wedding, the more dangerous of the two crooks is sent to jail for a long term and the consummation of marriage promises that a little child will be brought into the world.

The dangerous crook escapes through the use of money which the young wife has been compelled to provide and he returns to the scene with a scheme to murder her husband and give this violent death the appearance of suicide. Unaware of this intention, but harassed to the point of desperation, the young wife is on the verge of suicide when she prays for relief to the God of Little Children, He who sends their souls to earth. The crooks are the victims of the tragedy they planned, and their elimination is brought about through the same human instrumentality they expected to utilize—the God of Little Children heard and dealt swift justice to those who would have destroyed the unborn.

Two Kalems

"The Homesteaders' Feud," Episode of "The Girl From Frisco" Series, and "The Black Circle," a Number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

A PROBLEM of the present day West—the watering of cattle on range—is given interesting treatment in "The Homesteaders' Feud," latest two-reel episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco" series, by Robert Welles Ritchie. The two reels teem with action, and the film is a western of merit.

Scene from "The Homesteaders' Feud" (Kalem).

This time Barbara Brent takes a leading part in bringing about an adjustment of affairs between cattlemen and homesteaders who, goaded on by the villain, have filed claims to and fenced in lands used to water cattle. But the adjustment does not come about before there has been lots of fighting and lots of melodramatic intrigue.

In the film we see cowboys as they are on ranches to-day, and credit is due James W. Horne for his direction. As in previous episodes of this series, the leading parts are played by Marin Sais and True Boardman. The supporting cast includes Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson and Edward Clisbee

"The Black Circle."

In this episode of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, George Larkin, in the title role, furnishes a real thrill when he swings on a rope from one window to another, high up on the side of a skyscraper. He does this to gain access to the apartment of a blind man who has killed a former rival. There is an element of mystery to be found in this reel that holds interest to the end. The reporter finds that the murder has been committed with a shotgun disguised as a cane. With Mr. Larkin in the cast are Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis. Interest never lags, and the film is worth while.

"Infidelity"

Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong Featured in Five-Reel Photoplay of Fair Quality, Produced by Erbograph Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OCCULTISM plays rather an important part in "Infidelity," a five-reel screen drama produced by the Erbograph Company. A Hindoo gentleman possessed of remarkable powers of mesmerism is shown in the act of compelling a young girl, by the mere exercise of his will power, to leave her home and join him at a distant studio. The experiment is interesting, even if impossible. It also gives the hero an opportunity to save the girl from a dangerous situation.

The story of "Infidelity" is not as highly spiced as the title suggests. At the opening of the picture a husband wrongfully suspects his wife of encouraging the attentions of another man, and the final scene shows the pair united. The intervening subject matter is concerned with the fortunes of the daughter of the estranged couple, the entire five reels making a neatly constructed and fairly entertaining photoplay.

(Scene from "Infidelity" (Art Drama).

The production is generally adequate. A tendency to overact during the first reel mars the work of Warren Cook and Arthur Morrison, but the former actor improves greatly during the other reels. Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong prove their right to the star roles, and Miriam Nesbitt, Fred K. Jones and Elizabeth Spencer are a competent trio of players.

"Bitter Truth"

Five-Reel Melodrama With Comic Relief, Featuring Virginia Pearson, Produced by Fox Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN WRITING "Bitter Truth," a five-reel photo-melodrama produced by the Fox Film Corporation, the author has followed the rules laid down by the Davis-Kramer-Blaney school of dramatists at the time they gave out the dramatic law and took in the author's profits of the Popular Price Circuit of ten years ago. It will be recalled that the master playwrights of that branch of the spoken drama wrote for a distinct grade of patrons, rather simple-minded folk that preferred brawn to brain, physical action to psychology, and went in strong for comic relief—and plenty of it. And it is quite within reason to suppose that the same class of honest citizens would be enjoying a like grade of dramas to-day, but for the advent of the moving picture play. At any rate, "Bitter Truth" is cunningly calculated to appeal to a similar element among amusement seekers. Mary Murillo, the writer of the scenario, has made a careful study of the old models, and her work is equal to the best thriller ever produced by Al Wood when "Chinatown Charlie" was among his best money-getters.

The heroine of "Bitter Truth" is a girl of the slums, the daughter of a thief. She is unjustly sent to prison, and, on her release, devotes herself to becoming revenged on the judge that gave her her sentence. She becomes an inmate of the judge's house and is just about to assist his political enemies in making him the victim of a scandal when the man who has always loved her succeeds in arousing her better nature. The most sensational scene takes place on a Hudson River steamboat, but there are other thrilling situations, and the comic relief is supplied by a fat Irish cook and equally weighty colored maid and an elongated iceman. The humor is primitive but unmistakable.

Virginia Pearson acts Anne, the girl who never had a chance to go straight, with the amount of fervid theatricalism demanded in plays of this nature. As a vampire she looks fetching and spreads her net for the undoing of the judge in quite the Theda Bara fashion. Jack Hopkins, William H. Tooker, Alice May and Sidney D'Albrook have the other leading characters. Kenean Ruel directed the production.

Scene from "Bitter Truth" (Fox).

"Heartstings"

Five-Reel Red Feather Release, by E. Magnus Ingleton, Tells Story Extending Into Two Generations.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MAUDE GEORGE is featured in this five-reel offering as a vampire woman. In the first scenes a married man is seen in court, pleading guilty to embezzlement. He has been in the toils of the siren, who squeezed him to the last cent and then left him to his faithful wife and the avenging law. Considine, the man in question, is sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years.

Later the story of Leone's past is pictured. Her abandoned husband is shown on his death bed, attended by the only child, a little girl. This child grows up, after being adopted by a certain Dr. McClean. Then Leone is once more shown, in an attempt to lure away the fiance of her own child. This is prevented by the reappearance of Considine and his wife.

Stories of this type have become quite familiar, but when well handled, as this one is, they hold the attention throughout. The action is slightly mechanical, but approaches drama in one or two instances. The scene between mother and daughter is strong and convincingly presented. It is difficult to believe that a woman of the vampire type could hold her age so much better than the others in the story; the lapse of ten years leaves scarcely a mark upon her.

Scene from "Heartstrings" (Universal).

The story closes pleasingly, the girl marrying, not her faithless lover, but Dr. McClean, her guardian. This of course has numerous precedents. Francelia Billington, Charles Cummings, Irene Hunt, Virginia Corbin, Paul Byron and Alan J. Holubar are also in the cast.

"The Barrier"

Edgar Lewis, for the Rex Beach Pictures Company, Gives Us a Remarkably Faithful Adaptation of the Alaskan Story—A Picture True to Type and of Great Power.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT MAY be that in "The Barrier," produced by the Rex Beach Pictures Company, we have the great American picture—a simple, straightforward story, presented without spectacular accompaniment. It is a tale of North America and of North Americans—of the best of these and of the worst of these; of men and women who hail from south of the forty-ninth parallel and from the north of it. Its major setting is of Alaska, that sparsely settled country where all that is primitive in men comes to the surface—all that is noble as well as all that is vicious. Here we have strong contrasts in character, but standing out above every other kind and description of human attributes is the "greatest of these"—and that is renunciation.

"The Barrier" is an absorbing story, using that expression with a full appreciation of its literal meaning. It grips every minute of the time consumed in unfolding nine and a half reels. As we see it on the screen it is "The Barrier" as Rex Beach penned it. We see these types of red blood and cold steel, stalwart Americans all, walk out of the pages of the book. Edgar Lewis brings before our eyes in living flesh the men and women of our imagination. In the opening scene we feel the thrill that comes upon the greeting of those we have been led highly to regard even though we have never before met them. At the finish, as 'Poleon Doret blithely sings his song of tears and drives his canoe out into the waters of the river on his way to his "far countree," we share with those he leaves behind in the sorrow of his going.

Let us come back to Mr. Lewis and his selection of types. Of the six men named in the printed cast there is but one under six feet in height. The exception is "No Creek" Lee, the man who has hunted gold for forty years and the only man in Alaska minus the honor of having a creek named for him. Russell Simpson is John Gaylord of the prologue, "Old Man" Gale of the story proper. Howard Hall is John Bennett, alias Stark. Victor Sutherland is Lieutenant Meade Burrell. Mitchell Lewis is 'Poleon Doret, Edward Roseman is Runnion, W. J. Gross is Lee, Mabel Julienne Scott is Merridy of the prologue, and Necia, the heroine of the tale; Mary Kennevan Carr is Alluna. It is what might be described as a picture cast—that is, composed of screen-trained players—and every last one makes good. To A. Gil-Spear goes the credit for a smooth script. Edward Earle was the photographer.

Miss Scott shines forth as a sterling player. She has a winning personality, and she has a sure touch, whether the moments be those of playfulness or of tragedy. Mr. Simpson as the awkward miner in love with the school teacher or as the sad-eyed, drawn and bearded storekeeper in fear of an indictment drawn in mistake is a figure of pathos. He makes you feel the steel that glitters in his eye. 'Poleon in the book is a great character. Mitchell Lewis makes of his screen counterpart also a great character, one of the greatest in the picture. He has the bulk and the physiognomy and the art to portray this most lovable French-Canadian, who on more than one occasion proves his wonderful affection for

Scene from "The Barrier" (Beach).

Necia. Mr. Hall gives us a splendid interpretation of Stark. Mr. Sutherland is a wholesome, everyday army officer.

The story is a series of dramatic situations, many of them of genuine power. One in particular that in intensity will match any that this writer recalls is the drawing out by 'Poleon of Burrell as to his intentions toward Necia, with the girl who supposes herself a half-breed hiding behind the door. The lieutenant, brought face to face with an issue that has been uppermost in his mind every minute for weeks when not in the company of Necia, hesitates, temporizes. The girl comes from her place of concealment, denounces her lover and tells him she has been playing with him, that she is to marry 'Poleon on Sunday. The soldier, with the world suddenly turned upside down, strikes 'Poleon. The lion-hearted Canadian, knowing the affection of Nicia for Burrell, does not raise a hand. He tells Burrell Necia's love is for the soldier, not for the trapper. The soldier, ashamed, contrite, broken in spirit, stumbles out of the room.

And there are many other moments, any one of which would put over an ordinary production. There is the suspense of Scene from "The Barrier" (Beach).

Gaylord's escape with little Merridy following the incident in Bennett's saloon; the lieutenant's encounter with Runnion and 'Poleon's smashing of a bottle over the tough's revolver; the squaw and the knife; the first kiss; the decision of Gale to surrender himself and declare Necia of straight white blood; the battle in the dark between Gale and Stark; the pursuit of Runnion by 'Poleon and the fight between the two on the sand spit.

There are laughs, too, in good measure, sprinkled through the story. Many of these center about old "No Creek" Lee, both before and after his "strike." Then there are the two little half-breeds with the presents 'Poleon has brought them—the air-gun, the dog and the rubber boots.

In pathos the story reaches its height at the close. Runnion is dead. Stark is badly wounded and will cause no more trouble. The lieutenant and Necia are married. Gale has recovered from the effects of his battle with Stark. 'Poleon, after removing from his canoe the two mites of weeping stowaways, paddles out into the river. He sings:

Yours is a heart that laughter cheers,
Mine is a heart that's full of tears.
Long have I loved, I love her yet;
Leave her I can, but not forget.

Valkyrien in "The Image Maker."

Valkyrien, the celebrated Danish beauty, stars in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Image Maker." This picture has a very unusual plot, as it deals with pre-existence and tells of a love that lasted through the centuries. Valkyrien in it plays two parts—the one that of a beautiful Egyptian girl of low degree who wins the love of a great noble, and, secondly, the incarnation of the girl in modern life in America. Such a story furnishes many opportunities for striking contrasts. Valkyrien's charming personality never appeared to better advantage than in this picture. The atmosphere of ancient Egypt in the first part of the picture is true to history and furnishes a great contrast to the modern life which is well presented in the latter half. The picture was produced by Thanhouser.

"A Modern Monte Cristo" on February 4.

Vincent Serrano, who will be seen February 4 in the Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster play, "A Modern Monte Cristo," gives to that drama the element of finish shown in his famous characterization of Lieut. Denton in "Arizona." Mr. Serrano was accused of the murder done by Tony in Augustus Thomas' great play more than one thousand times, close to an acting record for appearance in one part. "A Modern Monte Cristo" was written by Lloyd Lonergan and directed by W. Eugene Moore. Mr. Serrano is supported in "A Modern Monte Cristo" by Thomas A. Curran, Boyd Marshall, Gladys Dore and Helen Badgeley. The story was filmed at Jacksonville, Fla., and Block Island, N. Y., with some locations near New Rochelle.

General Film Company.

THE WRECKED STATION (Kalem), Jan. 20.—In this number of the "Hazards of Helen" series Helen Gibson exhibits considerable nerve and her stunts register a thrill. She is picked up by a steam shovel, thrown into a dirt car and from that is dumped into a freight car. She releases the brakes of this car and leaps from it to a speeding train. The freight car crashes into and wrecks the Lone Point station. This all comes about when Helen is pursued by a man who knows that she has the proof that he is a thief. Miss Gibson has unusually hazardous work to do in this reel. With her in the cast are George Routh, George Williams, Babe Crisman and Richard Johnson.

THE RAILROAD CLAIM INTRIGUE (Kalem), Jan. 27.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series. Helen Gibson in this reel leaps from the saddle of her horse to a moving freight train. She climbs over the cars to the cab, causing to have the train stopped just as it is about to crash into an automobile that is stalled on the track at the crossing. In this way she saves the life of an unconscious man in the automobile, and is instrumental in the capture of two men who have made it their business to have autos wrecked and handsomely paid for by the railroad. An automobile is wrecked during the course of the reel. In the cast with Miss Gibson are G. A. Williams, G. A. Routh and Richard Johnson.

IN PAYMENT OF THE PAST (Selig), Jan. 6.—A one-reel romantic drama, of only average worth. It tells the story of a young art student finding in a stewardess the model he seeks. Reincarnation is touched upon, and in the old days the artist and the stewardess were lovers. The present meeting is brought about when the parents of the art student meet up with the stewardess on board a transatlantic liner. In the cast are Robyn Adair, E. J. Brady, Virginia Kirtley and Eugenie Forde.

THE BOYCOTTED BABY (Vim), Jan. 4.—Babe Hardy and Kate Price are as fat and funny as ever in this comedy reel. The humor is too suggestive at times, the parentage of a baby being laid at the door of two unmarried couples. They live in Cordeliaville, where love-making is banned and where babies are taboo. The baby is abandoned by its mother and placed by a tramp at Kate's door. After being transferred around many times, the baby finally reaches its mother's arms by means of the same tramp that first found it.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 22 (Essanay), Jan. 10.—Cartoon burlesques on topical subjects share this reel with scenic. The cartoons give a new and funny idea of the U. S. Navy. We also see a whirlwind wrestling match at which sleep tickets are given out. The scenic portion of the reel shows views from Vancouver to Taku Glacier. Good photography enhances the value of the scenic.

THE TRAIL OF GRAFT (Kalem), Jan. 12.—A number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series. George Larkin's stunt in this reel consists of a leap from a window of a building across an open space to the coping of a roof. After he gains the roof he assists Ollie Kirkby across the intervening space by leaning on his back and holding a board that is too short to quite reach otherwise. This means of leaving the building is taken when the reporter and the political boss's stenographer are locked in a room in which poison fumes are sent. They are locked in the room because the political boss discovers that his stenographer is giving the reporter incriminating letters. Besides Mr. Larkin there are seen Ollie Kirkby and Director Robert Ellis.

THE RESURRECTION OF GOLD BAR (Kalem), Jan. 10.—No. 22 of "The Girl from Frisco" series. A review printed in last week's issue says of this two-reel episode: "In story interest and in the methods used in the screen narration it takes its place as one of the best releases of the series." The story tells of the resurrection of the town in which Barbara Brent was born. This comes about when, through kindness, an old man's mine is "salted" with nuggets. A subsequent stampede rehabilitates the town.

WHEN THE MAN SPEAKS (Essanay), Jan. 6.—Fourth of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" series. This two-reel number is an acceptable two-reel drama. It shows considerable strength. The story concerns a wife who adores courageous men. She chides and despises the man she marries because of his apparent cowardice. With the husband it is repression of his anger and not cowardice that makes him take insult. Goaded by his wife's attitude he finally breaks loose and shows his real "cave-man" self and so wins back his wife's love and the respect of his friends. In the cast are Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, Sydney Ainsworth, Thomas Commerford and John Cossar.

STARRING IN WESTERN STUFF (Selig), Jan. 8.—An actionful comedy-drama with Tom Mix in the leading role. Lots of hard riding is introduced into the picture. The story tells of a cowboy who finds her in the flesh when the film actors go out on location. The cowboys stage a kidnapping act to give Tom a chance for the hand of the girl. He wins. There are good exteriors and the film is altogether acceptable.

AMONG THOSE PRESENT (Essanay), Jan. 9.—An interesting two-reel number—one of the "Black Cat" features. There is a vein of subtle humor and an element of romance. The screen story tells of a society idler whom circumstances compel to become an amateur detective. He is suspected of being a "Raffles," but finally ferrets out the real criminal and in so doing proves to the girl's father that he is not altogether useless. The leading players are Richard C. Travers, Gertrude Glover and John Cossar.

INFIDELITY (Erbograph), Jan. 11.—The story of this five-reel photoplay is well put together and well acted by a company headed by Anna Q. Nilsson and Eugene Strong. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

GOD OF LITTLE CHILDREN (Apollo), Jan. 18.—An intense five-reel story of regeneration, presenting a star performer of high merit and great promise in Miss Alma Hanlon.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE (Bluebird), Jan. 22.—The Grand Canyon of Arizona is the spot referred to in the title. This wonder of nature is skilfully utilized in a five-reel photoplay of considerable merit. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE ISLAND OF DESIRE (Fox), Jan. 1.—An island in the South Seas, cannibals, a volcanic eruption and no end of adventure are all in this five-reel photoplay. George Walsh makes a vigorous hero, and the entire cast is well selected. The picture was reviewed at length on page 243 of the January 13 issue.

A MODERN CINDERELLA (Fox), Jan. 8.—June Caprice is the star of this five-reel comedy, which is a modern setting of the old fairy tale. The picture is well suited to the star's method of acting. It was reviewed at length on page 357 of the January 20 issue.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE (Fox), Jan. 8.—The evils of child labor is the theme of this five-reel screen play in which William Farnum plays the leads. The production and the acting are of good quality. The picture was reviewed on page 357 of the January 20 issue.

BITTER TRUTH (Fox), Jan. 15.—A sensational drama in five reels, with comic relief, this photoplay is an excellent example of its class. Virginia Pearson is the star of the production. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

K-E-S-E, Inc.

THE LAST SENTENCE (Edison), Jan. 1.—A five-reel photoplay made from a novel by Maxwell Gray, the story contains too much plot and a number of impossible situations. Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt have the leading roles. The picture was reviewed on page 243 of the January 13 issue.

THE PRINCESS OF PATCHES (Selig), Jan. 22.—This is a well-acted, well-directed, well-photographed and well-told story in five reels, and will hold interest throughout. Violet De Biccari, Vivian Reed, Charles Le Moyne and Frank Weed are especially strong in their characterizations. Directed by Al. Green, the adaptation by Gilson Willets from Mark Swan's melodrama of the same title. An extended review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation

A WIFE BY PROXY (Columbia-Metro), Jan. 8.—A five-part production featuring Mabel Taliaferro with a competent supporting cast. The picture will be found entertaining, but in spots somewhat faulty. Mabel Taliaferro does exceptionally fine work in the opening scenes of the production. A full review will be found in the issue of January 20.

CAVE MAN'S BUFF (Drew-Metro), Jan. 8.—This is a clean, entertaining one-reel comedy, featuring Sydney Drew and Mrs. Sydney Drew. The plot hinges about the timidities of two bachelors with regard to proposals of matrimony, and in the course of the picture the second bachelor falls in love with the pretty woman who has become the wife of bachelor Number One, without knowing the situation. A full review will be found in our issue of January 20.

UNCLE SAM'S DEFENDERS, NO. 1 (Mutual), Jan. 5.—Under the special title, "From Civilian to Soldier."* This pictures the Pittsburgh men in camp, with the famous Rookies' drill. Then follow scenes from the recent encampment at Van Cortlandt Park, New York, and splendid dress parade drills at West Point. Recruiting, examination and swearing in of new men is pictured carefully. This gives a good insight into the preliminaries of military service in the United States.

THE GIRL WHO CAN COOK (Star), Jan. 6.—A little comedy number, showing the efforts of two girls in one house to win the love of a young man. The negro maid suddenly resigns, leaving the girl with social aspirations to cook the meal. She fails miserably and the second girl, a homebody named Mary, proves her worth at the gentle art. Lois Meredith and Marguerite Chaffee play the two girls. A fairly pleasing number of the domestic comedy type.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 106 (Gaumont), Jan. 10.—Many diversified features are included in this—Tobogganing in Massachusetts, skating at a big New York hotel, Philadelphia in costume celebration, Terre Haute operating its own coal mine, a Galveston fire, and war side-lights.

JERRY'S WINNING WAYS (Cub), Jan. 11.—A rather amusing comedy featuring George Ovey. Some of the scenes savor slightly of vulgarity, but none of them are strictly objectionable. Most of the scenes of the picture take place in a boarding house where Jerry's sweetheart has been isolated by her father. Jerry's mistakes in trying to rescue the young lady are very funny.

UNCLE SAM'S DEFENDERS, NO. 2 (Mutual), Jan. 12.—Under the special title, "Our Boys at the Border." This collection of scenes, taken during the actual service along the border, gives a fascinating study of some of the inside details of military life in camp. Setting up tents, packing guns through the mountains on burros, finding ranges and practice in indirect firing are pictured; also manipulation of machine and siege guns, field maneuvers, and the like. The construction of shells is an interesting feature. Timely and instructive.

REEL LIFE NO. 37 (Gaumont), Jan. 14.—This number of "Reel Life" presents nicely detailed illustrations of "The Kid Glove Industry," "Producing Perfect Pickles," "The Care of the Teeth," and "A Fish Screen for Irrigation Ditches." Reviewed in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of February 3.

MUTUAL TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 11 (Gaumont), Jan. 16.—From Gibraltar to Algeciras furnishes the opening theme, giving close views of the great British fortress. Scenes in Tunis, the farthest north portion of Africa, are full of picturesque interest. Then comes a motor trip through the Maritime Alps, and some fascinating views of the Bois De Boulogne, Paris. A fine number.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 70 (Gaumont), Jan. 17.—"A Trip Up Mount Lowe" is the subject of this number, which while it is interesting is not as attractive as other number of the "See America First" series. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS, NO. 11 (Signal), Dec. 31.—"The Ace High Loses" is the title of this number of the serial. It encompasses an effort on the part of "Dollar" Holmes to further delay the laying of the railroad to Shady Creek, for which, if finished by a certain date, "Dollar" Holmes is to pay Dawson the sum of $27,000. Helen figures thrillingly, as usual, in rescues and other manipulations. An interesting number.

THE GILDED YOUTH (Mutual Star Production), Jan. 1.—A five-part production featuring Richard Bennett. The picture follows the lines of comedy, but the story has been rather poorly constructed. It treats of the adventures of a youth who was sent to the city to make good, and eventually falls into millions through speculation. A full review of the production appears elsewhere.

THE BUTTERFLY GIRL (Mutual Star Production), Jan. 8.—A five-part production featuring Marguerita Fischer. The scene of the story is laid at San Diego in the grounds of the Panama Exposition, and centers about a young girl whose mother, near death, has sent her with her little sister to look up her aunt. The aunt, who, with her unscrupulous husband, runs a show at the exposition, figures as the human butterfly. The girl is persecuted for her beauty by her uncle, takes refuge with the Hawaiian players, and finally is taken to a good home by a rich family from Honolulu. The production has not much merit as a drama, but is interesting partly because of the exposition scenes which it presents.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

GREAT EXPECTATIONS (Famous Players), Jan. 8.—Jack Pickford has the role of Pip, the boy who was so singularly rewarded for an act performed under duress. Louise Huff is Estella, the protege of Miss Havisham, the eccentric. The picture is finely staged and well acted, and contains the essence of Dickens' great story. It was reviewed last week.

THE HAPPINESS OF THREE WOMEN (Morosco), Jan. 11.—House Peters and Myrtle Stedman lead the cast in this five-reel screen drama. The picture has merit and is well acted and produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

BETTY TO THE RESCUE (Lasky), Jan. 15.—Fannie Ward appears at the head of a good cast in a Lasky story that contains much to recommend it. It is reviewed in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE STOLEN INHERITANCE (Pathe), Jan. 28.—A one-reel re-issue of a Western story that is straight melodrama from start to finish. A very good example of its class of picture, as made four years back.

DRAMA'S DREADFUL DEAL (Rolin), Jan. 28.—"Skinny" Lampton and a lot of trick "props" supply most of the fun in this one-reel farce. It is full of broad comedy of the usual Rolin brand. The opening scene, where "Skinny" shows his bare feet, should be eliminated.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 16 (Pathe), Jan. 28.—The display of female fashions in this number of the Florence Rose review is as complete and as fascinating as ever. The number is called "North and South." "Butterflies and Bees," colored views, is on the same reel.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials.

THE IMAGE MAKER (Thanhouser), Jan. 21.—The scenes of this photoplay are divided between ancient Egypt and the life of today. Valkyrien is the star of the picture, which is entertaining all through. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

TWIN KIDDIES (Balboa), Jan. 28.—This little Mary Sunshine picture in which Marie Osborn has a dual role, has the same charm that was found in her earlier releases. She plays two children of different dispositions and keeps each distinct. A longer review in this issue.

Selznick Pictures

PANTHEA (Selznick), January.—The screen version of this stage play is an excellent piece of work. The story is feverish, and is finely played by Norma Talmadge and a large company. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation

LOVE UNDER COVER (Keystone-Komedy), Jan. 14.—The story of a girl who fell in love with the author of a book of poems, only to find that he was an old invalid. Mildly interesting.

THE PIPE OF DISCONTENT (Keystone-Komedy), Jan. 14.—An ingenious one-reel story of domestic infelicity rather tamely developed.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 54 (Universal), Jan. 10.—Football, dancing on skates, and sports in the snow are featured in this. Also numerous other entertaining events in this country and abroad.

UP THE FLUE (L-KO), Jan. 21.—The original title of this picture was "Mr. Shoestring in a Hole." A comment can be found on it under this title on page 361 of issue dated January 20.

A MACARONI SLEUTH (Nestor), Jan. 22.—A comedy number, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. This is done in good burlesque style and gets many laughs. The boob detective follows the Italian fruit peddler and his pals and releases the kidnapped girl. There is a funny mixup at the close.

THE HONEYMOON SURPRISE (Victor), Jan. 23.—A familiar comedy situation treated in a new way, by Capt. L. T. Peacock. The girl must marry the young man within 24 hours or lose her inheritance. They are married sight unseen, with a curtain between them. Later it develops they have already met. This is cleverly handled and carries the interest along nicely. Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church are pleasing in the leading roles.

BLACK EVIDENCE (Imp), Jan. 25.—This one-reel number, by John McDermott, features Kingsley Benedict, Lois Wilson and Malcolm Blevins. It accomplishes the difficult task of presenting a strong mystery in a single reel, and does it very neatly. There is no chance for unnecessary scenes, yet every point is covered. The crime, a murder, is unraveled by a young society man. The subject is a good one.

HELL BY THE ENEMY (Victor), Jan. 26.—Military burlesque, by Ben Cohn, featuring Pat Rooney as an officer leading the search for the Mexican bandit, Vanilla. The settings are satisfactory, but the action does not get up any great amount of humor. It is an offering of fair strength.

LOVE ME, LOVE MY BISCUITS (Joker), Jan. 27.—A comedy number, by Karl Coolidge, featuring Wm. Franey, Dolly Ohnet and Gale Henry. A young married man, about to receive a visit from his wealthy uncle, fears his wife's cooking will prove offensive, so he employs a maid. Trouble of the knockabout sort follows. The plot is not very strong, but a fair amount of humor is developed. An average number.

THE OLD TOYMAKER (Rex), Jan. 28.—A pleasing offering of the sentimental type, by H. A. Palowsky. Allan J. Holubar, Leah Baird and George C. Pearce appear. The story concerns an old toymaker who is fleeced by a broker. The latter's child becomes ill and cries for a doll which the toymaker is reluctant to part with. The old man finally relents and brings the doll to the child, when the father repays the lost money. The bringing of the doll to life makes an excellent touch. An enjoyable number, particularly for children.

HEART STRINGS (Red Feather), Jan. 22.—This five-reel number, by E. Magnus Ingleton, features Maude George, Francelia Billington, Allan J. Holubar, Irene Hunt, Paul Byron and Chas. Cummings. It tells the story of a woman of the vampire type who tries to lure away the lover of her own daughter, unawares. The story extends over two generations and has plenty of plot and action. None of the scenes are highly dramatic, yet the interest is well sustained throughout. It is well up to the average and better constructed than many features.

SOULS UNITED (Gold Seal), Jan. 23.—A three-reel subject, by Harry Dittmar, featuring Violet Mesereau and Harry Benham. The plot concerns a young doctor who goes to Africa to make a study of the tsetse fly and sleeping sickness. He finds a white girl, reared in the jungle by her father. In spite of his marriage to another, the doctor falls in love with the girl. Both die at the close. This is fairly good in general atmosphere, but lacks any great dramatic strength. It makes on the whole a number of average interest.

THE BATTLE OF LET'S GO (L-KO), Jan. 24.—A very funny military burlesque, in two reels, featuring Dan Russell, Vin Moore and Marjorie Ray. The former appears as Gen. Debility, in charge of troops on the Mexican border. Many laughable scenes occur, all handled in an inoffensive manner. The aeroplane scenes and fighting on the battlefield in the second reel are very well handled. The number is sure to prove successful.

A WIFE'S FOLLY (Big U), Jan. 25.—A two-reel subject, featuring Ben Wilson, Edna Hunter and others. The device of having the author write a story and then showing it in pictures has been used frequently, and in this case gives a weak ending to a tragic tale of considerable strength. The ordeal of the fisherman husband, whose wife deserts him temporarily, is quite strongly presented, though the part is slightly overacted in certain scenes. It would have been more in keeping with the beginning and ending if given a burlesque treatment all through. As it stands, the attempt to jump from humor to tragedy and back again is not very successful.

THE FUGITIVE (Imp), Jan. 26.—A two-reel subject, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Roy Stewart, Louise Lovely, Harry Carter and T. D. Crittenden. This concerns the efforts of one partner to win the affections of the other's wife. He sends Jim a fake telegram and then lures the wife to the office, where he attacks her. Jim arrives and kills his partner. He is then spirited away by his wife and uncle to a cabin in the woods. Here he is recognized, but escapes from his would-be captor. This makes an entertaining subject in spite of certain plot weakness. The hero was not forced to flee as he committed the crime in defense of his wife's honor. The good work of the cast helps the story immensely.

THE DARING CHANCE (Bison), Jan. 27.—A two-reel subject, by Harvey Gates, featuring Wm. V. Mong and Mina Cunard. This is a Western subject of more than average appeal. The girl's father plays poker with the itinerant barber and pledges his daughter in the game. The barber wins and runs away with the prize. The barber is suspected of a hold-up and captured. Later it turns out that the girl's father is the real criminal, but the barber squares things by paying back the the stolen money. The plot is well built and the number decidedly entertaining as presented.

JUNE MADNESS (Gold Seal), Jan. 30.—A three-reel comedy-drama, by Willis Woods. The opening reel, introducing the young business man who hates women, has a fine vein of humor in it. He goes west and is held up by an alleged girl bandit. He falls in love with the girl he believes committed the deed, though she is really innocent. The last two reels are somewhat drawn out, but the story holds the interest quite strongly throughout.

FAKING FAKERS (L-KO), Jan. 31.—A two-reel subject, featuring Phil Dunham, as Bonehead Bill, in charge of a ball-throwing concession. The scenes are laid at a beach resort. Phil lets the boys throw at his cranium, three balls for a nickel. This starts off well, but does not develop complications of sufficient interest to prove highly successful. It makes an average release of the nonsensical sort.

Greater Vitagraph

HER RIGHT TO LIVE (Blue Ribbon), Jan. 22.—The scenes of this five-reel Blue Ribbon feature take place in a small city, and Peggy Hyland impersonates an orphan girl who is ill-treated by her uncle. The picture is very well played. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

World Pictures.

THE BONDAGE OF FEAR (Peerless), Jan. 23.—Ethel Clayton is the star of this five-reel screen drama and plays with her usual skill. The plot holds interest and the director has availed himself of an excellent opportunity to use some picturesque scenes. The cast is competent. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous

THE BARRIER (Rex Beach Pictures Company).—A remarkable screen reproduction of Rex Beach's Alaskan story is this picture, running a little over nine reels. Edgar Lewis directed it. The acting of a screen-trained cast is of the best. The picture is reviewed at length on another page.

HEANEY HAS "THE VALLEY OF FEAR."

Sherlock Holmes again makes his appearance in the latest A. Conan Doyle's detective story, "The Valley of Fear." The scenes are laid in a mining district of the United States and carried across the waters to London. The film, like the story, is full of action, mystery and deductions, and grips the audience from the moment it is flashed on the screen to the finish.

Sir A. Conan Doyle, the author, displayed the keenest interest in the writing of the scenario, and personally gave his attention to the cast and brought forth the Sherlock Holmes as he pictures and understands him to be. This picture is sold on a state right basis and is handled exclusively by John W Heaney, 1480 Broadway, Longacre Building, New York City.

The name of this concern is the American Standard Film Service, and is a branch office of Chicago. It is the intention of this concern to release at least two comedies a week, and from one to two features monthly. It is the intention of Mr. Wheeler to very shortly open branch offices in Cleveland and adjoining large cities.

A Gold Rooster By Arrow

"Crime and Punishment" Will Be Released on Pathe Program About February 1.

"CRIME AND PUNISHMENT," the first Arrow Gold Rooster play on the Pathe program since "The Woman's Law," will probably be released the last week in February. The announcement is of more than passing interest, since Derwent Hall Caine, son of Hall Caine, the famous author, and himself a famous actor, is the star of the play which is adapted from the well known book by Fyodor Dostoevsky.

The book has enjoyed a wide popularity and is one of the few stories by Russian authors which are well known in the United States. Readers of it will remember how strongly dramatic it is and how great are its possibilities for the screen. Briefly, it is the tale of a high minded young Russian student, who becomes a radical and in consequence has to flee to the United States, leaving his mother and sister behind. In America he sees the same forces of oppression and injustice at work as existed in his native land. He broods over it, until, in a moment of aberration he commits a crime in order to get money to give to the poor. Falling in love with a young girl, she leads his mind back to a healthy state and persuades him to give himself up to the authorities.

Arrow has spared no expense in the production of this picture. The Russian atmosphere in the early scenes is noteworthy for its fidelity to fact. Various mob scenes are particularly well done and the scenario preserves faithfully the spirit of the book. The acting is particularly good. Mr Caine, as the young student, gives a finished characterization. The supporting cast is excellent, including as it does Marguerite Courtot and Sidney Bracy.

With such a cast, the excellent direction by Lawrence McGill, the fame of the story and the lavishness of the production, "Crime and Punishment" should be a big drawing card everywhere.

ETHEL BARRYMORE AND COMPANY LEAVE FOR FLORIDA.

Ethel Barrymore, Metro's famous star, B. A. Rolfe, president of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., and John W. Noble, her director, with the supporting cast and executive staff, have gone to Jacksonville, Fla., where the exterior scenes for Miss Barrymore's screen version of Edward Sheldon's famous play "Egypt," will be made.

The company included Robert Whittier, William B. Davidson, William C. Mandeville, Frank Montgomery, Hugh S. Jeffrey, Mrs. Allen Walker, of the supporting cast. Of Mr. Noble's executive staff that went to the Florida Metropolis were Herbert T. Carleton, photographer, and his assistant, Marty Malone; Arthur Herrmann, property man; A. Fischer and four others selected for lesser important roles in this great film.

NOTABLE CAST IN "THE LONELY HEART."

Few motion picture stars have had the support that is given Miss Florence La Badie, Thanhouser star, in the newest Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster play now being taken, "The Lonely Heart," by Agnes C. Johnston, and directed by Frederic Sullivan. In the story Miss La Badie as an artist loses her sight, then regains it, only to see her lover in a compromising situation. There is a great house party scene, the guests being later aroused at midnight and making their appearance in the dancing hall in pajamas and negligees.

Supporting Miss La Badie are Boyd Marshall, Ida Darling, Ethyle Cooke, Gladys Leslie, Harris Gordon, Walter (Fatty) Hiers, Arthur LeVien, Clay Carroll, a "discovery" of Mr. Sullivan's; Sam Niblack, Thomas A. Curran, Inda Palmer and Helen Badgley.

"ACE HIGH," THIRD STORY OF GIRL REPORTERS' SERIES.

A smashing adventure in the dance halls of the East Side in New York City by "Jessie Forsythe," a young girl reporter, who has been instructed by her managing editor to explore the field for "color" in writing a series of Sunday stories, gives the plot to the third story of "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," the Mutual Film Corporation's thrilling newspaper story series, entitled "Ace High."

What Miss Forsythe (Helen Green in real life), really dug up, was the story of the year in metropolitan journalism—the actual inside facts with regard to a conspiracy that had long baffled the political editors of the paper.

NEWMAN PLANT ENLARGED.

This firm, which manufactures brass poster frames, easels, railings, grills, choppers, etc., for theaters, are expanding with remarkable strides.

S. J. Newman, upon being interviewed, stated that their representatives are reporting excellent prospects for the year 1917, and that the last year was a very prosperous one. They expect shortly to send their new 1917 catalogue to press, but due notice will be given in their advertisements in the near future.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE GREAT SECRET" (Metro).

Phillip Gross, who attended Professor Baker's class in the drama at Harvard University, and is an expert on pageants, was enthusiastic in his praise of Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as stars, after witnessing a showing of the first five chapters of it.

"The serial is the best I ever have seen," said Mr. Gross. "It has a good dramatic story and is full of action and 'pep' all the way through. The acting of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne is superb. Particularly was I impressed by the 'close-ups' of Bushman and Bayne. In these parts of the film fine character delineation and subtle pantomimic effects were demanded. Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne produce those effects with rare artistry.

"What impressed me particularly about the serial is that it runs along like a book. In fact, my sensation while watching it was that I was reading a powerful story, chapter by chapter. Each chapter of this screen novel holds the spectator in suspense.

"One of the best of these 'suspense scenes' is when Beverly Clarke has been kidnapped and William Strong, the hero, is held at bay in the rendezvous of the New York gangsters. Here the spectator gets flashes of the police on their way to raid the place, while Strong's life is in peril and Beverly is being tortured.

"Then comes the raid itself, an unusual police scene for the screen. In the usual motion picture raids you see half a dozen bluecoats batter down a door and then begin fighting. But this raid is something new and realistic."

BOOK ON ADVERTISING "SEVEN DEADLY SINS."

In order to help the exhibitor who books "Seven Deadly Sins," the series of seven five-reel features to be released through the Triangle exchange at weekly intervals, McClure Pictures has compiled a comprehensive book that will be given to each exhibitor who show the group of photoplays.

A four-column page is devoted to each of the seven dramas. Newspaper stories and display ads in abundance are furnished the exhibitor in order to help him connect his theater with the vast amount of advertising that McClure Pictures has been giving to "Seven Deadly Sins."

Twenty-seven different electros have been provided to aid the exhibitor in illustrating his house advertising.

A feature of the book is a department suggesting special stunts and special ways of unusual advertising to help the exhibitor let the public know where "Seven Deadly Sins" may be seen.

FOX RELEASES TWO PRODUCTIONS JANUARY 22.

William Fox will release two productions for the week of January 22—Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris," an adaptation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and Gladys Coburn in "The Primitive Call." "The Darling of Paris" is Miss Bara's first picturepiay under the new Fox policy for 1917.

MARY MILES MINTER IN "THE GENTLE INTRUDER."

Mary Miles Minter will appear as the companion to an elderly woman in the newest of the Mutual Mary Miles Minter features being produced at the American studio under the direction of James Kirkwood. "The Gentle Intruder," as the picture will be named, is well up to the standard of the features previously offered in which this young star has appeared, and gives her wide opportunity in a difficult role. At the same time through all the scenes Miss Minter manages to convey the spirit of clean, wholesome comedy, which has made her work distinctive.

The story tells of a young girl who has been defrauded of an inheritance by her uncle's lawyer, posing as a protecting friend. Into the house of the man who has taken what rightfully belongs to her, she comes as a companion to an elderly woman, and through this association finally brings the lawyer's self-seeking, society-crazed family into a realization of their shortcomings.

TO HANDLE "CIVILIZATION" IN JERSEY.

The Civilization Film Corporation, Frank G. Hall, president, has taken the entire first floor of the Strand Theatre Building, Newark, N. J., where they are making extensive alterations and preparations to booking of the twelve reel film production, "Civilization," and the great feature of the hour, "War's Women." These features are now being released to the trade on a daily rental basis.

The Civilization Film Corporation will, from time to time, release other big productions, "and it is our policy," said Mr. Hall, "to handle nothing but the very largest productions, and these will be released to the exhibitor at the lowest possible figure, consistant with a reasonable percentage of profit."

"THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY" (Bluebird).

George Hivley's story, "The Toll of Vengeance," has been adapted to the screen by Fred Mynton and directed for Bluebird by William Worthington. "The Devil's Pay Day" has been selected as the screen title, as quite expressive of the outcome of the plot. Franklyn Farnum will be the star and Leah Baird will be his leading lady. The release date is set for Jan. 29.

Mr. Farnum has appeared as a light comedian in an earlier Bluebird, "A Stranger from Somewhere," but he has, in "The Devil's Pay Day," a vastly different role—melodramatic in the extreme—to express his versatility. Leah Baird is, in this feature, appearing for the only time in Bluebirds. Charles Perley, Scene from "The Devil's Pay Day" (Bluebird).

Gertrude Aster, Seymour Hastings and Countess Du Cello are among the supporting players.

"The Devil's Pay Day" abounds in sensational episodes, winding up with a crime scene and attendant court trial that gives opportunity for big scenes and settings. One particularly attractive section of the film will display scenes at Coronado Beach, Cal., a resort near Los Angeles, at the height of the season.

Marie Doro Heads Paramount January 22

Will Be Seen in "Lost and Won," to Be Followed by Anita King in "The Golden Fetter."

MARIE DORO in the Lasky production of "Lost and Won," and Wallace Reid and Anita King in the Lasky production of "The Golden Fetter," will be the two big features on the Paramount Program for the week of January 22. Surrounding the program will be three short reel features; the fiftieth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the fifty-first of the series of "weekly trips around the world," personally conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes the travelers to Ottawa and Toronto, and a Black Diamond comedy entitled "He Did It Himself."

Marie Doro's appearance this week is the first since her great success in the screen production of Dickens' "Oliver Twist." "Lost and Won" was written specially for Miss Doro by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, two of the most successful playwrights and authors in the country. Playing opposite her in this picture is Elliott Dexter, her husband, it being the first time they have co-starred since their Famous Players adaptation of "Diplomacy." In the supporting cast are Carl Stockdale, Maym Kelso, Robert Gray, C. H. Geldert, Sydney Dean and a number of other well known Lasky players. This production is, in its intensity, a story of dramatic appeal, acting ability and photographic excellence, equal to the best of the Lasky photoplays.

Wallace Reid and Anita King in "The Golden Fetter" have a thrilling story to portray on the screen, it having come from the pen of Charles Kenney Jackson, and is based on the author's short story, which was carried in Collier's some years ago. This will be Mr. Reid's first appearance on the screen since his wonderful success in Cecil B. DeMille's greatest spectacle of "Joan the Woman."

The story deals with a young New England school teacher who has been cheated into purchasing stock in a mine in Alaska, and who, to prove to her own mind that she has not been swindled, goes to see the "wonderful mine" and finds that it is nothing but a hill with no improvements and no gold, silver and other minerals coming forth. But she does run into a gang of unscrupulous miners and opens a school, the attendance of which consists of but one person with whom she soon falls in love. There is plenty of action, a great deal of heart interest, and an excellent amount of suspense in the picture.

The fiftieth edition of the Paramount Pictographs contains four leading subjects in which there are contained plenty of action and human interest. The leading subject is that of the dangerous and thrilling winter sport of ice-boating, which is enjoying a tremendous vogue throughout the northern part of the country. In this edition also there is shown how industrial diamonds "carborundum" are made, this material being second in hardness only to the diamond, and which is composed of nothing less than sand, salt and sawdust. Another interesting subject is that of the remarkable advance that has been made in landscape gardening by experts in their successful transplantation of big trees. A unique piece of comedy plastique is also contributed in this edition by Ashley Miller, in which he shows how the high cost of living has been brought about.

Burton Holmes takes his fellow-journeyers to Ottawa and Toronto, where he shows many unique and interesting places the average traveler has not had the opportunity of seeing.

On of the most screaming comedies Paramount has issued will be released this week in "He Did it Himself," a Black Diamond Comedy produced for Paramount by the United States Motion Picture Corporation.

GAMBLERS ROUNDED UP FOR FOX PHOTOPLAY.

A round-up was made last week of the elite in the White Light palaces of chance. The automobiles which came to the doors of the Broadway rendezvous brought their imposing array of gamblers and confidence men not to police headquarters, however, but to the Fort Lee studios of Fox Film Corporation. Instead of being penalized for their intimate knowledge of three-card monte and other indoor pastimes they were remunerated highly for it.

The occasion was the filming of the big gambling scene in the Valeska Suratt picture now under way. Director Kenean Buel had a "model" gambling den built after Richard Canfield's famous place. The fittings alone cost several thousand dollars, and were shipped into Fort Lee from Elkhart, Ind.

Practically the entire studio floor was occupied by the setting. Tapestries hung on the walls, heavy carpets covered the floors, and the outfit included two roulette tables, one hazard table, two faro tables and one dice table. The five-dollar-a-day extras were sadly out of place in the million-dollar atmosphere, so with a half-dozen autos and offers of twenty dollars apiece for a few hours' work, Mr. Buel soon had the necessary element to populate the scene.

The fleet of cars had not gone more than five blocks on the way to the Fort Lee ferry, when it was halted by a policeman who recognized many of those inside.

Mr. Buel told the bluecoat the reason for the gamblers' presence, but acted on his advice and proceeded the rest of the distance in closed automobiles.

The men played with a fervor that was enlightening, but they seemed to enjoy more than the prospect of the twenty dollars, the manner in which their huge diamond studs and dazzling rings shone and flashed under the big studio lamps.

New African Pictures

Splendid Series Taken by J. C. Hemment to Be Shown Soon in New York.

Jack Goldberg, president of the Consolidated Motion Picture Industries Company, announces the completion of a new series of Wild Animal and Educational pictures. They constitute an entire evening's entertainment with lecture by J. C. Hemment, the man who first introduced the famous Paul J. Rainey pictures in this country, which were taken by himself and co-workers.

These new African Safari picture are most interesting, artistic, educational. Every scene shows nature's true colors, which were made possible through the autochrome process.

In order to photograph life on the equator as it really is, two year's time was taken and $100,000 spent. The camera men were forced into many difficult and dangerous positions at times, and suffered many hardships before the picture was completed. This picture shows the different modes of life, the natives' struggles, pleasures, government, form of entertainment, women, fighting of the different tribes, hunting of ferocious animals, and one scene in particular where there are over a million ants in a battle for life. This is one of the greatest scenes ever taken in the history of photography, but these are only a few of the many interesting features you will see in the most wonderful picture of the twentieth century.

Arrangements are being completed to show these pictures on Broadway as soon as a theater can be obtained.

BIG FLOOD A FEATURE OF "JIM BLUDSO."

Nigger Slough, a swamp near Los Angeles made famous by Lincoln Beachey, Porter Adams and other celebrated wizards of the air as an aviation exercise grounds, was made the scene of several thrilling episodes in the new Triangle-Fine Arts Mississippi river drama, "Jim Bludso," in which Wilfred Lucas is starred.

The marsh was selected for the picture location because it is probably the only spot in Southern California that resembles the bottom-lands of the lower Mississippi. Water which seeps into it from the nearby ocean is held back by a dam which keeps the section dry enough for traffic during the greater part of the year. In the rainy season, however, the ground is several inches under water.

To carry out the requirements of the story it was necessary for the company to erect an entire village on the swamp, patterned after the picturesque communities of ante-bellum days. The marsh was plotted off into plantations and the residences and negro cabins typical of a Southern rural hamlet were constructed. Here the flood scenes of the film production were enacted, and as a climax the entire settlement was swept away by a torrent of water in realistic imitation of the "Father of Waters" on a spring freshet rampage.

The flood was produced by the opening of the swamp dam which loosed a raging river that razed the frame structures like houses of cards.

MRS. BALFOUR NOTED FOR "MOTHER" ROLES.

Mrs. Sue Balfour, who plays Mrs. Mathilda Clarke, mother of Beverly Clarke, the role taken by Beverly Bayne in Metro's serial, "The Great Secret," holds the champion all around "stage mother" medal. Mrs. Balfour, who has a sweet, matronly face, began "mothering" stage favorites back in the good old stock company days, when she was a prominent member of Proctor's stock company in New York, and Creston Clarke's company in Philadelphia. Then she married August Balfour of Charles Frohmann's "Jane" company, but this did not pry her loose from her mothering habit. An engagement with Frank Mayo's "Pud-d'nhead Wilson" followed and once again she had to be addressed as "mamma."

Ten years ago she began playing in pictures, hoping to get away from other roles. But such was not to be. She was cast for the title role in her very first picture, "The Woman Who Knew." And so it went on—"mothering" Mary Pickford in her first big success; also Marguerite Clarke in "The Wildflower;" Jane Grey in "The Little Grey Lady;" Mary Nash in "The Broken Road;" Florence Nash in "Springtime;" William Courtleigh, Jr., and Ann Pennington in "Susie Snowflake;" Marguerite Courtot and Owen Moore in "The Kiss;" Anna Laughlin in "The Ordeal," and many others.

"DELAYED IN TRANSIT" (Selig).

William N. Selig calls particular attention to "Delayed in Transit," a two-reel western comedy-drama, released in General Film Company's service, on Monday, Jan. 15. This is one of Gilson Willet's best feature plays of shorter length, and gives every opportunity for an unusual cast of players, including Frank Campeau, Tom Mix and others. "Delayed in Transit" while carrying an intensely interesting plot, has its lighter moments when much real comedy is introduced in a logical manner. There is some expert horsemanship and beautiful scenery of the Mexican borderland.

On Saturday, Jan. 20, in regular service of the General Film Company, a one-reel comedy-drama of college life, "Cupid's Touchdown," is announced. The star is Jack Pickford, who is given every opportunity to present talented character work. Jack Pickford takes the part of a young country youth who goes to college and passes through the ordeals inseparable with college life. He finally wins honors for his alma mater and wins the girl of his choice.

Universal Program

"Heart Strings," a Red Feather Feature, Heads An Adequate List of Subjects for Week of Jan. 22.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company offers a varied and interesting program of releases for the week of January 22, 1917. Exceptional care is taken in the selection of the subjects for the weekly Universal programs and this week the exhibitor is assured of a program that will prove entertaining to all classes of audiences and which will bring in results at the box office.

The Red Feather five-act feature drama, "Heart Strings," heads the list. This production is the strongest ever presented under the Red Feather banner. It is a tense human interest story written by E. On the same day will be released the L-KO two act comedy, "The Battle of Let's Go," in which Dan Russell is guaranteed to cure the worst case of blues on record. This is an exceedingly funny L-KO. The other release of this date is the Big U one-act Indian drama, "The Red Goddess," with Mona Darkfeather in the principal role.

"A Wife's Folly," a stirring two-act drama under the Big U brand, will be released Thursday, January 25. This is an exciting story of the sea, written by James R. Friday, January 26, the two-act Imp drama, "The Fugitive," will be released. This is a novel photoplay of the underworld from the pen of E. Magnus Ingleton, and was directed by Fred A. Kelsey. Louise Lovely heads a well balanced cast, which includes Roy Stewart, Harry Carter, T. D. Crittenden and Vesta Pegg. Pat Rooney will appear in the Victor comedy, "Hell by the Enemy," on the same day. This is a different type of film comedy and affords many farcical opportunities for the star.

Four reels will be released Saturday January 27. The leading release will be "The Daring Chance," a two-act Bison drama of the West, written by Harvey Gates and produced by William V. Mong. Nellie Allen and William V. Mong head a cast of noted players. The Big U two-act animal drama, "Jungle Tragedy," featuring Marie Walcamp, is the leading release of Sunday, January 28. Other releases of this date are the Rex drama, "The Old Toymaker," with Allen Holubar and Leah Baird, and the Powers split reel, "Boomer Bill's Awakening," a comedy cartoon, and a Dr. Dorsey educational.

The fifth episode of the Grace Cunard and Francis Ford serial, "The Purple Mask,' entitled "Ablaze in Mid Air," will be released during the week. This is the most thrilling and exciting episode yet released in this great continued motion picture story.

NEW TRIANGLE KOMEDIES.

Much interest is being shown in the new single-reel Triangle Komedies, which are anounced for immediate release. Twelve komedies have been completed, and are declared by impartial critics to be crammed with clean fun and rib-tickling situations.

Titles and release dates have been announced as follows: "Love Under Cover," and "The Pipe of Discontent," January 14; "A Noble Fraud," and "Honest Thieves," January 21; "Heart Strategy," and "A Grab Bag Bride," January 28; "The Male Governess," and "The Road Agent," February 4; "Won by a Foot," and "His Deadly Undertaking," February 11; "The Telephone Belle," and "When Hearts Collide," February 18.

The demand for single-reel comedies has been insistent since the beginning of the motion picture industry, and will undoubtedly continue as long as pictures retain their universal appeal. The Triangle has utilized its best resources in putting on these short laugh-makers and this assurance should be enough to stimulate the interest of exhibitors generally.

FOUR SINGLE REELS FROM GAUMONT.

Having made the release of the final chapters of its sensational photo-novel, "The Vampires," the Gaumont Company has only four single-reels to offer as its contribution through Mutual for the week of Jan. 21. However, a great many exhibitors are only beginning to get "The Vampires" as there has been such a demand for it that the Mutual Film Corporation has been unable to supply the demand with the prints sent from Paris.

The first single-reel of the week is "Reel Life" No. 38, the Mutual Magazine in Film. This contains pictures of "Oranges in California," "The Air," "The Hydro-ski," "Automatic Apple Graders," and "How to Remove Shattered Glass."

January 23 brings to the screen the Gaumont "Tours Around the World" No. 12. The pictures take spectators on a trip from Bordeaux, France, down the Gironde river to Pauillac. Although Bordeaux is the fourth port of France it is situated 60 miles inland. There are also pictures of the Monastery of St. Thessalonica in Greece, and of the Gorges of the Nive river in the French Pyrenees.

"See America First" No. 72, which has on the same reel an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer, is released Jan. 24. It shows places in "Historic Virginia," picturing Williamsburg, Hampton, Norfolk, Hampton Roads, and the site of the surrender of Cornwallis. The Gaumont Kartoon Komic is entitled "Absent Minded Willie."

The fourth single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly, which is manufactured at the Gaumont laboratories.

VIOLA DANA IN PLAY OF EAST INDIAN LIFE.

Viola Dana, the brilliant and gifted little Metro star, has begun work on a new feature screen play, a five-part Metro-Columbia production called "A Wife by Purchase." This is a screen version of the popular novel of the same name by Paul Trent. John H. Collins is directing the production, with the assistance of Albert J. Kelly, and has adapted it for screen purposes. A. A. Cadwell is the photographer chosen to take the picture.

"A Wife by Purchase" is a story of India. Several of the principal characters are English, and there are finely contrasting scenes of rural England and life in India. In England the Country squires and their friends ride to the hounds, and in India there are seen the rites of the temple of Krishma, as well as the more simple life of native huts.

Miss Dana will be seen as Ameia, in whose veins runs both white and native blood. Miss Dana will be supported by a strong cast in the new production, most of the players being well known to Metro audiences. Robert Walker will have the part opposite the star, that of Claude Drummond, who saves Ameia from being sold into temple slavery. Augustus Phillips has been engaged for the part of Claude Drummond's friend, Jack Alston, commissioner of a neighboring district. Frank Currier has the important part of Major Dennison. Other well known players are Henry Leone, who will play Kundra Ram; George A. Wright, who will play the Earl of Ketherington; Harry Allen, and Adele Clarke.

"THE LITTLE MISSIONARY" (Essanay).

This is a Black Cat feature which presents Mary V. McAlister, Essanay's child star, in a very charming comedy-drama of life in an orphan asylum. The photoplay is not exclusively for children, but, on the contrary, carries its appeal in the main to adults. It bears a strong moral on the emptiness of a childless marriage. There are some scenes brimming with pathos, including bedtime in an orphanage, but the spectator finds relief from the powerful tension of these by the many lovable and ludicrous incidents of child life which are interspersed in the picture. Little Miss McAlister has been surrounded with an excellent company. The photography is perfect. "The Little Missionary" was released through the General Film Service January 16, and has a screen time of 28 minutes.

Strong Cast for George Beban's Picture

"His Sweetheart," Written by Star and Lawrence McCloskey, Embodies Novelties.

HELEN JEROME EDDY, Harry De Vere, Kathleen Kirkham, "Peaches" Jackson, Sarah Kernan, Robert E. Rolson, J. N. Leonard, Cecil C. Holland and Charles Yorba are among the principal players who will appear in support of George Beban in the Morosco-Paramount picture, "His Sweetheart," scheduled for release during the last of the month.

The story itself was written by George Beban and Lawrence McCloskey in collaboration before the former went west to begin work on the production. There are a great many novel features in the story, as Beban was determined that, despite the fact that it had an Italian setting, it was to be very different from anything which he had ever done before.

The very title itself is deceptive, for the sweetheart to which it refers is none other than Beban's mother, who comes to America to see her son after he has become a "wealthy" American. But of course the son does not prove to be quite so much of a plutocrat as she had expected to find him and her thrifty nature leads her to take a position as laundress in the home of the district attorney.

Here the prank of a baby in hiding a valuable piece of jewelry in the clothes basket leads to the arrest and conviction of the innocent, terrified Italian woman on the charge of theft. The son is furious at the conviction of "Mama Mia," and a gang of political enemies of the district attorney work upon his mind until he is persuaded to have revenge upon the prosecutor.

The plot as it is finally hatched calls for Joe to hide upon the golf links until the attorney drives his ball near a thicket. Then he is to seize the ball and substitute for it another, which has been filled with nitro-glycerine and which, when struck by the victim of the plan, will blow him to atoms and destroy every trace of guilt at the same time.

But when Joe has succeeded in making the substitution of the loaded ball and the attorney is in the very act of striking it, the Italian is horrified to find his victim's wife and daughter coming within range of the explosive. There is an instant of frightful indecision and then Joe rushes from his hiding place and plunges upon the ground before the attorney, in time to receive the blow which would have meant death to them all had it fallen upon the ball.

Of course there is another sweetheart in the story, but she does not know whether she really qualifies under that category until Joe's mother has been cleared of the charge against her.

The production was made under the direction of Donald Crisp, and for the street scenes in the Italian quarter, asphalt paving was actually laid in the studio yard, gutters and sidewalks were built and stores were erected along the street, which are said to resemble in every detail a typical section of the Italian quarter of New York.

TRIANGLE FEBRUARY 4TH RELEASES.

Wilfred Lucas, Thelma Salter and Frank Keenan are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for February 4. Lucas has a vehicle designed to test his versatility to the full in the Fine Arts picturization of John Hay's Pike County Ballads, entitled, "Jim Bludso," which is directed by Lucas and Tod Browning.

The story of "Jim Bludso" is one that Wilfred Lucas is excellently equipped to visualize, as it calls for picturesque character work and much action of the "red-blooded" variety. Bludso is engineer of the Mississippi River packet, "Prairie Belle," when the Civil War break out. He decides to join the Union forces, despite the protests of his wife, a pleasure-loving young woman from Natchez. This leads to an estrangement. Jim comes back from the war to find that his wife has eloped with a river gambler, deserting her little son. Later on, Merrill, the gambler, takes an interest in a contract to build the levee at Gilgal, Bludso's home town. Leaving Gabrielle as heartlessly as she had left Jim, Merrill goes to Gilgal. He has an encounter with Bludso, although the engineer does not identify him as the man who has broken up his home. A flood comes and to hide the miserable work that he and his partner have allowed on the levee, Merrill tears a hole in the bank and tries to lay the blame on Bludso and his negro, Banty Tim. Things look desperate for the pair, but Fate is on their side and they are enabled to establish their innocence. Bludso again becomes engineer of the Prairie Belle. While racing with another boat, the packet takes fire and burns, but the heroic engineer "holds her nozzle ag'in the bank till the last galoot's ashore." In the end his unfaithful wife dies and Jim is enabled to marry Kate Taggart, his early sweetheart.

In "The Crab," a Triangle Kay-Bee, Thelma Salter takes the part of Ivy Marten, a homeless waif, who is given a home by Foster Borrum (Frank Keenan), a grasping and unsympathetic man of affairs in a poor community. Borrum is not attracted to the child; he takes her in merely to pique the curiosity of his neighbors. Gossip of his ill-treatment of the little girl is spread among the neighbors, and Borrum is taken to court to answer the charges. His ward, who loves him in spite of his eccentric ways, becomes his star witness, and he is acquitted. In the end Borrum's hard shell of austerity is melted, and he decides to devote himself to the education and care of Ivy and the welfare of his neighbors.

"THE VAMPIRES" DEMAND DOES NOT SLACKEN.

Increasing in interest as it nears the concluding chapter, "The Vampires" retains its remarkable mastery over spectators by the unusual turns given to the sensational developments in the pursuit of the arch criminals of Paris by Phillip Guard and his intrepid companion, Normandin. The greatest of the Gaumont photo-novels released through Mutual works up to a stirring climax which has brought this comment from one of New York's most careful reviewers: "Unlike most final episodes of a series of this character, it is strong and sustaining in interest up to the final flicker. All the Vampires are accounted for, and Guard and his associates are spared to take part, we hope, in another series as interesting as this."

"Interest in photoplays that are highly melodramatic does not seem to wane," said an officer of the Gaumont Company in commenting upon the success of "The Vampires" and the photo-novel which preceded it, "Fantomas." "There remains a constant demand for pictures of this type, constant in the sense of consistent appreciation by spectators. The reviews in the trade press were uniformly words of praise, and to the reading of these by exhibitors we attribute much of the success of both pictures. These reviews bore out the Gaumont and Mutual advertising of the photo-novels, and exhibitors always appreciate and reward truthful advertising."

An interesting fact worthy of comment is that exhibitors who had not shown "Fantomas" but who booked "The Vampires" are now arranging to show the former after they have concluded the photo-novel depicting the activities of the arch criminals of Paris.

"A GIRL'S FOLLY" (World).

The next Brady-made World picture play with Robert Warwick as its star promises to contain a quite uncommon quantity of novelty. Its present title is "A Girl's Folly," substituted for "A Movie Romance," and its principal male character is a famous motion picture star.

The story is laid in the studio and "on location," and it shows pretty much everything about the manner in which a picture play is carried to completion, from the make-up of the star to the release.

The dressing rooms, the setting up of scenery, the adjustment of the cameras, the summoning of the players for an episode, the director's rehearsal with the people and the taking of the scene itself are all reproduced with realistic but mainly comic effect.

"A Girl's Folly" is distinctly a behind-the-scenes comedy, which does not even overlook the lunch room where the movie actors take their hurried repasts between calls to the stage.

The authors of this comedy are Frances Marion and Maurice Tourneur, to whom the palpably reasonable belief occurred that a photoplay with a pretty love story and also showing the inside machinery by which screen diversions are made might possess a double interest.

HARWELL HEADS UNITY.

H. W. Harwell has purchased the controlling interest in the Unity Service Corporation and has been elected president to succeed W. R. Merrill. The Unity Service Corporation is an independent exchange handling Unity and other releases and in the short time they have been in business have established an enviable reputation. Mr. Harwell is well known to the exhibitors in New York territory and with the additional assets of a pleasing personality and thorough knowledge of the exchange business should have no trouble in building up the lucrative business already established. Mr. Harwell has just concluded negotiations with A. J. Cobe, vice president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, whereby he will have the exclusive handling of the Tweedeldum Comidies and also "Glory," a seven-reel feature, in which Juanita Hansen and Kolb and Dill are featured, to be released by the Unity, January 15.

Violet Rays in Kalem Film

Special Tinting Process Used for Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter."

WHEN Robert Welles Ritchie wrote "The Violet Ray" for the Kalem Company to produce as one of the episodes of "Grant, Police Reporter," he called attention to the special tinting of the positive prints necessary to put over the unusual lighting effects. Not being versed in laboratory love, Author Ritchie could not know that the effects he had asked for were exceedingly difficult to obtain. Nor did the director, Robert Ellis, give more than a passing thought to the matter when he produced the picture.

The action centers around the efforts of two representatives of a foreign government to steal the secret of the violet ray from the inventor and his daughter, who has helped him perfect it. Failing to make the scientist divulge his secret, the conspirators turn the deadly rays upon his eyes, temporarily blinding hm. They are about to administer the same treatment to his daughter when Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle, bursts into the laboratory after a perilous walk across the electric light wires leading into the house near the third story window and covers them with his gun.

The tricky light effects used in this scene were a source of considerable perplexity to Kalem's factory superintendent, until by experiment he evolved an ultra violet tinting bath that would remain constant under all projection conditions. The tone would vary from ultra violet to a very pale shade, depending upon whether the film was projected with a direct or an alternating current. And since the realism of the entire picture depends upon these tints and tones in the positive prints, the Kalem organization naturally prides itself upon having solved this neat little chemical problem, which makes of "The Violet Ray" a novelty release out of the ordinary.

Thet infernal machine, whose deadly violet light will some day take its place along with wireless control of torpedoes in times of war, is convincingly demonstrated in this further adventure of Kalem's police reporter series. George Larkin, the man of thrills, and Ollie Kirkby, the versatile girl, head a brilliant cast of players.

FOUR ENTERTAINING SINGLE-REELS FROM GAUMONT.

The enviable reputation of the Gaumont Company as a producer of single-reels causes that company to bend every effort to maintain the high standard for which it is noted. The excellence of its product is well maintained in the four single-reels which come from the Gaumont Laboratories the week of January 28. The first is "Reel Life" No. 39, the Mutual Film Magazine, released January 28. It contains pictures of a mobile X-Ray apparatus transferred from point to point by the French on the western battle front where hospitals are hastily set up. Butterflies used for decorative purposes by artistic designers are shown in the various stages of preparation. A third section shows the method of extracting salt from sea water. The reel concludes with a pictorial exposition of the hula-hula as danced by a native to the accompaniment of native ukulele players on the beach at Weikiki.

The second reel of the week is "Tours Around the World" No. 13. It takes spectators to Teheran, Persia, the Coast Resorts of Normandy—Etretat, Honfleur and Trouville, and winter scenes and sports in the Vosges Mountains. It is released January 30.

"See America First" No. 73, released January 31, shows San Diego, Cal. The city is remarkably interesting from a pictorial point of view because here was established the first of the California Missions, here is the Theosophical Institution, the leading resort hotel of southern California, and an exposition which kept open for two years. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, "Never Again."

The fourth single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly, made by Gaumont.

LATEST VOGUE A SIDE SPLITTER.

An irate policeman in hot pursuit of Billy and Paddy is one of the most exciting moments in the latest Mutual-Vogue comedy which is in the making this week under the direction of James E. Davis. Some new and thrilling stunts are pulled in this chase that are bound to make any audience gasp while they are convulsed with laughter. Billy and Paddy are finally caught when the telegraph pole on which they are hiding is run into by the cop's auto and comes crashing down, bringing the boys with it.

"Smiling" Billy Mason, Paddy McGuire and Lillian Hamilton are the featured fun-makers in this comedy, the temporary title of which is "Sticky Fingers." This is a two-reel offering and the trio are given ample opportunity to make use of all their comedy tricks.

VITAGRAPH V-L-S-E TO PUT OUT "THE CHRISTIAN."

Through an announcement just made by the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E., Incorporated, it has been decided to distribute the remarkable film version of Hall Caine's great story, "The Christian," through that organization.

To Put Out "Buffalo Bill" Film

It Was Made by Essanay and Will Be Distributed by K-E-S-E.

"BUFFALO BILL," whose death in Denver was announced Wednesday, January 10, was a warm friend of George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, and through him arranged to leave his autobiography in film to posterity. It is probably the first instance of the film being used for this purpose.

"The Life of Buffalo Bill" and the Indian wars was produced under the auspices of the United States Government as an historical record of the forming of the West. William F. Cody (Buffalo Bill), the greatest plainsman of them all, and the most romantic figure in the building of the nation, is shown throughout his life and battles. "Buffalo Bill' himself plays the leading role.

This picture, which is to be distributed throughout the United States by the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service, shows myriads of Indians, regiments of United States soldiers and scores of picturesque scouts, many of them boon companions of Buffalo Bill, each in some thrilling feature. Most of the veteran scouts of the West were asked by Buffalo Bill to contribute something to his film autobiography and the result is said to be decidedly interesting.

As it stands and will be shown on the screens throughout the United States, "The Life of Buffalo Bill" is an hour and ten minutes of thrilling action, terrifying Indian battles and prairie skirmishes, its exciting moments contrasting with its acute pathos, its light, amusing situations fitting in consistently with the daring and dangerous humor of the grim frontiersmen.

LUCAS TO STAR ON TRIANGLE PROGRAM.

Scenario rights to "Orpheus," a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams, recently published in Collier's Weekly, have been purchased by the Triangle-Fine Arts studio for picturization under the direction of Wilfred Lucas and Tod Browning. Lucas will play the star role. Lucas has not yet selected his cast, but it is probable that Carmel Myers will be promoted to a leading lady and will support the star. Work on the production will be started as soon as "Jim Bludso" is completed.

The story has unusually dramatic screen possibilities and the transformation of it into scenario form will be supervised by Lucas himself. He was struck by the unusual plot and persuaded the studio management to secure the film rights without delay. "Orpheus" is one of the "Our Square" series. It is threaded with pathos, romance and tragedy, combining to make strong heart interest and dramatic effect.

THE NEW HULETTE PICTURES.

"'Her' New York," the Thanhouser-Pathe big first-of-the-year features, starring Gladys Hulette, will be followed in the spring by the fourth of the "lovely child" series, "Pots-and-Pans Peggie." The first and second plays were "The Shine Girl" and "Prudence, the Pirate," all written by Agnes C. Johnston. The first scenes of Miss Hulette's latest play began on January 8. The new story, filled with the quaint situations that have pleased Miss Hulette's public, is by Philip Lonergan.

WITH APOLOGIES TO THE METRO.

By error, the wrong cut was inserted in the review of Metro's picture, "Cave Man's Buff," which appeared on page 358 of the January 20 issue. In order to show what a perfectly good cut was omitted, and also that exhibitors may be spared the trouble of looking for the non-existent scene, as misprinted by us, we are showing herewith the cut which should have appeared.

The Exhibitor Free at Last

That's What Lewis J. Selznick Says and He Offers This Argument to Prove His Statement.

"THE exhibitor's day of bondage is ended," declared Lewis J. Selznick in an interview this week. Calling attention to the fact that the advent of the new Goldwyn Company in the open booking market already makes it possible for the exhibitor playing one picture a week to book his theater without depending on program attractions, Mr. Selznick prophesied that 1917 would see the complete overthrow of the old system.

"With Goldwyn, Artcraft and Selznick pictures already in the field," declared the noted producer, "the exhibitor is free at last. With our thirty-two or more productions a year to choose from; with Artcraft putting out twelve or more and Goldwyn coming out with an additional thirty-odd pictures, it is no longer necessary for the exhibitors to pay for service and tie themselves hand and foot to any program.

"Furthermore, the exhibitor can now force the program producers to let him select features from the program and play them as he desires.

"I have often been asked in the last few weeks what I thought of our new 'competition,' meaning the Goldwyn company. A little thought on the part of my questioners would show them that Goldwyn is not my competitor, but my ally. The advent of this big company into the open market is not only an insurance on the success of my proposition, but means the emancipation of the exhibitor.

"Between the Goldwyn, Artcraft, my own company and the several individual companies producing special features we can already supply the entire needs of the biggest exhibitors in the nation and even keep the smaller fellow's house open for the better part of the week.

"Within the next few months I am confident we shall see the big program companies taking their principal stars out of the programs and releasing them as 'specials' on the open market."

OUT SELLING "THE MASQUE OF LIFE."

Jacob L. Kempner, of Signet Films, Inc., No. 220 West 42d street, has been in Chicago for the past ten days in the interests of "The Masque of Life," the big feature photoplay which his company is marketing on the states rights basis, and is about to leave for the Pacific coast to clost contracts on practically all of the unsold territory on the picture.

Mr. Kempner's principal business in the Windy City was to complete arrangements with Jones, Linck & Schafer for the booking of "The Masque of Life" in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and Michigan. Aaron Jones, representing the Chicago buyers, was much interested in the picture when it was shown him sime weeks ago, and, it is understood, paid a splendid price for the territory his firm purchased with more than a well developed "hunch" that the firm was going to get the money back and a lot more.

The Westcott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, has bought "The Masque of Life" for Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin. The K. & R. Film Company has purchased the territory comprising Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia, and the Supreme Photoplay Productions, of Pittsburgh, has taken New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Marcus Loew, who bought New York State during the progress of the picture's four-week run at the Park theater, New York city, is playing the feature as a special attraction at his various theaters throughout Greater New York and vicinity with record breaking success. It is said that he is keeping ten prints at work daily.

WARWICK IN VERSION OF OPPENHEIM NOVEL.

Robert Warwick, who has just completed his first Selznick-Picture, an adaptation of the famous detective drama, "The Argyle Case," will begin work immediately upon a film version of "The Court of St. Simon," by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

For this production Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corporation, has secured the services of the celebrated French director, Leonce Perret, who arrived in America last week. Mr. Perret is without a peer among the directors in France. His most recent screen triumph was the presentation in Paris of a spectacular film entitled "The Heroes of the Yser."

Perret is best known on this side of the Atlantic through his direction of the Suzanne Grandais features that were all the rage four or five years ago. Until his departure for this country Perret was Director General of the Gaumont Company and supervised the production of almost all its biggest features.

The story of "The Court of St. Simon" is particularly well adapted to Director Perret's training, the greater part of the scenes being laid in France. It is one of Mr. Oppenheim's most popular novels and the central character will offer Mr. Warwick a splendid role for the screens. The scenario is being completed by Frederick Chapin, who was recently engaged as scenario editor for the Selznick companies, and work on the production is expected to start next week.

SCHWARTZ FILMS, INCORPORATED.

A new firm of "Schwartz Films, Incorporated," has made its advent into the feature film field of the Middle West, with offices in Chicago, Ill. It is the intention of "Schwartz Films," Incorporated," to take over for direct distribution to the exhibitors in this territory only the biggest and most worthy of the super-films as they are produced. The new firm will operate a special publicity service in connection with each feature distributed, which will open up new avenues of film advertising for the exhibitor and practically insure capacity patronage for every picture booked.

Among the first of the features to be handled will be the series of six two-reel super-features based upon the poems of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and distributed by them to exhibitors in Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. There had been much speculation as to the handling of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox pictures in this territory, but the "Schwartz Films" people over-bid all competitors, paying a record price for the rights for the above three states.

"Schwartz Films, Incorporated," with William M. Schwartz, as president and general manager; M. Schwartz, vice-president; Jack M. Schwartz, treasurer, and I. Maynard Schwartz, secretary, together with their able office staff, will endeavor at all times to co-operate with the exhibitors and give them the best to be had at prices where they will be able to net larger profits on big features, there appears to be a good foundation for the report.

"THE PRIMITIVE CALL"—(Fox).

For "The Primitive Call," Gladys Coburn's second photoplay, William Fox has assembled a cast of super-excellence. Besides Miss Coburn, who scored a notable success in her initial motion picture production, there are in the company such distinguished artists as Fritz Leiber, John Webb Dillon, George Ian Larkin, Lewis Sealy, Velma Whitman and Kittens Reichert.

"The Primitive Call" is an Indian picture that is "different," and Mr. Leiber was selected for the principal role because he has the peculiarly spare countenance, high cheekbones, erect carriage, and long stride characteristic of the Red Man.

John Webb Dillon has been in many Fox films. He will probably be recalled best for his fine impersonation of the fiery Tybalt in "Romeo and Juliet." "The Primitive Call" will be released on Jan. 22, 1917.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU IN SECOND MUTUAL PRODUCTION.

Marjorie Rambeau's second Mutual production will be a picturization of "Motherhood," a play by the well-known author and playwright, Frederick Arnold Kummer. Miss Rambeau has already commenced work on this production at the studio of the Frank Powell Producing Company under the direction of Frank Powell.

In "Motherhood," which will mark Miss Rambeau's second appearance on the screen, she has a role entirely different from that of "The Greater Woman," which introduced her to the photoplay stage, and one which will afford her a wide range of artistic expression. "Motherhood" is a virile, gripping, modern story, unusual in treatment and builded, as the title indicates, on a theme of universal appeal.

"FORTUNES OF FIFI" FOR MARGUERITE CLARK.

"Snow White" and her seven little dwarfs neatly packed away in celluloid to the accompanying plaudits of the multitude, Marguerite Clark is now hard at work in the Famous Players studio under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, on an adaptation of Molly Elliott Sewell's well-known play, "The Fortunes of Fifi," which will be released on the Paramount program in February.

As Fifi, Miss Clark will undertake a new role for her—the part of an actress on the French stage. Though this is not the first French girl that Miss Clark has played on the screen—"Silks and Satins" found her in mediaeval France—she has never played the extremely difficult role of an actress before. However, Miss Clark heself is pobably the only person who is concerned for the outcome of her attempt, as her admirers will be content to place any histrionic undertaking in her capable little hands.

"THE DARLING OF PARIS" (FOX).

The part taken by Miss Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris" is one of the most interesting characters she has ever been called upon to interpret since becoming identified with the silent drama. It is an unusual one, dominating the story from beginning to end. There are but few moments when she is not in the picture, which adds all the more importance to the production in general.

The play was suggested from Victor Hugo's novel, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and the part of Esmaralda, which Miss Bara portrays, throws a new light on the ability of the actress.

H. W. Johns-Manville New Des Moines Office.

By opening their new office at 911 Walnut street, in Des Moines, Iowa, January 1st, the H. W. Johns-Manville Company brought the total number of their branches up to fifty-five. Practically every important city in North America now has a Johns-Manville branch.

Intrinsic Value vs. Stars

W. A. Brady Says He Believes in Getting Out the Best Pictures Possible.

DIRECTOR GENERAL WILLIAM A. BRADY and the other officers of the World Film Corporation are naturally elated with the remarkable increase in the demand for World Pictures Brady-made. This growth has been manifested in all parts of the country and also in Europe, where the Gaumont Company, of London, reports that the entry of these pictures has been amazingly successful.

In recently declining to compete for the services of a very prominent star who was in the market for a special release, Mr. Brady said:

"Probably there would be a large profit for the corporation in such an alliance. In fact I am convinced that there would be. But of its wisdom in the long run I am not so certain.

"The further we proceed the more I am convinced that the present policy of the World is the right one, with no comebacks. It involves nothing more than getting out the best pictures it is possible to get out, and selling them absolutely on their merits, never promising anything more than we can deliver.

"Even and reliable excellence is what we are after. We have many reasons for the belief that the public has grown to look for precisely this quality when it sees a World Brady-made announced, and that the condition is becoming more and more widespread every day.

"Why disturb such a situation by throwing all our energy and a fortune of our money into a 'special' with a $100,000 star, necessitating big fees from the exhibitors and increased prices at the box office?

"We feel that in the present development of the art we could not make better pictures than we are making, and that if we were to merely make longer ones and charge more for them—as we should be compelled to do by reason of the advanced cost—we should be 'dealing double' with exhibitors and public and bamboozling ourselves.

"We have been told repeatedly that our pictures ought to be released as 'specials,' and in some instances we have been invited to pad them out and sell state rights to the inquirers, some of whom called personally, while others applied by mail. It is our aim to make every World picture as good as any 'special,' but none of them will be padded out, and all will be released in the regular course and regular way on the World program.

"The returns from first finding a good plan and then sticking to it are illustrated in the plain, unalterable fact that every one of the World's exchanges, without exception, has tremendously enlarged its business during the past few months, while contracts already in hand for 1917 make it a practical certainty that the receipts will nearly if not quite double those of the previous year."

"The Vicar" a Special Release

Frederick Warde's Great Production Removed From Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster Schedule.

THE elaborate Thanhouser production of "The Vicar of Wakefield," starring Frederick Warde, has been removed from the schedule of Pathe Gold Rooster plays, and will be offered as a Pathe special. "The Vicar of Wakefield" is in eight acts, was directed by Ernest Warde, has a distinguished cast and will win acclaim as a film edition of a classic that has constant big action.

Because of the withdrawal of "The Vicar of Wakefield" from the schedule of Gold Rooster plays, and its designation as a Pathe special, its release date in early March as a Gold Rooster play will be taken by "Her Beloved Enemy," featuring the two new Thanhouser stars, Doris Grey and Wayne Arey. The story is by Lloyd Lonergan, the direction by Ernest Warde.

The second March Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster play will be Gladys Hulette in "Pots-and-Pans Peggie," another contribution to the "lovely girl series" under the authorship of Agnes C. Johnston. W. Eugene Moore is director.

Changes in April dates will be announced later.

"A DAY AT WEST POINT" (Ultra).

"A Day at West Point," a one-reel feature, was enthusiastically received at the Strand theater, New York, the week of Dec. 17. The various phases of cadet life and training, from entrance to the academy to graduation, are portrayed. President Wilson is shown giving out diplomas to the graduates, and Mrs. Wilson also appears prominently in the events of the graduation day exercises.

This picture is especially timely at present, in view of the strong movement towards the adoption of universal military training in America, and this condition heightens the interest which the vital subject matter and patriotic appeal of the film would create ordinarily. "A Day at West Point" is being handled by Ultra Films, Inc., which is offering it to independent exchanges.

"BRIDGES BURNED" ON METRO PROGRAM JAN. 29.

"Bridges Burned," with Mme. Petrova as star, will be released on the Metro program Jan. 29. The star herself is the author of "Bridges Burned," which was adapted for the screen by Wallace C. Clifton. Perry Vekroff directed the production, made at the Popular Plays and Players studios, and photographed by Neil Bergman.

"Garden of Allah" Shown at Indianapolis

Selig's Big Feature Presented Christmas Day at Indiana Town—Highly Praised.

ROBERT LIEBER, motion picture exhibitor of Indianapolis, Ind., on Christmas Day, gave the premier presentation of the Selig spectacular photoplay, "The Garden of Allah." Mr. Lieber has the honor of being the first exhibitor in the world to present Selig's "The Garden of Allah" on the motion picture screen.

The production opened at the Circle theater to standing room only, the S. R. O. card has since then been hanging out indefinitely. As this is the first occasion on which "The Garden of Allah" has been presented, it may be interesting to read of the reviews appearing in the Indianapolis newspapers, particularly so as the Selig production has not yet been presented to the motion picture trade reviewers.

The Indianapolis Times of January 1, says in part: ,"The producers did well in selecting the Circle theater for a try-out of this spectacular offering. The story of 'The Garden of Allah;' of the woman and the man from different walks of life, who go to the desert to forget and there learn the lesson of perfect renunciation, is well known from the book and the stage play of the same name. But, it remained for the motion picture screen to make it real due to the splendid acting of Miss Helen Ware as 'Domini Enfilden' and Thomas Santschi as the errant 'Boris.' The story gives a wealth of opportunity for scenic embellishment, and here Colin Campbell has scored, painting with broad strokes a remarkable series of pictures of the desert and its strange places, one of the most wonderful being a sandstorm which leaves nothing to the imagination."

The Indianapolis Star in the course of a long and flattering review, says: "The Selig Polyscope Company has produced 'The Garden of Allah' so artistically for the screen, that it merits the highest praise that can be given to it."

The Indianapolis News in the course of nearly a column review, says in part: "A remarkably large part of the story of 'The Garden of Allah' is told in the Selig production, and the book is followed much more closely than is usual in picturizations of novels. It is a notably rich and big production, full of scenes of strange and stirring picturesqueness, and with many touches of unusual beauty."

Real Railroaders in "Hazards"

Kalem Players' Early Experience Lends Realism to "Hazards of Helen" Series.

TO BE cast for the important roles, week after week, in a series that is well on its way to the two hundredth episode, is an honor that comes to few screen players, yet it belongs rightfully to Helen Gibson and G. A. Williams of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen" company.

But not without reason. Miss Gibson is the daughter of a railroad engineer and long before less favored sons and daughters had ever seen the inside of an engine cab, she was accustomed to taking long rides with her father and pitting her wee strength against the throttle and heavy reversing lever of a giant mogul. She early acquired a working knowledge of telegraphy, which she finds is a part of her stock in trade as the "Lone Point" operator in the railroad series of which she is the star. The messages that Helen sends are always bona fide, and telegraphers have declared that they can catch their meaning when close-ups of the instruments are shown. So much for the realism furnished by daring Helen Gibson.

Exhibitors and fans, perhaps, have wondered at the ease and assurance with which G. A. Williams handles himself in various roles in the "Hazards." For his versatility there is a good reason. He has always been fascinated by railroad life and has had actual experience in almost every branch of train service.

Back in 1887 the show he was with became stranded in Wisconsin. Never afraid of hard work, he secured a position with the North Western railroad, and from a humble "brakie" he rapidly rose to the position of passenger conductor.

His first moving picture work was in the Kalem railroad series, and he has often remarked that it is a delightful compromise between actual railroading and stage life.

The work of these two players—Miss Gibson and Mr. Williams—in stories written by men acquainted with railroading, insures to every episode of the "Hazards of Helen" that realism so greatly sought after and so regularly found in Kalem productions.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION'S ANNUAL REVIEW.

Practically all of the prints for the sample reel of the film "How the Great Stars Make Love" are in the hands of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and work on the assembly has been begun. This reel is the first of the series of at least five which the national association is going to issue as its "Annual Review" of the motion pictures of 1916. The films are to consist of cut-outs of the great scenes of the great pictures of the year.

The reel on "How the Great Stars Make Love" will be the first. Prints for the second reel, "Great Fights of the Films," are already coming in, also "With the Funny Stars." The subjects of the other reels will be "Daredevil Stunts," and "Great Thrills." The series will be released at weekly intervals by the national association to raise funds for its organization work.

Bluebird February Program

Has An Attractive List of Subjects and Notes the Return of Several Favorites.

THE return of Mary MacLaren, the reappearance of Ruth Stonehouse, the elevation of Wedgewood Nowell to featured position, and Franklyn Farnum's second essay at light comedy, are the principal outcomes of Bluebird's arrangements for February. Violet Mersereau comes back to Bluebird March 5 to complete the present announcements.

Lois Weber, who discovered Mary MacLaren and made her an "over night" star in "Shoes," has prepared a fourth Bluebird in which the pretty Scotch lassie will be featured. Harrison Ford will be her leading man, because of the fact that J. Warren Kerrigan's contract with Bluebird expired before "The Mysterious Mrs. M." was completed. Thus it came about that this feature was given a double production, almost in its entirety, holding back Mary MacLaren from Bluebird appearances since Oct. 2.

"The Mysterious Mrs. M." was inspired by Thomas Edgelow's story, printed originally in a popular magazine. Lois Weber made the screen adaptation and directed the production. Evelyn Selbie plays the title role, and the company supporting Miss MacLaren and Mr. Ford includes Charles Mailes, Bertram Grassby, Frank Brownlee and Willis Marks. This attraction, on Feb. 5, will be the forerunner of several more Mary MacLaren appearances among Bluebirds.

Rex Ingram contributes another of his photographically beautiful productions—along the lines of "Black Orchids" and "The Chalice of Sorrow"—on Feb. 12, when "The Reward of the Faithless" will bring Wedgewood Nowell into featured prominence with Betty Schade, sharing with him the billing honors. Claire Du Bray will also be prominent in the cast. Magnus Ingleton's story inspired this Rex Ingram presentation.

"The Man Who Took a Chance" gives Franklyn Farnum another light comedy opportunity to enhance his value to Bluebird and increase his personal popularity. This release will be made three weeks after "The Devil's Pay Day" (Jan. 29), in which Mr. Farnum plays an intensely melodramatic role, with Leah Baird opposite. In "The Man Who Took a Chance," the leading woman will be Agnes Vernon, who will in future appear with Mr. Farnum in all of his Bluebirds. William Worthington directed the Feb. 19 release, and the presenting company will include Lloyd Whitlock, Countess Du Cello, Arthur Hoyt, Charles Perley and Mark Fenton.

Ruth Stonehouse will be the star of "The Saintly Sinner" to be released Feb. 26. In this sensational feature Miss Stonehouse has a more dramatic role than she has ever played for Bluebirds. Jack Mulhall will be her leading man, and the supporting company will include Frederick Montague, Raymond Whittaker, Henry Devries, Alida Hayman, Dorothy Drake and Adele Farrington. Eugene Lewis furnished the scenario, made from L. H. Hutton's story, and Raymond B. Wells directed the production.

Mary Violet Mersereau will make another Bluebird appearance in "The Boy Girl," by John C. Brownell. This is the second Edwin Stevens production for Miss Mersereau in this series. The heroine is reared as a boy and it is not until late in the play that Miss Mersereau dons skirts. Exhibitors who recall "The Honor of Mary Blake," also directed by Edwin Stevens, will know what to expect in "The Boy Girl."

NEW SCREEN MAKES "CIVILIZATION" PICTURE CLEARER.

Thos. Ince's big production, "Civilization," was given its premiere in St. Louis during the holidays, under the auspices of the St. Louis Post Dispatch, one of the very large papers of the United States, circulation of same being close to 400,000. They devoted a great deal of space to this remarkable feature because they are using the proceeds for the purpose of adding to their Christmas fund, which is one of the big holiday festivals of St. Louis.

In one issue they gave the Minusa Gold Fibre screen a very prominent write up, having purchased one after realizing that the ordinary white cloth screen at the Victoria theater was not suitable for bringing out the picture in the clear beautiful and natural manner that the master builder of this photoplay would like to have it. Among other things the Dispatch said:

"Even greater surprise and satisfaction was expressed by yesterday's audience in the Victoria than on the opening day, due to the installation of a Minusa Gold Fibre screen. This has been designed from the first and the screen was ready for service on Monday. It was found that the lens in the machine would not fit and these had to be changed. While the first two productions of 'Civilization' were satisfactory, there is a wealth of improvement following the installation of the Minusa Gold Fibre screen. This is the creation of a St. Louisan, E. R. Anderson, and the factory of the company is in this city. Fully 90 per cent. of the high grade motion picture theaters of the United States are supplied from here. With the Minusa screen even the winking of an eye is plainly shown, owing to its wonderful reproducing powers. With the light full upon it, the screen appears to be white. An explanation of this optical illusion is found in the fact that the gold forms a perfect harmony with or neutralizes the light rays from the machine being made to match with this light at the point of contact. There is no glare and the full beauty of the picture is brought out in a natural and clear cut way."

Fox's Activities East and West

Four Players Added to Long List—Company Celebrates Its First Anniversary in the West.

WILLIAM FOX'S hobby, as one reviewer remarked, is collecting—collecting photoplayers for his dramatic subjects. Last week he added four more. The newcomers are Frank Alexander, Cecil Holland, William Conklin and Violet Radcliffe. Mr. Alexander, perhaps the most impressive-looking member of the Fox organization, as he weighs just 320, has been working in Foxfilm comedies until recently. He will play the first dramatic role of his career in the new George Walsh film which Otis Turner is directing.

Cecil Holland, who will also appear in Mr. Turner's third production for Fox features, is a native of Gravesend, England. He had the parts of General Sherman and Captain Lyon in "The Crisis."

Mr. Conklin, at one time a noted walker and a crack half-miler, was on the stage for fourteen years. His last engagement was in the juvenile role of "The Law of the Land. He entered the silent drama in 1915 and has been featured in many productions. He had an important role in "Neal of the Navy," and played Luxembourg in De Mille's "Joan of Arc."

Violet Radcliffe has the distinction of having made her first stage appearance at the age of eleven days, in the character of Nero's baby in "Quo Vadis." She is only eight years old now, but she is entitled to be called a veteran.

On the West Coast Director Richard Stanton, for the final scenes of his third subject, took views of Golden City, the western town built by Fox Film Corporation, burning at night. It was necessary to reduce the place to ashes to obtain the effect desired. Several companies of the Los Angeles fire department answered a fire alarm turned in by an innocent passer-by when he saw the set going to the ground.

Fox Film Corporation, incidentally, celebrated the completion of its first year in California last month. Within the past twelve months Fox Films have grown in the west from an organization covering less than an acre of ground and employing thirty persons, to one using thirty acres and paying salaries to more than 500 persons. Where there were two stages only a few months ago, there are now eight.

For the week of January 22 William Fox will release two productions—Theda Bara in "The Darling of Paris," the first of the distinguished artist's super-de luxe pictures, and Gladys Coburn in "The Primitive Call," an Indian film that is "different."

Opposite Miss Coburn will be Fritz Leiber, famous for his work in Shakespearean roles, with Mantell, Marlowe and Greet. Others in the company are George Alan Larkin, the daredevil of the film; John Webb Dillion, Lewis Sealy, Velma Whitman and Kittens Reichert.

A change in the release scheduled for January 29 will result in the substitution of Gladys Brockwell's recently completed screen drama for the Suratt subject originally planned for that date. Jack Standing will be seen in the chief role in Miss Brockwell's supporting cast.

"THREADS OF FATE" (Metro).

"Threads of Fate," a new five-part feature photodrama with winsome Viola Dana as star, has been completed by Columbia Pictures Corporation, and will be released on the Metro program Jan. 22. Eugene Newland directed the production, the play being adapted for the screen by June Mathis from the original story by Richard Barry. The scene of "Threads of Fate" is laid partly among the coal mines of Pennsylvania, and ample opportunity is provided for powerful picturization. A great strike figures in the play.

Miss Dana is supported by a strong company. Robert Whittier plays Jim Gregory, "the wanderer;" Augustus Phillips plays Tom Wentworth, Dot's foster-father; Richard Tucker is the young doctor; Helen Strickland is the cold-hearted Sarah Wentworth; Nellie Grant the faithless Marcella; Fred Jones the so-called Marquis, and there are other players of ability in the unusually well balanced cast. "Threads of Fate" is an exceptionally strong attraction.

W. C. RITER ON ROAD.

W. C. Riter, special representative for Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim comedies, has just left for Philadelphia after spending several days in New York. Mr. Riter has covered the far West and the East in the interest of the above named brands, and finds they are in much demand throughout the territory which he has covered. As Mr. Riter has had many years experience in the film business and knows it from end to end the producers feel that his judgment is worth consideration, and they, therefore feel confident that the future releases of these brands will enjoy greater popularity than they have in the past.

B. J. ABRAMS TAKING A REST.

B. J. Abrams, the genial, good natured special representative of the Meleis Mfg. Co., is holding in town after an extensive trip of eleven months in the interest of the Knickerbocker Star Features and Vim comedies. Mr. Abrams, who had been covering the South and Middle West, reports a very strong demand for the short reel program and the shorter features like those of the three-reel Knickerbocker releases. Vim comedies too, have been very popular because of the demand for good comedies to make up a well balanced entertainment.

KRAUS ISSUES NEW CATALOG.

A handsomely illustrated catalog has just been issued by the Kraus Manufacturing Company, art publishers, to the moving picture industry, of 220 West 42d street, New York. Besides showing excellent reproductions in colors of some of the more pretentious examples of the firm's products it contains a list of more than one thousand names of photoplayers whose pictures are carried in the stock of the Kraus Company in various forms.

Recently the Kraus Company was compelled to increase the dimensions of its showrooms, which are now about four times as large as when the company started in business at its present address, which fact is the best proof of the great increase in business which the company has been favored with. The quality of its product is amply attested by the granting of the grand prize at the recent Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco, accompanied by the silver medal.

Further changes in the office arrangement is contemplated whereby the Kraus Company will have a large and well lighted showroom equivalent in size to the original offices.

The Kraus product is widely used by exhibitors and has the reputation of giving the greatest satisfaction.

INTERNATIONAL GETS PICTURES FROM ICEBOAT.

Cameramen are sometimes called upon to do dangerous things, and oftentimes have to do their work under the most absurd circumstances. Taking pictures from the limited confines of an iceboat's cockpit while skimming over lumpy ice with the speed of the wind is the latest awkward camera stunt. It was done by Herman Stockhoff of the Hearst-Pathe News a few days ago on an iceboat going eighty or more miles an hour.

In addition Stockhoff had to hold his camera, turn the crank and stay in the boat. That he did it is shown in the most recent release of the Hearst-Pathe News, and proves once more that the camera men are nothing if not daring and capable.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU IN "THE GREATER WOMAN."

Frank Powell has finished the filming of "The Greater Woman," a picturization of Algernon Boyesen's play of that name, in which Marjorie Rambeau makes her screen debut. "The Greater Woman" is the first of the series of Marjorie Rambeau pictures now being made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation and to be distributed through Mutual.

In "The Greater Woman" Miss Rambeau is said to have an excellent vehicle for her first appearance on the screen. Mr. Boysen's play lent itself readily to the screen adaptation, and in it Miss Rambeau has unusual opportunity for the exposition of her great gifts as an emotional actress, as well as for the lighter form of dramatic expression of which she is past mistress.

Boston's First Film Benefit

Film Men and Prominent Film Players Will Give a Benefit for J. A. Eslow at the Colonial Theater on Sunday Evening, February 4—Many Leading Film Players Will Take Part—Will Be a Great Event.

By J. J. Phillips, Boston Herald and Traveler.

BOSTON, MASS.—Over thirty prominent moving picture stars representing the foremost film concerns in this country will be present at the benefit tendered to J. A. Eslow, former manager of the Boston Universal exchange, at the Colonial theater, Boston, on Sunday evening, February 4. At a recent meeting of the New England Film Managers' Association Manager Edward Farrell, of Pathe, was elected chairman of the benefit committee and R. D. Marsden of the K-E-S-E and Tom Sprey of the Metro exchanges were also appointed to serve with Mr. Farrell. This benefit is the first of its kind to be held in Boston.

That it will be a success is beyond question, as already every box has been sold and those who bought gave the price, ($25), in the true spirit of the affair. Chairman Farrell has secured the Mission Church band and many legitimate stars will be present, including vaudeville artists from the Keith, Loew and Olympia circuits.

J. A. Eslow until his recent illness was connected with the western department of the Unicorn Film Company and many of his friends will turn out on this occasion from every department of the moving picture industry. The manufacturers are contributing the stars, the exchange managers are conducting the benefit and the New England exhibitors are doing their share by purchasing tickets.

Pretty Girls Are Picturing Iowa's History

Of State's Hundred Largest Towns Each Has a Representative in "The Wild Rose of Iowa" Picture—Bevy Going to Chicago.

By Dorothy Day, Register Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—The State Historical Film Company, with Mrs. E. B. Arthur as president and secretary, is making rapid strides toward a big success. The new company is working for its first production. "The Wild Rose of Iowa," in which 100 girls chosen by votes from the 100 largest towns in the state will take part. These young ladies will come to Des Moines as the guests of the Des Moines Federation of Women's Clubs, will be royally feted and photographed, then they are to be taken to the Rothacker studios in Chicago for the interior scenes.

The Casino theater in Des Moines held its contest and Audley Boyd was the fortunate young woman. The excitement over the contest in Des Moines did not prove as big as in other places. In Perry the last night of the contest W. A. Walton, manager of the Grand opera house, had the band and all the town out to celebrate the victory of Irene Kelly, a charming little brunette. And down in Chariton the idea took hold with even greater force. Mrs. Alice C. Weitz, the author of the story of "The Wild Rose of Iowa," went down, and the old pioneers, the club women, and, in fact, everyone interested, held a big meeting, listened to the reading of the script, and talked over the possibilities and plans for the picture. The newspapers gave the event a big story, and the interest in the contest was great up until Laura Copeland, a delightful blonde, and the daughter of a prominent banker there, won out. The Grand theater in Chariton conducted the contest.

Mrs. E. B. Arthur has placed the request for a state appropriation before Governor Clarke, who in turn has placed the bill before the new Governor Harding and the state representatives who are just taking their chairs. The bill should meet with success, since the State Historical Film Company is doing everything in its power to make the film absolutely historical, picturing the resources and the development of the state, and finally it is to give a copy to the state for historical purposes.

Marshalltown's Theater to Celebrate.

Marshalltown, Ia.—The management of the Strand theater of Marshalltown is issuing invitations to all friends to the first anniversary of the house. The anniversary will be celebrated on the 22d of the month. The second Artcraft production, "The Pride of the Clan," will be shown.

The Strand management booked "War Brides" during the holidays and reports poor business. They account for this in the title, saying that so many "war productions" have been shown that the fan who has not already heard of "War Brides" and its story, will pass it up as another series of scenes of bursting shells and dying men. The remedy for this fault, it seems, would be better publicity in advance and during the showing of the picture.

Iowa Theater Changes and Notes.

Albia, Ia.—F. P. Kissack has purchased the King theater from H. Porter, formerly of Indianapolis. Mr. Porter seems to have taken hold with the purpose of brightening up by the amount of newspaper advertising he is using. Mr. Kissack has gone to Seattle to join Fred Lambert, formerly a partner with Kissack in the King theater.

Waukee, Ia.—The business men of Waukee have purchased the motion picture of that small town from H. H. Sansberry. They opened up January 7.

Wellman, Ia.—The Majestic theater in Wellman burned recently and Manager C. C. Hahn expects to be able to open again in February.

Davis City, Ia.—Grant Mallory, the editor of the Davis City Citizen, bought of his partner, Pat McClain, the latter's interest in the Orpheum theater. This gives Mr. Mallory full ownership and with the right to so much publicity in his own paper, business should come flocking in at his box office.

Mount Ayr, Ia.—P. E. Mears, owner of the Princess theater in Mount Ayr, has purchased the Grand theater in Lamoni from Rogers and Casey, and also obtained the motion picture house in Redding. This gives Mr. Mears a circuit of three houses.

Wapello, Ia.—Ray Hiller, of Clair, Wis., has purchased the Keck theater in Wapello.

Business Notes.

Des Moines, Ia.—C. W. Stombaugh, manager of the General Film exchange in this city, went to Cedar Rapids last week and persuaded G. C. Martin, manager of the Princess theater, and C. C. Clipton of the Lyric theater, that the General service was the only service that they could use to advantage.

Des Moines, Ia.—C. W. Jeffries of the newly formed Interstate Film Corporation is out on the road now booking his Mutt and Jeff comedies and the Nat Goodwin production, "The Marriage Bond."

L. A. Sheridan, of the Pathe exchange of Des Moines, was in Omaha on business this week, which fact accounts for a decided lack of news from the Pathe exhibitors. Everybody else around the Pathe offices were so excited over the private showing of the fourth episode of "Pearl of the Army" that all they could tell about was the acquisition of the International releases for Pathe distribution.

Ballantyne, of the Mutual, is showing his newly arranged offices to all visitors. He has had all the partitions removed and the big general office makes a decidedly better appearance. His news concerned the booking of "Purity" in the newly reopened Majestic theater here for the week of February 5.

Manny Gottlieb, of the Favorite Features Film Company in Minneapolis, was in town the other day with his print of "The Libertine." He booked the picture at the Palace theater for the week of January 14.

Working Out "Family Program" Plan.

Des Moines, Ia.—On the strength of the popularity of the children's matinees at the Garden theater every Saturday morning, Maurice Ricker, the principal of the West High School in this city, is visiting the exchanges talking over a plan whereby the same body of well known people who sponsored the children's programs might select a family program to be shown one night each week at the leading houses. Particulars of the plan will be reported as the idea develops. The Garden has been giving the morning shows for nine weeks now, and business has been more than booming each performance.

Mattoon Mayor Will Let No Sunday Shows.

MATTOON, Ill.—Mayor Bell has made it plain that he will oppose any movement to open the moving picture theaters on Sunday. Illinois Theater Changes and Notes.

Belleville, Ill.—The Grace Amusement Company, which operates the Washington theater in this city, has purchased the Lyric theater from the First National Bank, which was the trustee. Louis Landau, Jr., who is managing the Washington and who also is president of the company, will have charge of its operation. It will be used principally for theatrical attractions, but will serve to take care of business when the Washington theater, now playing moving pictures and light vaudeville, is overcrowded. The Lyric will seat 1,500 persons.

Middletown, Ill.—Middletown is now without a moving picture theater, as the result of the ousting of the local enterprise to make way for a bank.

Fisher, Ill.—C. R. Hedrick, who recently purchased the Lyric theater, has changed the name to the Palace.

Normal, Ill.—Plans for a moving picture theater to be erected on North street have been drawn by a Bloomington architect, and it is hoped to interest local capitalists in a plan to construct and operate a high class moving picture theater.

Joliet, Ill.—Charles M. Fox, a former exhibitor at DeKalb, has leased the Grand theater here.

Rochelle, Ill.—A. J. Weik has sold the Princess theater to J. H. Dales, of Tonica, Ill.

Holland, Mich.—James W. Himebaugh, proprietor of the Royal theater, will erect a two-story, 30x115 ft., moving picture theater costing $12,000 before next spring.

MORE MICHIGAN NOTES.

By Joseph C. Smith.

Among Michigan Exhibitors.

Mt. Clemens, Mich.—L. G. Peltier, proprietor of the Bijou theater, Mt. Clemens, Mich., has purchased also the Lyric theater, and is now the only exhibitor in the Bath City. The Lyric has been closed temporarily for repairs and renovations.

Detroit, Mich.—"Civilization" has already been booked by John H. Kunsky for an indefinite run at the Washington theater, Detroit; by A. J. Gilligham for the Majestic in Grand Rapids, and by Col. W. S. Butterfield for his chain of theaters in Michigan.

Jackson, Mich.—The Family theater at Jackson, Mich., is being completely remodeled without any interruption in business. Steve Springett, manager, is placing the projection booth on the first floor to get better results. His theater seats about 1,200. He is just installing two Motiographs and a Hertner transverter.

Detroit, Mich.—The Majestic theater, Detroit, which ran "The Pride of the Clan" for the week of January 8 reports that all house records were broken. Even the 50-cent seats, which heretofore have not been going any too fast, went like hot cakes during this engagement. Apparently Miss Pickford has lost none of her popularity, and with the right kind of productions she is certain to hold her many admirers.

Newark's Local Weekly at Proctor's.

NEWARK, N. J.—The "big thing" in picture circles here now is the exclusive Newark news weekly being exhibited at the local Proctor house. The innovation has proved itself a success from the start. Newarkers are tickled to think that finally the city has a weekly devoted exclusively to Newark. All the latest happenings are screened and shown in a wonderfully short time. The weekly is produced by the Advertising Film Company, Ordway building, Newark. Harold L. Miller is the director and photographer, while Harry B. Papier is president, and William D. Finkelstein is vice-president of the producing concern. Last week scenes showing a snow fight were shown, and through the courtesy of R. J. O'Crowley, assistant manager of the Palace, sixty children who had participated in the miniature battle were permitted to see themselves on the screen.

The weekly has been the recipient of many laudatory comments and is well deserving of them. The concern will soon start producing the "Industrial and Educational Series," and has engaged Horace Sims Davis as scenario director.

J. Louis Breitinger Gets Compliment

One Time Pennsylvania Censor Is Praised in Resolution of Home and School League Sent to Governor of State.

By F. O. Armato, 144 N. Salford St. West, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—His official career terminated by Governor Brumbaugh's request for his resignation, J. Louis Breitinger, head of the State Board of Censors, has at least the consolation of that which is supposed to lie in a complimentary epitaph. This came last week in the form of a resolution adopted at the January meeting of the Home and School League of Philadelphia, praising him for the manner in which he had discharged his duties.

A copy of the resolution was sent to Governor Brumbaugh. It declared Mr. Breitinger to be a man of high ideals who has ever endeavored to protect the morals of the state. It concludes with the wish that Governor Brumbaugh appoint a successor to Mr. Breitinger who will display his wisdom. The resolution is signed by Mrs. E. C. Grice, president, and H. McInyre, secretary.

The Apollo Puts in An Organ.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A large Kimball organ has recently been added to the attractions of the Opollo, one of West Philadelphia's leading photoplay houses. The instrument was designed especially to meet the requirements of this large house. The tone is rich and powerful and the handsome instrument has a wide range of tone color since it has full orchestral attachments. An elaborate recital inaugurated the new instrument on Monday last.

Manager of Strand Entertains.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Herbert Effinger entertained a party of newspaper men at supper at the Bellevue-Stratford last week, following a private view of his new Strand theater at Germantown and Venango streets. His Was a Blue Bird of an Auto.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Robert Lynch, resident manager of the Bluebird exchange here, utilized Philadelphia's famous New Year's parade to boost Bluebird photoplays. Just before the first of the numerous hove in sight, Mr. Lynch made his appearance before the throngs which lined Broad street, in a sporty high-powered raceabout, painted blue with life-like bluebirds painted on the doors and, the word "Bluebird" in letters of gold. No one missed seeing the handsome outfit.

J. Fred Zimmerman Shows His Appreciation.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. Fred Zimmerman, Sr., the veteran theatrical manager, surprised the house managers of his theaters by paying them a New Year's visit to tender his congratulations on the past year's success. The Rodman Wanamaker Indian Film Shown.

Dixon, leader of the Rodman Wanamaker Expedition, of which Dr. Dixon was leader, delivered an explanatory address. The film was made from ten miles of pictures taken during the progress of the expedition, which visited every tribe of Indians in the country, making photographs. In its present shape it runs 13,000 feet.

The Week's Features in Philadelphia.

Get-Together Luncheon Held

Washington, D. C., Manager of Famous Players Collects a Few Patron Exhibitors for a Talk on Business Possibilities—"Selling Points" in Films—Neatness of Lobbies and Door Men—Good Projection Needed.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A number of local exhibitors, and, incidentally, the Washington correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, were guests recently of George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players exchange, at a very pleasant little luncheon party at the New Ebbitt hotel. It was primarily a get-together meeting of Paramount representatives and Paramount exhibitors, called for the purpose of ascertaining how each might be of better service to the other.

Mr. Mann started the discussions by pointing out that the manufacturers of films know little of what the exhibitors and exchangemen want, and that it is their desire that these latter co-operate with them to the extent that these wants be transmitted to them.

"The purpose of this meeting," said Mr. Mann, "is to let exhibitors know we want this information because Paramount wants to make pictures suitable to the needs of the exhibitors; if they are suited to you, you will earn more money and at the same time our manufacturers will earn more money. We are all traveling the same way and all have the ultimate object, success, in view."

That there is a lack of co-operation between exhibitors and exchanges, or rather that the former do not seek all that is obtainable from the latter, is evident from the fact that although Mr. Mann has developed a service of advertising aids for exhibitors, he cannot get the proper interest aroused. He has also developed a service of advertising aids for exhibitors, he cannot get the proper interest aroused. He has also developed a publicity department to follow out the wishes of exhibitor-patrons, but he cannot find that it is patronized enough.

Some Worthwhile Tips to Exhibitors.

Mr. Carl Pierce, special representative for Paramount, offered his co-operation to the exhibitors of the territory in every way possible. He corroborated the expressions of Mr. Mann and then showed a number of ways in which the exhibitor can make his theater bring him more money. "Make a mental inventory of your theater," he suggested to those present. "Take your projection; is it as good as you can make it, and does it have the reception from your patrons that real, good projection will bring. You will find that proper projection saves in electricity. Many exhibitors overlook their lobbies, and the cleanliness of the man who takes tickets. A smart looking man at the door and a neatly dressed lobby are productive of additional business."

Look in Pictures for "Selling" Points.

Mr. Pierce also touched on the now very important matter of stars, stating that the exhibitors were inclined to pass by the weaker stars and plug the big ones; his recommendation is that the exhibitors work as hard for the former as for the latter. This, he declared, was a matter of intelligent activity. He said the business created a tendency on the part of theater managers to sit more or less idly by and watch the crowds come in, while the moving picture business was developing along the old commercial lines. The exhibitor will have to sell admissions to his theater in a way almost as a salesman markets merchandise. The present time is one requiring business efficiency, he pointed out, and a man must push his pictures in the most attractive way. He should analyze each as it comes to him to the end that he may ascertain some particular point that will result in a selling point. As an instance of what he had in mind, he pointed out the fact that in one picture now being released in Washington, one of the leads was taken by a former Washington girl, who was very much of a favorite when playing in stock in this city. This fact could be capitalized as a selling point and the picture shown to larger audiences.

Others Who Spoke.

Others who spoke on various subjects of interest to both sides of the business, or who took an active part in the meeting were H. P. Mulford, the publicity manager of the exchange; E. R. Carr, its road man; Lawrence Beatus, of the Columbia theater; Harry M. Crandall and Joseph P. Morgan, of the Crandall Amusement Company; Corbin Sheilds, the Leader theater; Maurice Davis, M Street theater; A. Brylawski, of the Cosmos; N. Stein, of the New Masonic Temple auditorium, and J. H. Goldfrap.

Manager Beatus Has Difficulties.

Washington, D. C.—Lawrence Beatus, manager of the Columbia theater, was recently haled into the Police court on the complaint of Police Captain Flatherfi because of having failed, or rather been unable to comply strictly with the fire regulations for theaters in the District of Columbia, which require that a three-foot aisle be maintained unoccupied between the last row of seats and the rear wall of each theater.

The trouble arose following the showing of Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan." Despite the fact that the Columbia, formerly a legitimate theater, can accommodate 2,000 patrons, and is equiped with a lobby 60 feet long and more than half that distance in width, every available bit of room was jammed with humanity. As a result when patrons having witnessed the showing of the film desired to leave the theater they jammed into the crowd in the lobby awaiting an opportunity to enter the auditorium. This, of course, led to the complaint by the Police department. Mr. Beatus reports having done a land office business on the Pickford film.

Allan Moritz Goes to New Orleans.

Washington, D. C.—Allan Moritz, and the new Mrs. Moritz, were visitors in Washington recently while en route to New Orleans, La., where Mr. Moritz has since assumed the management of the New Orleans branch of the Fox Film.

Mr. Moritz was formerly connected with the Fox office in this city. Later, following his marriage, he was transferred to the Philadelphia office that he might be nearer New York, the home of his bride, but now he goes away down south, zut to a real job.

La Grippe Gets Manager Brown.

Washington, D. C.—Manager Brown of the Washington and Regent theaters has been on the sick list, suffering from a severe attack of la grippe. This very unpleasant malady is very prevalent in Washington, and there are a number of exhibitors and several exchange managers suffering from its effects in a more or less acute manner.

"Done Kept Ma Reg'lar People Out."

Washington, D. C.—George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players exchange in Washington, is telling a good story of a colored exhibitor in this city, showing "Hypocrites." The day following the showing he called up the exchange and asked to be allowed to retain it for another day, the following conversation taking place:

"Las' night I was runnin' de machine while my man was out to supper, an' I heard a big rumpus outside. I went down an' found a mob of niggahs jes' carryin' away de place. Dey bus' in de doors an' dey smash up de seats, an' I had to move back to de ole summah box-office. Mr. Mann, las' night I took in more than one hundred an' seventy-five dollahs!"

"Fine!" answered Mr. Mann, "and how did your regular patrons like it?"

"Dats jes' it," was the reply, "Dat's jes' why I want de picture agin. I ain't foun' none of my reg'ler people what's seen it yit; dem strange niggahs done fill up de place."

Express Men and Film Men Meet and Talk

General Agents of Leading Express Companies Confer on Several Matters Looking Toward the Good of the Service.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—O. B. George, general agent of the Adams Express and the Southern Express companies, of this city, and William H. Tunis, general traffic agent for the Adams Express Company, of Philadelphia, Pa., were guests of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association at the first supper meeting of the new year, in the Flemish room of the National Press Club.

The object was the discussion of matters of interest both to the film and express businesses. First there is the little matter of delayed C. O. D.'s; the unauthorized waving of C. O. D.'s by employes of the companies; unsatisfactory pick-up and delivery service, and other things.

Let it be said at the outset that the representatives of the express companies showed a very marked desire to co-operate with the exchangemen in every possible way. They stated that the business handled in Washington alone, as far as the Adams and Southern are concerned, totals $150 a day, a sum well worth obtaining. Of course, this is not net to the express companies, for the railroads receive as their share for carrying the films 52½ per cent, and the balance has to cover all losses, as well as the operating expenses. This $150 a day does not cover the circulating of films which commences after they leave Washington, from which an additional and large revenue is collected by the express companies.

Messrs. George and Tunis whispered a few things for the benefit of the exchange managers, which, if carried into effect, cannot help but prove highly desiraole for them and the exhibitors in this territory as well. The WORLD correspondent has been promised a paragraph or two of news along this line that will prove highly interesting.

Hy-Art Buys Interest in "War's Women."

Washington, D. C.—The Hy-Art Masterplays Company, in the Barrister building, has taken over the interest of N. H. Spitzer in "War's Women," and at the same time Mr. Spitzer has relinquished his interest in the company itself. Mr. Spitzer came to Washington some time ago to obtain a connection with the Hy-Art, after a considerable experience in the other end of the business, that of disposing of states rights. He wanted to try out working with the exhibitors. Apparently he prefers the work of his previous connections better, for he has rejoined Samuel Cummins, who recently secured rights to a large feature film.

Buffalo F. I. L. M. Club Grows.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—"Eighty per cent. of the exchanges of Buffalo have joined our organization," said J. E. Kimberley, president of the Buffalo F. I. L. M. Club, "and we hope soon to have them all as members." Mr. Kimberley is manager of the World Film, Buffalo.

"Our club is for the benefit of both the exhibitors and the exchanges," he continued. "The chairman of our grievance committee is one of the largest exhibitors in this city. All just complaints will be given a hearing. This is purely an organization for the betterment of business for all concerned. We are affiliated with the New York F. I. L. M. Club. We hold a luncheon and meeting every Monday."

Sudden Death of Frank D. Kingsbury.

Corning, N. Y.—Frank D. Kingsbury, who was president of the Corning Opera House association for many years, died recently in that city. He expired suddenly at his home after returning from a fancy dress ball at the home of General Austin Lathrop, where, despite his 70 years, Mr. Kingsbury had engaged with the other guests in dancing the Virginia reel.

Picture Theaters Prepare for Billy Sunday

As Sailors Prepare for a Calm, Buffalo Exhibitors Are Going to Put Up More Sail and Get Advantage of Every Breeze.

By Joseph McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Will Billy Sunday's coming to Buffalo demoralize the moving picture business here during the eight weeks' visit of the evangelist, beginning January 28? This is a question which is being discussed by the local exhibitors and exchange men.

"Billy Sunday's meetings will hurt our receipts, just as circuses or plagues of infantile paralysis would keep down our attendance," was the comment of one exhibitor. Some, on the other hand, believe that the Sunday meetings will attract thousands of visitors from the suburban towns, including Canadians, and that many of these will not consider their trips here complete without also attending some of the high-class moving picture shows of the downtown district.

Knowing that competition is the life of trade, many of the exhibitors will strengthen their shows during the stay of the evangelist. They will also use extra newspaper and other advertising to partly offset the powerful publicity of the Sunday campaign. They do not believe in lying down before keen rivalry, but will keep up an aggressive fight for patronage during February and March.

"We are ten minutes' walk from the Sunday tabernacle and the meetings there will certainly hurt our trade," said Fred Strasser, associated with his father, Gottfried Strasser, owner of the Emblem moving picture theater at Jefferson and Ferry streets. "If we were a stone's throw from the Sunday sessions, we would then get the overflow of his business. We will not be so fortunate, however, on account of our location. As the people of our neighborhood can walk to the tabernacle, they will go every night. They will say: 'We can see moving pictures any time, but we cannot always see and hear Sunday.' Patrons of theaters located some distance from the tabernacle will not go every evening to the meetings, so that these houses will not be hit as hard as we will be."

New Pathe Manager Going in for Efficiency.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The accompanying picture is that of J. W. Walter, who was recently appointed manager of the Pathe exchange, Buffalo. Details of his appointment have already appeared in The Moving Picture World. Mr. Fuller was visited this week by V. H. Hodupp, assistant to C. R. Seelye, business manager of the Pathe. Mr. Hodupp will be present at the opening of the new headquarters of the Pathe at 269 Main street.

J. W. Fuller.

"An efficiency department will be a strong feature of our Buffalo exchange," Mr. Hodupp said. "When an exhibitor books a film, he is going to get it. Our new location will help us give superior service. Another advantage will be our new 6,000-reel vault.

Club Tenders B. J. Brandon a Luncheon.

Buffalo, N. Y.—At the last meeting of the Buffalo Screen Club, B. J. Brandon, representative of the serial department of the Mutual Film, Buffalo, tendered his resignation as a member of the board of governors of the club. Mr. Brandon requested that he be made a non-resident member of the club on account of his transfer to the home office of the Mutual Film in Chicago. Instead he was promptly made an honorary member, after his resignation as a governor.

Before his departure the members of the club tendered Mr. Brandon a luncheon at the Iroquois hotel and presented him a valuable amethyst ring. G. H. Christoffers, president of the club, and other members, paid a tribute to the aggressive and honorable methods which Mr. Brandon used in and out of his department, and his loyal support to the upbuilding of the club. Mr. Brandon made an appropriate reply. He has been with the Mutual in this city for the past eighteen months. His successor as representative of the serial department of the Mutual, Buffalo, is Gilbert H. Penn, formerly assistant local manager of the Mutual branch.

Pittsburgh Screen Club Stages a Smoker

January 7 Sees Enthusiastic Gathering of Film Men—Miles Gibbon Elected President of Club—Social Entertainment.

By Pittsburgh News Service, 6106 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pittsburgh Screen Club successfully staged its first annual smoker and entertainment Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, in the headquarters in the Lyceum building, and it proved to be one of the most enjoyable functions in the history of the organization. While the attendance was moderate, although quite representative of the trade, the greatest enthusiasm prevailed throughout and was voiced in a number of talks on the work as planned for the new year. Arrangements were made to give regular monthly pre-showings of big feature pictures under the auspices of the club, details to be announced later.

George W. Schweitzer was master of ceremonies and engineered the social end of the affair in an able manner. Entertainment was furnished by an excellent quartet and other vaudeville talent, this feature being in charge of Al. W. Cross, who put it on in his usual brilliant style. Meanwhile luncheon, smokes and other accessories were provided in generous quantity.

New President Elected.

A brief business session was held for the purpose of electing a new vice-president to succeed Guy Ainsworth, who resigned upon leaving the city some time ago. Miles Gibbon, of the K. E. S. E. exchange, was the immediate choice of the club, and he was installed at once. A committee was appointed to arrange for another social gathering of the club in the near future, as the success of the first smoker was unanimously declared most encouraging.

C. G. Kingsley Goes Over to Fox.

Pittsburgh, PPa.—One of the most important managerial changes that has taken place here in some time has been announced by the Pittsburgh office of the Famous Players. C. G. Kingsley, who has had charge of the branch for the past six months, tendered his resignation on January 1 and has accepted a similar position with the Fox Film as manager of the Detroit office. It is understood that he is to leave soon on a trip to Europe in the interests of the Fox organization.

D. Leo Dennison heads Local Famous.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Mr. Kingsley has been succeeded at the Famous Players by D. Leo Dennison, one of the most able and prominent film men in the country. Mr. Dennison has been persnoal representative in Pittsburgh of Mr. Steele, of the Paramount.

"The Crisis" Headquarters Here.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—H. P. Wolfenberg and Joseph Levy, handling "The Crisis" in this territory, have been stopping at the William Penn hotel recently, and it is understood that they are planning to make their headquarters in this city. Mr. Levy, who was formerly manager of the Fox exchange in St. Louis, is a Pittsburgher and has many friends here.

Hold Discussion on Pictures for Children

Pittsburgh Educators and Others Interested in Motion Picture Consider an Organization to Help Better Films Movement.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Much interest has been aroused in Pittsburgh moving picture circles by a movement to form an organization to provide special pictures for children. The trade in general has taken a favorable attitude, as it is believed that it will help eliminate the talk of proposed legislation barring children under a certain age from moving picture theaters in this state. A meeting of prominent educators, civic authorities and business men was held at the Fort Pitt hotel on Saturday, January 6, for the purpose of discussing the proposal with a number of leading women's clubs which are promoting it. Addresses were delivered by Superintendent William M. Davidson, of Garland, president of the Chamber of Commerce and member of City Council, and a committee of three university professors. M. J. C. Kornblume, of the Rowland and Clark theaters, spoke as representative of the moving picture interests.

Practically all of the speakers opposed censorship in unmistakable language and declared it to be unnecessary and undesirable. A committee of selection of special programs for children was strongly advocated. Superintendent Davidson stated that he is a firm believer in moving pictures as an educational factor, and predicted that in time they will be established in all schools as a regular part of the school system.

The result of the meeting was the appointment of a committee to carry on the work in conjunction with the Children's Service Bureau. The committee includes the following: Mrs. Edward A. Jones, president of the Congress of Women's Clubs; Mrs. F. Q. Fothergill, president of the Pennsylvania Congress of Mothers; Mrs. Carl J. Fechheimer, of the Drama League; Miss Alice N. Parker, of the Council of Jewish Women, under whose auspices the meeting was held.

Youngstown to Have New Theater

Federal Holding Company Takes Fifty-Year Lease on Excelsior Block at Federal and Hazel Streets—President Campbell Announces a New Picture Theater —Will Seat 2,000 and Cost Quarter of a Million.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—The Federal Holding Company has taken a fifty-year lease on the Excelsior block, at Federal and Hazel streets, and President L. J. Campbell announces that a handsome modern moving picture theater will be constructed on the site during this year. Possession of the property will be given on April 10, and work will be rushed, with a view to opening the house by Thanksgiving. It will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000, and will seat 2,000 people, making it the largest theater in the city. Luxurious quarters for both men and women, a pipe organ, costly decorations and other features will add to the attractiveness of the house, which will be designed by C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, who has a national reputation as a theater architect, assisted by Stanley & Scheible, of Youngstown. The site has a frontage of 65 feet on Federal street and 150 feet on Hazel street.

Public interest in the project is being stimulated by an offer of a prize of $25 for the best suggestion for a name for the new house. General Manager C. W. Deibel, of the Federal Holding Company, will receive the names, at 202 West Federal street. The company is backed by some of the leading financial interests of the city, and there is no doubt of its intention and ability to carry through the project.

Strand's New Sign Breaks Record.

Dayton, O.—The sign erected to advertise the new Strand theater, Dayton's newest and handsomest house, is one of the largest electric signs ever built in the city. It is 75 feet above the pavement and 2,000 electric lamps are utilized in obtaining a shower effect. The front of the theater is brilliantly illuminated, aside from the sign, being studded with lamps, while the lobby and front are lighted by numerous small lights and by three big 500-watt nitrogen lamps.

Theodore C. Chifos Helps Miami Valley Hospital.

Dayton, O.—Manager Theodore C. Chifos, of the Apollo theater, recently demonstrated his public spirit in aid of a good cause by donating his gross receipts on a given day to the fund being raised for the benefit of the Miami Valley hospital, one of Dayton's pet institutions. Special efforts were made to draw a large crowd, and the day was highly profitable to the fund.

Keith Interests Will Improve Property.

Cincinnati, O.—A loan of $350,000 has been made by a local bank to the interests behind the move for the improvement of the property around and including Keith's theater, secured by the Keith property itself. It is understood that these interests have options on property fronting on Fountain Square also, including that of the Fountain Square Theaters Company, the United Theaters Company and others, owning the Star and Bijou theaters, and that arrangements may be made to extend the proposed improvement to Fountain Square. At present no drastic changes to Keith's theater are proposed, and the new building contemplated will be built around it.

"Flashing Badges" No Nuisance.

Cincinnati, O.—A report which gained circulation in Cincinnati recently to the effect that policemen and firemen have been gaining admission to theaters and other places of amusement by the simple expedient of "flashing their badges" created much feeling at City Hall, where it was vigorously denied. It was declared that policemen and firemen enter theaters only in the course of their duty, and, on the other hand, theatrical men all through the downtown district, including the managers of the leading moving picture houses, declared that they had never made any objection to admitting members of the two departments, but that, on the contrary, they desire them, in the interest of safety. As far as the moving picture houses are concerned it seems that there has been little or no abuse of the authority of a city service badge as a means of gaining admission, and that only men assigned to duty have entered the theaters.

F. F. Stoll May Produce Film.

Cincinnati, O.—Capt. F. F. Stoll, author of "The Bond Millions" and principal promotor in the Congress Film Corporation, which will produce it, seems to mean business. At least, it has been definitely announced that he has closed a contract with James J. Corbett, actor and former heavyweight champion, to take the leading part at a large salary, apparently feeling that no one else would quite fit the part. Corbett was in the city recently filling a vaudeville engagement, and Captain Stoll went with him to Lexington, Ky., where the deal was closed. In spite of the fact that the picture is still in the scenario state, rights to several states have been sold, Frank Bernard, of Cincinnati, purchasing the Ohio rights.

George F. Weaver Promoted.

Cincinnati, O.—George F. Weaver has been made assistant district manager of the World Film in this territory, and his rapid rise has been a striking example of a good man's coming to the front quickly. It is only a little over six months since he was a salesman. He has been local manager of the Cincinnati exchange and is now promoted again. He has made a host of friends among exhibitors and exchangemen here. His acquaintances say that his rise demonstrates the fact still further that the film business can use and reward men of his integrity and ability. His good disposition and sane judgment are qualities that have told in his success.

Geo. F. Weaver.

Sign Fell on Passerby, Theater Has to Pay.

Newport, Ky.—A verdict for $425 was rendered by a jury in the Circuit Court against the Hippodrome Theater Company, recently, in favor of a woman who alleged that a sign advertising the theater had fallen on her. However, inasmuch as she claimed permanent serious injuries, and asked damages of $10,000, the Hippodrome management does not feel so cast down over the result of the case as it might.

Cleveland Mayor Wants No More of Nude

"Purity" Brought Out a Complaint from Someone—Mayor Sends Representative to Tell All Exhibitors Not to Show Film Like It.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—"No more nude women in films in Cleveland."

That's the edict issued by Mayor Harry L. Davis to the police department last week.

It's all because someone complained about "Purity" at the Strand theater.

The mayor didn't stop this showing, because it had been booked for two weeks and he didn't want to interfere with Manager Adler's rights. The film had been passed by the Ohio censors, with several cuts, but a couple of nude scenes were left in it. But the chief of police sent his officers to every theater in the city and notified them that in the future they should be careful about what they book, because instructions were issued that in the future the police would not allow them shown, censored or not censored.

Fox Feature Opens.

Cleveland, O.—"A Daughter of the Gods" opened in northern Ohio at the Valentine theater, Toledo, O. It played to a record business during the first week's engagement. The Cleveland booking is for the Keith Hippodrome, a vaudeville house seating over 4,000. This picture follows the vaudeville season in the spring.

The first showing in northern Ohio of "Civilization" was at the Strand theater, Akron, starting New Year's Day. It did a big business.

"Witching Hour" Bought.

Cleveland, O.—McMahon and Jackson, of Cincinnati, have purchased the states of Ohio and Kentucky on "The Witching Hour." They in turn have disposed of rights for northern Ohio to the Exclusive Photoplays, Inc., Cleveland.

The first bookings on this feature was a week at the Walnut theater, Cincinnati, and a week at the Alhambra, Toledo.

Incorporate "Idle Wives."

Cleveland, O.—The Idle Wives Photoplay Company was incorporated at Columbus, O., last week. It is a Cleveland company, directed by the same people who directed the successful tours of the "Where Are My Children?" feature, of which Al Brandt is manager.

Four Exchanges Combine.

Cleveland, O.—Four local independent film exchanges have been combined within the last two weeks.

They are: The States Film Company, J. Frank Hatch Film Company, the Ohio Feature Film Company and the Exclusive Photoplays Company. The name of the new concern is Exclusive Photoplays, Inc.

Mr. Hatch has withdrawn from active work in this field, having gone to his theaters in New Jersey. W. W. Kupl has sold his interests in the Ohio Feature Film Company, and the owners of the States Film Company have withdrawn.

Those in the new Exclusive Features, Inc., are Messrs. F. L. Greenwald, Fred and Victor Schramm, J. J. Mooney and J. E. Surrell.

The 10th ANNIVERSARY NUMBER will be referred to for years as a guide to the progress made in this industry from 1907 to 1917. Biggest advertising value ever offered. March 10th. Advertising forms close February 23rd.

"Pearl of Army" Canadianized.

Toronto, Ont.—Exhibitors in goodly number gathered at the Strand theater, Toronto, on Thursday evening, Jan. 4, to witness the private screening of three episodes of the Pathe serial, "Pearl of the Army," when it was discovered that the prints of this release for the Dominion had been considerably Canadianized. Moving pictures of Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the Liberal opposition in Canada, and other prominent Canadian citizens, together with Canadian subtitles, had been added to the picture to bring about this result.

The Strand theater was also well filled for a private showing of five episodes of the latest Mutual serial, "Lass of the Lumberlands," on Monday evening, Jan. 8, under the auspices of W. F. Barrett, local representative of the Mutual.

Torontonians Want No Vaudeville.

Toronto, Ont.—After experimenting with vaudeville acts as added attractions for two months, R. S. Marvin of the Beaver theater has decided to discard the "vaude" stuff and has increased his film programme instead. Mr. Marvin had two of his lieutenants, Messrs. Mulhall and Green, make a house-to-house canvass of West Toronto, where the Beaver theater is located, to ascertain the opinion of residents who were or would be patrons. This census showed that the vaudeville numbers were keeping people away from the house rather than attracting patronage.

Film Change-About in Canada

Marc Brock Takes Over Toronto's Strand—May Make a Theater Chain—Clarence Robson Will Manage Strand—Changes in Management of Local Exchanges—Two Exchange Supervisors for the Canadian Mutual.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard street, East Toronto, Ontario, Can.

TORONTO, Ontario.—Things in general in the Toronto circle of films have been so turned upside down during the past few days that a new inventory of the trade will literally have to be taken before exhibitors of this territory will again know who's who and where.

Marc Breck Assumes Charge of Strand.

The dizzy whirl started when R. S. Marvin ceased to be manager of Toronto's big downtown house, the Strand. Marc Brock, the well known New York theatrical magnate, was in Toronto when the change was made, and it is understood that he has assumed financial control of the theater. Harry Brock, his brother, has three picture theaters in Ottawa, it is declared, and it is possible that a chain of theaters in Canada will be acquired by the Brocks. The successor of Mr. Marvin as manager of the Strand is Clarence Robson, formerly manager of the All-features, Ltd., a local independent exchange, while Mr. Marvin becomes manager of the Beaver theater, West Toronto. Mr. Marvin is also directly interested in the big 2,200-seat theater at Camp Borden, Ontario, and the summer theater at Angus, Ontario.

Strand Weekly Sold.

With the change in Strand management came the decision to dispose of the theater's studio and the Strand Weekly, a local news picture, which was not a paying proposition, according to statements from reliable authorities. To date only one change has been made in the staff personnel of the theater and Mr. Mitchell is remaining as manager for the front of the house.

James Travis to Manage Allfeatures.

The next step was the appointment of James Travis, formerly Pathe representative here, to the managership of All-features, Ltd., and Travis has also started to work up a number of big state right propositions already.

Wally Davidson Heads Local Pathe.

With the passing of Travis to All-features, Ltd., Wally Davidson, formerly of the Mutual and Blue Bird, took possession of the manager's office at the Pathe branch, known as the Specialty Film Import, Ltd. A. F. Patenaude, acting manager for this branch, stays with the firm. Mr. Davidson's brother, who was with the Vitagraph office here, has also left Toronto for Chicago.

Glenn Kerr to Run Mutual Office.

Glen Kerr, formerly booker at the Toronto Mutual branch, has become manager of the Mutual office in Montreal in succession to Mr. Malcolm, who has gone to Chicago to join C. B. Price with Super Pictures, Inc. Price was formerly Canadian general manager for the Mutual.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Two Mutual General Supervisors.

Announcement has also been made that W. F. Barrett, Toronto Mutual manager, will henceforth have general supervision of the Mutual branches in Eastern Canada, while J. H. Boothe, manager of the Winnipeg branch, will be the general supervisor for the west. On account of the advancement given Barrett, the responsibilities of Art Wilbur at the Toronto office have been increased.

E. Auger Representing Vitagraph.

Not long ago E. Auger, one of the big men of the film industry, visited Toronto as general exchange supervisor for the Mutual. He was scheduled to stop off at Toronto again on Jan. 15, but this time as representative for the Greater Vitagraph. Mr. Auger is well known throughout Eastern Canada, having made his start under L. E. Ouimet, Pathe general manager for Canada.

Metro Gets Permanent Injunction.

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has been made here that Metro Pictures, Ltd., controlling Metro releases in Canada, had obtained a permanent injunction against the Standard Film Service, Ltd., restraining the latter from making further use of Metro subjects throughout the Dominion or of disposing of the Metro films in any way. This is the outcome of the big legal dispute between the two Canadian film corporations. Henceforth the regular Metro releases will be booked in Canada through the branches of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd.

New Glasgow's Roseland Theater Opens

Exhibitor N. W. Mason Throws Open New $80,000 Picture House on January 15—Trenton, N. S., to Have New Theater.

By F. F. Sully, 68 Landsdowne Avenue, St. Johns, N. S.

NEW GLASGOW, N. S.—Final arrangements have been completed by N. W. Masson for the opening of his new $80,000 Roseland theater on January 15. As the opening attraction Mr. Mason will offer the Bluebird subject, "Little Eve Edgarton," featuring Ella Hall and Herbert Rawlison. Mr. Mason and his partners have already purchased ground at Trenton, N. S., for the erection of a new $10,000 theater, which is to be ready by April 1. The new theater will have a seating capacity of about 500, and will be one of the branches that Mr. Mason is to have in that section. The Empire theater at Westville, which has been closed for some little time, is to be opened by the hustling manager within a few weeks, and will furnish a second booking place for the features pictures, which are to be shown in the Roseland.

Foxfilm Notes.

St. John, N. B.—"Social Pirates," the first of the Fox Film comedies, is to be released in this territory in the middle of February, and Carl Crawford, manager of the local Fox exchange, says the bookings are coming in fast. Fox features are now being shown in St. John by Billy Smith, manager of the Empress; by A. B. Farmer, at the Star, and Fred Trifts at the eGm. I. Sourkes, who has been connected with the local Fox exchange, has been recalled to the Montreal office to go on the road in that territory. While in the Maritime provinces he was very successful and made a host of friends.

Manager Acker Ran Six Shows.

Halifax, N. S.—A new record, perhaps, for one day's business and the number of consecutive performance for one day has beenestablished by L. R. Acker of the Family theater, who on New Year's day ran six complete shows, finally closing the doors of the theater at 2 A. M. January 2. Halifax theaters have never extended their shows later than 10:30 or eleven o'clock, but the mass of people that besieged the doors of all motion picture houses that evening meant that the theater managers must show until every patron had had his holiday outing. Mr. Acker extended his shows later than any other exhibitor, and to him belongs the distinction of having the longest business day since the establishment of the industry in Halifax.

Maritime Business Notes.

Halifax, N. S.—"The Purple Mask" is making its debut in this territory with a great flurry of advertising. Steve C. Hurely, of St. John, secretary of the Maritime Exhibitors' League, and fanager of the Unique and the Lyric, is featuring the first installment at the former theater, and it is also being featured at the Palace theater, Sydney, the Empire, this city, and the Academy of Music, New Glasgow.

St. John, N. B.—With the city bristling with the war spirit, pictures of the trenches and the work of the British and Allied forces prove great drawing cards. The Universal production, "The Campbells Are Coming," which was seen here at the Imperial several months ago, has been given a return booking by Thomas Prince, manager of the Palace, and will be shown there in a short time.

Manager Kitty Had a Big Dragon.

Yarmouth, N. S.—K. Kelty, manager of the People's theater, is a firm believer in the value of advertising. On the opening night of "The Yellow Menace" he had built a dragon forty feet long. This was displayed, decorated with lanterns, in the lobby, and the patrons as they entered the theater were surrounded by a truly Oriental atmosphere. The display was both novel and attractive, and proved to be a big business getter.

Many Feet of Film Show Local Agriculture.

St. John, N. B.—A most distinguished audience recently assembled at the Imperial to witness a screening of the views taken by the New Brunswick Immigration Bureau. These pictures, some 6,000 feet of them, advertise the plendid possibilities offered on New Brunswick farms. The views were shown exactly as they were taken, without titles, subtitles or proper arranging.

Tennessee Women Draft Bill

Censor Measure of Radical Nature Has Been Prepared by Hamilton County Women's Club Representatives and Presented to the County's Assemblymen —Calls for Five Censors in Every Town or City.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—The Hamilton county delegation to the Sixtieth General Assembly, Tenese Legislature, has been requested to stand sponsor for a measure providing for state censorship of moving pictures in Tennessee. The bill was drafted by the Hamilton County Council of Women, an organization representing 6,000 members of women's clubs in this vicinity, and strong pressure will be brought to bear upon the legislative body by representatives of these clubs to insure its passage, and enactment into law. Provisions of the bill inclnde the establishment of a board of five, to be appointed by the governor, consisting of three men and two women, for each town and city in the state where moving pictures are shown.

Exhibitors Aroused Over Censor Bill.

The Tennessee exhibitors have become aroused over the prospect of operating under a state censorship law, and are writing letters and seeking personal interviews with the legislators in an effort to forestall its enactment. One of the leading exhibitors of Chattanooga has obtained clippings from one of the newspapers in his city and mailed a copy of each of the large exhibitors over the state, requesting that each theater manager do his part toward preventing its passage.

Practically every woman's club and parent-teacher organization in the city has discussed the question of moving picture censorship, and taken action relative to the current productions shown at Chattanooga photoplay houses. A year ago the Chattanooga Women's Club fostered a campaign for special pictures for children, and for a while these were shown at a Market street theater every Saturday morning. The plain failed, and this was attributed to the fact that the public refused to co-operate with the club and the moving picture management.

Theater managers in every city and town in the state where pictures are exhibited should follow the lead of their fellow exhibitor in Chattanooga and work to prevent the passage of this bill. Up to the time this article was written the censorship measure had not been introduced on first reading in the legislature, which is now in session. and there is time for some valuable work to be done by the picture interests before the bill is taken up for active consideration and discussion.

Ex-Manager Shelton With Brenon.

Nashville, Tenn.—In a letter received here, Roy Shelton, ex-manager of the Strand theater at Nashville, announces his affiliation with the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, in the capacity of director for the Brenon productions. Mr. Shelton is now working on "The "Eternal Sin," a feature release starring Florence Reed and William E. Shay. While widely known in the South as a leading theatrical manager, few of Mr. Shelton's friends realized his qualifications for the important duties incident to a director's work, and wish him every success in his new venture.

Fox Star to Visit Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—Harry Hilliard, celebrated star of William Fox's version of Romeo and Juliet, and other late features. will pay Nashville a visit in the near future. Mr. Hilliard formerly lived in this city and has a number of relatives here, as well as a host of friends. Prior to entering upon his work on the speaking stage, Mr. Hilliard prepared himself to become a physician, but turned in preference to the dramatic profession, where he has achieved remarkable success both on stage and screen. The actor will be extensively entertained while in Nashville, and wil probably appear at local picture houses.

The Princess Speaks.

Memphis, Tenn.—Following a question propounded the public through the press, "Why should the Triangle, World and Bluebird film manufacturers discriminate against the Princess theater?" the program for the Victoria theater of Atlanta, dated December 3, is cited, which includes Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life" (World); Bessie Love in "Hell-to-Pay Austin" (Fine Arts); William Collier Jr., in "The Bugle Call" (Triangle); and "The Evil Women Do" (Bluebird). The Princess makes the following assertion: "The opposition obects, so we are cut off, and you pay 10, 15 and sometimes 25 cents to see the above stars." The Princess, which is one of the largest and finest houses in Memphis. claims that unfair discrimination is being practiced against it, as shown by the fact that other houses are being permitted to run this service at five cents. This house adheres to the strict policy of five-cent admissions, and its slogan is "Five Cents—Why Pay More?" and highest grade multiple features are shown at that price. [The Moving Picture World has repeatedly pointed out the senselessness of five-cent admissions to large and expensive productions. An exchange might commendably refuse service to any theater on this score; but there should be no exception.—Ed.]

Manager Wm. P. Haslett Takes Bride.

Memphis, Tenn.—Wm. P. Haslett, local manager for the General, was married on January 6 to Miss Lily Blackwell Brown of Philadelphia. Since assuming management of the Memphis branch in November Mr. Haslett has made scores of new friends in the film industry, who hasten to congratulate the popular official. Mr. and Mrs. Haslett will make their home at 822 Jefferson avenue, Memphis, after January 15.

Jake Wells Buys More Theater Interests

Strand-Vaudette Stock Has Now Been Added to Other Local Holdings—Owns the Forsyth, Lyric, Odeon and the Rialto.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Jake Wells, who already owns four theaters in Atlanta, has purchased large interests in the Strand-Vaudette Company controlling the Strand and Vaudette theaters, and thereby becoming the dominating factor in the local motion picture field.

Rumors of Mr. Wells's intentions have been going the rounds for some time, but not until he closed the contract Friday, Dec. 29, and authorized a statement, did the purchase become definitely known. He now owns the Forsyth, Lyric, Odeon and Rialto theaters, and is prominently identified with the Strand and Vaudette.

Mr. Wells's association in the Strand-Vaudette Company will not affect the present management of these theaters, although he will head the company. Alpha Fowler, who has conducted them for the past six months, will continue as general manager of both houses.

Relations between the exhibitors and the exchanges still continue to be marked by the usual policy of "live and let live" that has always characterized such dealings in this city. If the exhibitors have any special grievance they are keeping mighty still about it. They have all been asking for good comedies to round out their feature programs with, and the producers seem to be rising to the demand and giving them what they want.

Big features still have the preference, and serials continue as popular as ever.

ST. LOUIS FILM BUSINESS 1917.

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Pl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST LOUIS, MO.—Things look good for St. Louis for the coming year. There is, of course, the usual number of croakers who declare that the business is going to the dogs and that there is no money in exhibiting pictures any more. But in the main the optimists are in the majority, and they are all making big plans for the coming year.

Business for the two or three weeks immediately preceding the holidays was slack, but now that the present buying and visiting and merry making and the general high jinks are over, the people are digging down in their pockets and finding the nickels and dimes necessary to take them to the theaters showing their favorite films.

Business from a standpoint of admissions is decidedly better than this time last year. A number of houses are getting more money at the door than before; among them, the New Grand Central, the West End Lyric, the Pageant, the Royal, the King's, the Fairy, and a few others. The general prosperity that has spread out all over the country makes the possibilities of still more houses raising their admission prices, especially the five-cent houses.

"Crisis" Makes Splendid Impression.

St. Louis, Mo.—"The Crisis," which opened at the New Grand Central theater on Dec. 24, is creating a splendid impression on audiences and playing to packed houses. Manager William Sievers is exhibiting the film in an elaborate manner. A special publicity campaign is being used to exploit the film and to awaken public interest in the local and historical side of the feature. St. Louis is the scene of the story of "The Crisis," and Winston Churchill, the author, gathered most of the historical data of the novel from the archives of the Missouri Historical Society, and much of the actual work of writing was done in St. Louis. All these facts are being brought to the public notice through the press, and a souvenir program, which is distributed.

Capt. Stanley Lewis, an ex-army officer, who uses an automobile which has a machine gun mounted on the side, is assisting in the publicity work. Capt. Lewis gives lectures in the schools, and before various clubs and societies, his subject being Abraham Lincoln and the part he played in "The Crisis." Capt. Lewis also gives short talks in the book departments of the big stores. These lectures are illustrated with free-hand cartoon pictures of Grant, Lincoln, and the principal characters of the play. These sketches are handed out to the public at the lectures.

Manager Sievers intends to run "The Crisis" for five weeks. Admission prices ranging from 25 to 75 cents are charged, and all seats in the theater are reserved at the night performances.

Big Feature Rights Corp. Extending.

Louisville, Ky.—The Big Features Rights Corporation of Louisville, is rapidly coming to the front as one of the largest booking organizations in the South. This company now has a number of good pictures under contract, and is buying big releases steadily. Announcement has just been made to the effect that the company's offices will be moved from the Atherton building to a suite of rooms on the fourth floor of the Masonic building.

The company has also opened an office at Atlanta, Ga., under the management of Hugh L. Cardoza, who will be Southeastern representative. U. T. Koch, formerly with the Selznick enterprises, will also be associated with the Atlanta office. That office is making a special bid for business in the various cities which have a big tourist business during this season of the year. An extra print of "The Little Girl Next Door" has been secured for Florida, and seven prints are now working.

Inquiries are coming in well on "The Crisis," recently contracted for, and arrangements have been made for a traveling show, with an eighteen-piece orchestra. The picture will open in Louisville and Jacksonville, Fla., simultaneously, on January 21, showing at the Duvall theater, in Jacksonville. Four prints have been secured on "The Crisis" which will be booked in seven states.

Films and Vaudeville for Nickel.

Louisville, Ky.—The Hippodrome theater, Second and Market streets, has put in a large stage, and is running pictures and vaudeville for five cents. Two acts of vaudeville and several reels of pictures are making up the bills, which are going big, and the house during the first two days of the new program was unable to seat the crowds. M. A. Jablow, manager of the house, is more than pleased with the way business is coming at the start.

Louisville Keith Chain Grows

Another Theater Added By Taking Over the Strand—Two Picture Theaters and a Vaudeville House Now Controlled by Keith Interests—Predecessors Did Not Succeed With Strand—Keith Has a Better Chance.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A deal was recently closed in Louisville whereby the Keith interests took over the Strand theater, giving their initial performance on Sunday, December 31, when William Farnum appeared on the screen. This makes the third theater in Louisville under the Keith management, they being the National, vaudeville house; the Mary Anderson, photoplay house, and the new Strand, picture theater. The Strand, formerly the Masonic theater, has changed hands on numerous occasions during the past few years. While the house is extremely attractive and has a large seating capacity, it has never been as yet a profitable financial investment.

In December, 1915, McRae Brothers, of Detroit, opened it as a picture house after spending several thousand dollars on improvements, new fittings, etc. The firm's equipment was later sold at a constable's sale on a distress warrant. A few months ago the Chestnut Street Amusement Company was organized, and operated the house, later being reorganized some six weeks ago as the Strand Amusement Company, Inc. The chief difficulty experienced by the former exhibitors has been that film service was so tightly contracted for in Louisville, that the house had considerable difficulty in providing itself with enough new films to keep things going. Under the Keith management this difficulty will be overcome as the Keith people have been over supplied with good material for some months, and can afford to contract for large productions The Strand has the Bluebird service, while Keith has the Fox, Vitagraph and Metro, together with other productions to fill out the bills at the two houses. It is claimed that the Keith interests now have under contract sufficient material to keep both houses going for months to come.

For two years or more it has been rumored that Keith was preparing to locate another picture house in Louisville, several plans being rumored and later given up. It is the general opinion of local exhibitors and film men that the Keith people can make the house go if anyone can, and it is predicted that it will finally get on a paying basis.

Two 5-Cent Theaters Darken.

Louisville, Ky.—Two of the five-cent theaters on Market street, the Crystal at Third and Market, and the Olympic at Preston and Market, have discontinued operations. It is understood that the lease on the Crystal has expired and will not be renewed by the Switow interests. The lease on the Olympic also expired, and it has not been determined what use will be made of the house.

Free Xmas Shows in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—The Keith interests in Louisville gave a real screen treat to the "kiddies," as a Christmas present on Saturday morning, December 30, when "Alice in Wonderland" was shown free of charge to all children at the Mary Anderson theater. The performance was started at 10 o'clock, and the overflow from the house was taken to the Strand theater, where the pictures were run one hour after the first performance commenced. Thousands of children were accommodated in the two theaters, a large number being turned away at that.

Benefit for Armenians and Syrians.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—Manager Stockley, of the Princess theater, recently gave a benefit performance for the Armenian and Syrian sufferers, donating twenty-five per cent. of the proceeds to this cause. He also arranged a special performance at which appeared the Ellis Hawaiian Quintette, which took extremely well.

Kentucky Theater Notes of Interest.

Louisville, Ky.—The children's special Saturday morning shows have been switched from the Mary Anderson to the Strand theater, which recently went under the Keith control.

La Grange, Ky.—C. Demaree Arnold, manager of the Grand theater, in a recent notice to the public, stated that there were but five nights in December that the theater made actual operating expenses, and that it was up to the public to support the expensive features now being shown, or cheaper films would have to be shown.

Louisville, Ky.—The Gayety theater, which has been showing regular stage attractions for some time, has gone to vaudeville, showing Sullivan and Considine bookings at the outset.

Pikesville, Ky.—A. J. Mank and Thomas A. Williamson have formed a partnership to conduct the Royal theater.

Mt. Vernon, Ky.—George Owens, operator of the Boone Way theater, is now getting better support from the people of Mt. Vernon.

Maysville, Ky.—Martin Durrett, referee in bankruptcy, is planning to close up the case of the Gem theater as quickly as possible, and discharge the trustee. The case has hung fire for a number of months.

Sebree, Ky.—D. A. Turpin is remodeling his picture theater, excavating for an elevated floor, and having a stage erected from which he proposes handling light vaudeville.

Rivalry of Churches and Picture Shows

In Lexington, Ky., Ministerial Union Proposes Entertainments Under Municipal Supervision to Eliminate Commercial Shows.

LEXINGTON, Ky.—The Sunday closing agitation has broken out in a new place in this city, but it is the general opinion of the exhibitors that it will have very little effect. Some time ago an effort was made to abolish Sunday shows through legal procedure, but when it was found that the mayor, as well as several of the members of the commission (Lexington operating under the commission form of government) were opposed to the movement, it was dropped.

Now the Ministerial Union, in an effort to increase attendances on Sunday evenings, has undertaken to start something in the nature of an opposition form of amusement. The union proposes band concerts and similar entertainments in the parks during the summer months, and centralized entertainments of approved character in the winter months, under municipal supervision. It is even intimated that the union may work out plans whereby moving pictures can be shown in the parks and auditorium, of a healthful nature and good in their influence. It is planned to give free entertainments and in this way to eliminate the Sunday picture theater.

However, the union is planning to give its attractions during the afternoon hours when they would not conflict with church services. Therefore, it would hardly effect evening moving pictures, and would have little effect in closing the theaters.

A committee, composed of Dean Robert Massie, of Christ Church Cathedral; Dr. I. J. Spencer, of the Central Christian Church, and Dr. E. G. Cameron, of the First Methodist Church, was appointed several weeks ago, and has been working out the details. Several conferences have been held with the exhibitors, including C. H. Berryman and Charles Scott, of the Ben Ali theater, and the Lexington Opera House; Nelson Van Gurnee, of the Ada Meade, and J. H. Stamper, Jr., of the Orpheum. The theater men have shown strong opposition to any plan to forgo Sunday shows, and the Ministerial Union has been unable to reach any agreement with the exhibitors.

From the exhibitors' viewpoint it is a question as to whether an old style band concert, religious moving pictures, or any other such attractions would prove of sufficient interest to the public to cut any figure in the box office receipts. The real patrons of the high grade moving picture theater are no longer interested in entertainments of the character which took their attention in the days of long ago, when there were no Pickfords, Youngs, etc., and considering the fact that the modern theater also furnishes good music with its pictures, there is no comparison to be drawn in the nature of the entertainments where there is only five or ten cents at stake.

Princeton, Ky.—J. N. Brewer, owner of the Orion theater, has announced that he will dispose of his theater and the lease, and give up active business connections for a time on account of ill health.

Hazard, Ky.—It is being rumored here that plans are being made for another moving picture theater, to feature pictures and also vaudeville.

Mrs. Shear Building a Theater

In New Orleans the Wife of Well Known Exchange Man Is Actively Interested in a Beautiful New Picture Theater Now Being Built—Site Is Out on Washington Avenue—Will Seat 1,000 and Be Up-to-the-Minute.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Ground was broken on the first of the year for the building of the most pretentious suburban photoplay theater that has yet been planned. And a woman is the moving spirit in the new enterprise. Mrs. Al G. Shear is the active promoter of the new house, being a member of the firm of Sobel & Shear, leading exhibitors of the city. Nat Sobel is the manager of the Washington theater, a most attractive playhouse on Washington avenue, and Mrs. Shear manages the Carrollton, which is situated in a high class and populous neighborhood. Both of these managers fear no other opposition besides bad weather, and they have a clientele which is most dependable.

Mrs. Al. G. Shear.

Mrs. Shear is most energetic and she knows all of her patrons personally. She knows their likes and dislikes and she knows the film game from one end to the other. Her judgment of a picture may be accepted as final so far as the verdict which her patrons will render is concerned, and, therefore, there are few bad pictures at the Carrollton. Mrs. Shear is a New York girl and has made a notable success of her venture in the motion picture exhibition field. Her husband is manager of the Consolidated Film exchange in this city and they make an invincible team. Mrs. Shear always insists upon the best in everything that pertains to her theater and she plans to have every modern convenience in the new house.

It is to have a seating capacity of 1,000 and every chair in the house will be of the latest opera pattern. Every convenience for the patrons is to be installed, and the most modern equipment will be used. Two motor-driven Simplex machines will be used in the projection, and the lights will be controlled by two arc rectifiers, while the pictures will be reflected upon a Minusa screen. There are to be ladies' rest rooms, telephone booths, running ice water, maid service, and every convenience that can be suggested to make the house popular. A $5,000 Hill-Green-Lane pipe organ is to be installed and the musical program is to be a feature of each entertainment. The construction of the theater will require from 60 to 90 days, and in the meantime the Carrollton will continue to be operated.

Birmingham Film Men Enter New Orleans Field.

New Orleans, La.—The Alhambra Amusement Company, of Birmingham, Ala., has entered the New Orleans motion picture field and it is the intention of the managers to inaugurate a chain of first class suburban theaters in the best sections of the city.

The present plan is to begin without delay the erection of at least three modern and commodious theaters built upon the most substantial lines. Exhibitors who know the business thoroughly have canvassed the field carefully and conservative estimates are that at least twelve houses with seating capacity of 1,000 to 1,500, located in selected sections, can be made to pay handsome dividends. There is a growing antipathy to the present makeshifts that are doing duty as motion picture theaters, and the proposed change for the better is a very welcome one.

One of the first locations which was secured by this company, however, was quickly leased to Sobel & Shear for their new project, work upon which has already commenced. Two other locations are practically closed by the same interests, and an era of building of better theaters is about to be inaugurated.

Howard Gale With Mutual.

New Orleans, La.—Howard Gale, who was manager of the old Kleine-Edison film exchange, has been appointed assistant manager of the serial department of the local Mutual exchange, and is already thoroughly familiar with the work. He succeeded Charles Ghennie, who has affiliated himself with A. J. Xydias in the handling of independent films in this territory.

Bert Moran to Conduct K-E-S-E Office.

New Orleans, La.—Bert M. Moran, of New York, has been appointed to succeed J. C. Ragland as manager of the local Kleine-Ediso-Selig-Essanay film exchange and has already entered upon his duties. Former Manager Ragland expects to return to New York, where he has a wide acquaintance in theatrical circles.

D. A. Andrews Owns Rialto Theater.

New Orleans, La.—D. A. Andrews has purchased the Rialto theater of John Douglas, who has had the management of the house for the past few months. The Rialto is among the best located suburban theaters in the city, and when it is properly managed is a money maker, as its past history indicates.

Romeo Theater Taken by H. Simons.

New Orleans, La.—H. Simons has taken over the management of the Romeo theater, a suburban house in one of the most thickly populated neighborhoods, and will institute some needed improvements. Mrs. Bloom was the former owner of the theater, but a series of misfortunes, among them the loss of health, induced her to give up the management of the enterprise.

New Orleans' Charity Hospital Tax Now Due

City's Most Obdurate Tax May Darken Several of the More Backward Picture Houses—Theaters With No Floors.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Taxes and death are the two things from which it is said there is no escape, and if predictions are reliable it will be demonstrated early this year, in New Orleans, that some of the suburban theaters have escaped neither. There is a graduated tax, city and state, based upon seating capacity on all motion picture theaters. Houses with a seating capacity of less than 300 are assessed $50 per annum, and from this figure the graduation is regular until the seating capacities of 1,000 are reached, when the assessment is $400 per annum. It might be possible to stave off these taxes and yet operate the theaters for a time, at least, if the manager has the hardihood to try it, but there is one tax in this city with which no one is allowed to dally. This is a fixed assessment which goes to the support of the Charity Hospital. New Orleans is proud of her Charity Hospital.

A lot of people fare better there, barring various stages of indisposition, than they do at home. And there are no distinctions in races, colors or former conditions of servitude. Charity Hospital ambulances scurry from the centers to remote districts of the city and all are admitted without question or price. The great institution is supported entirely by direct taxation. Motion picture theaters are assessed $25 per year flat.

This city has a large number of alleged theaters that have the habit of running between "wind and water," as the saying goes. Some of them even are floorless; many of them are fitted only with benches, yet they all get fairly good crowds in fair weather. The weather has not been all sunshine here this winter, therefore some of these theaters have been driven to desperate straits. The tax collectors are obdurate concerning the Charity hospital tax, and the statement is made that more than a score of the smaller suburban houses in the city are scheduled for permanent closing as fast as the last demand can be made upon them. Leaving out the personal equasion, this is not such a calamity as it might at first appear to be. The closing of the insignificant houses will improve the business of the ones that are making an intelligent endeavor to keep abreast of the times and to give their patrons good films under good conditions. The exchange men will perhaps note a slight falling off in number of accounts, but at the same time they will be relieved of the annoyances that conspire at the present time to make their lives miserable.

Picture Men and the Land Show

Southwestern States Will Choose Three Most Popular Girls—Every City to Have One Candidate—Grand Contest in Atlanta—Picture Men Are Doing Their Share in Boosting the South's Fertile Lands.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., At lanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, Ga.—C. E. Tandy, vice-president and general manager of the Southern Triangle and Southern Paramount, was placed in charge of the motion picture contest of the Southeastern Land Show at a meeting of the exchange managers in Atlanta, held in the Screen Club rooms Monday, January 8. Mr. Tandy will have behind him in the motion picture contest every exchange manager in Atlanta, and the meeting Monday night in the Screen Club rooms was the most enthusiastic meeting of motion picture managers ever held in Atlanta.

Edward Young Clarke, general manager of the land show, requested the managers of the film exchanges having headquarters in Atlanta to take in charge the motion picture contest as a matter of public duty and civic pride.

A subcommittee of five was appointed to have charge of the situation, pending the arrival of Mr. Tandy from New York, Wednesday, January 10. The committee was: J. W. McTeer, Y. F. Freeman, A. C. Bromberg, J. L. Marentette and O. P. Hall. A publicity committee was also named, composed of A. H. Price, R. M. Sevini and Fred Young.

Joseph B. Foster, the proprietor of the New Hippodrome theater at Miami, Fla., was a visitor and the guest at the meeting and placed his application for his theater to conduct the contest in Miami for the selection of the candidate from that city. By special vote he was granted the contest for Miami, in order that he might start it on the opening night of his theater.

The general committee plans, in addition to this contest, to stage a motion picture exhibition at the Auditorium such as has never been seen in a southern city.

The committee of five appointed will go immediately into the matter of prizes and will spend not less than $1,250 in cash for the leading prizes. Various special prizes in connection with the contest will come from other funds.

Frank Freeman, manager of the Southern Paramount, and sixteen managers were present at the meeting, representing every film exchange having headquarters in Atlanta.

The four states in the southeast: Georgia, Florida, Alabama and South Carolina, will be in the contest. Every city in each of the four states will be allowed to enter a girl who is to be selected by a popularity contest in her city, sponsored by a local theater. In this way the contest will be double in its nature, the grand contest being held in Atlanta to determine the three grand prize winners from the three girls representing the different cities and the individual contests in each city. Only the winner of the popularity contest in each town will be eligible to enter the grand contest here. Three grand prizes will be offered and one prize will be offered by each of the states.

The Strand-Vaudette Dinner.

Atlanta, Ga.—Alpha Fowler was host to about fifty employees of the Strand and Vaudette theaters at a dinner given at the Screen Club's quarters, in the Walton building, Sunday, Jan. 7.

Musicians, operators, cashiers, ushers, bookkeepers, assistant managers, doormen, newspaper and advertising men were among the guests.

When called upon to speak, Mr. Fowler declared that the dinner had been given for the express purpose of creating a feeling of fellowship among his employees. "We have more than fifty people working at the two houses," he said, "and this is the first time I have ever had an opportunity of seeing them all together."

Harry Glenn, operator at the Strand, was the chief funmaker of the dinner.

Alpha Fowler Continues as Manager.

Atlanta, Ga.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Strand-Vaudette Co., held Monday afternoon in the offices of Jake Wells, Mr. Wells, who recently acquired control of the houses, was elected president of the company. It was announced that Alpha Fowler will continue as manager of the two theaters and that no material change in policies or employees is contemplated.

Rose Tapley Speaks in Atlanta.

Atlanta, Ga.—Society women listened with attention Thursday morning, Jan. 4, at the Vaudette theater to the lecture of Miss Rose Tapley, Vitagraph actress, on better film productions.

Miss Tapley is not unknown to Atlantans.

Paris Theater to Change Name.

Durham, N. C.—It has been officially announced that the Paris theater, formerly the property of the Piedmont Amusement Company, in Durham, N. C., has sold to R. D. Craver, formerly of Durham, but now a resident of Charlotte. It is understood $25,000 is to be expended by Mr. Craver during the next few months in remodeling the theater, and in installing new equipment. The outstanding improvement will be the installation of a $10,000 especially constructed pipe organ. The name Paris is to be changed to that of Broadway, and the house arranged in a style becoming the name. Mr. Craver announces that Paul V. Phillips, who has been the popular manager of the house several years, will retain his position.

Watch Censorship in Michigan

A Big Meeting of Exhibitors and Exchange Managers Is Expected as Soon as Proposed State Censorship Bill Comes Up—Lively Opposition Will Greet the Measure, But Film Men Must Be Watchful.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—It is expected that a big meeting of exhibitors and exchange managers will be held in Detroit or Lansing as soon as the proposed state censorship bill is introduced by Representative Fred Eaton of Saginaw. As most Michigan exhibitors probably know by this time, this bill will require a censor board at a salary of $1,500 per year, to censor all films brought into the state which will have to be passed by this board before it can be shown in any theater. There will also be a small fee for the examination of all film. A number of letters have reached the Detroit office of the WORLD which show that exhibitors are opposed to censorship in any form. They contend that the whole industry should not suffer because once in a while some theater shows objectionable film. There are plenty of other ways—less drastic and more reasonable—of handling such problems. Watch the WORLD for full information about this matter of censorship.

New Butterfield Plans Take Form.

Detroit, Mich.—Col. S. W. Butterfield, who owns the Butterfield chain of theaters in Michigan, was in Detroit on January 8 and told the WORLD representative that he had completed arrangements for the opening of a Detroit office at 221 Broadway Market building, which would be in charge of E. C. Beaty; also that he had organized the State Film Company, which would buy pictures on the state right plan, the purpose being to show these pictures in the Butterfield theaters and later to other Michigan theaters.

Mr. Beaty will have full charge of the booking and will be manager, dividing his time between Detroit and Battle Creek, the main headquarters for the Butterfield circuit.

C. G. Kingsley on the Job at Fox Office.

Detroit, Mich.—C. G. Kingsley, the new manager at Detroit for the Fox Film, says he was really surprised at the way Michigan exhibitors accepted the new Fox policy on Farnum and Bara features. "There was hardly a complaint, and everybody seemed to welcome the opportunity of being able to book these star productions for two days at no increase in rental," said Mr. Kingsley. "Many of the exhibitors had been worrying lest Mr. Fox would take Farnum and Bara off the regular program, and put them out as big specials at increased rentals, as has been the case with other stars." Kingsley is glad to get back to Detroit, where he enjoys an intimate and close friendship with dozens of exhibitors.

Charles A. McVicker Resigns.

Detroit, Mich.—Charles A. McVicker, for many months the right-hand man to William F. Klatt, Detroit, and manager of the Klatt chain of motion picture theaters, and manager of the Rosedale, as well as general manager of the Regent, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on January 27. Mac needs a good rest, having worked incessantly and unceasingly for Mr. Klatt. His leaving is regretted sincerely by Mr. Klatt, who has often referred to Mac as "one in a million."

Sam H. Barrett Promoted.

Detroit, Mich.—Sam H. Barret has been promoted to assistant division manager of the Detroit Universal office, which means that he will co-operate with Manager M. S. Bailey in the handling of Universal matters out of Detroit, Toledo and Grand Rapids. Mr. Barrett came with the Universal nine months ago as a stenographer; then he was advanced to salesman; then to manager of the Bluebird department, and now as assistant division manager. He will continue to handle the Bluebird department. It is always a pleasant task to report promotions, and particularly so in this instance.

C. C. Randolph Heads Casino Feature Office.

Detroit, Mich.—C. C. Randolph has been appointed manager of the Casino Feature Film Company, Detroit, 2206 Dime Bank building. He was formerly manager of the Wolverine exchange, and was formerly associated with the Casino.

Two New Theaters.

Port Huron, Mich.—The new Family theater in Port Huron held its formal opening on Saturday, January 6. There was a large attendance. The theater is very attractive and is new in every respect. E. C. Bedford is the proprietor.

Detroit, Mich.—The new Dawn theater, Detroit, will be opened January 20, according to Proprietor John E. Niebes. The Dawn seats 1,200, and the policy will be daily change. Prices will be 10 and 15 cents, with 25 cents for auto boxes.

N. D. Thompson Will Be Booker.

Detroit, Mich.—N. D. Thompson, formerly manager of the Detroit-Fox office, is to continue as booker and assistant manager under the new manager, C. G. Kingsley. This will be welcome news to Michigan exhibitors, who have always considered Mr. Thompson one of the best bookers in the state.

Howard A. Bauer to Manage Artcraft.

Detroit, Mich.—Howard A. Bauer, formerly in the motor car business, has been appointed manager of the Detroit exchange of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, succeeding C. L. Peavey, who recently resigned to become manager of the Minneapolis-Paramount exchange.

Greater Vitagraph Moves.

Detroit, Mich.—The Greater Vitagraph exchange moved last week from the Peter Smith Building, Detroit, to 40-42-44 East Larned street, occupying the first floor of that building, one of the upper lofts now being occupied by Pathe. It is the plan of the company to take permanent quarters later in the proposed new film building, to be erected on East Elizabeth street.

Garson Gets "Witching Hour" Right.

Detroit, Mich.—Harry I. Garson of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to "The Witching Hour," produced by the Frohman Amusement Company. It will be released in this state through the Broadway Feature Film Company.

Harry I. Garson returned to Detroit January 6 after arranging with a studio in Fort Lee for the first production of the Rhea Mitchell Corporation. The first production is to be known as "A Glimpse of Paradise."

W. W. Johnson, of the publicity department of Pathe, was in Detroit recently to arrange for the local advertising and publicity campaign to be conducted in connection with the International serial "Patria." Ten thousand lines of newspaper space are to be used in Detroit.

Kansas City Star Tenders Show

Leading Local Paper Leases Big Hall and Will Show "Snow White" Freely—Boosting a Good Film and Getting Subscribers to the Star—Four Projectors Will Work at the Same Time With Four Screens.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS City, Mo.—One of the biggest things that has happened in the moving picture world of Kansas City for a long time is going to happen soon—the leasing of Convention Hall, and the showing, free, to all who will come, of "Snow White," by the Kansas City Star.

The Star is the paper of largest subscription list in Kansas City; and it is widely known among newspaper men all over the country. It has very positive ideas—and ideals. For instance, it held out against a moving picture column until very recently, even while the popularity of pictures was evidenced in the many columns of picture advertising in its pages. But when it changed its attitude, it plunged. The paper is now running much material on moving pictures—not "press dope" exactly, but material carefully gathered and edited.

The Star has been one of the most valuable aids in the local movement to clean up advertising; it has exercised a censorship over display advertising that is quite as strict as any board's censorship could be.

It has joined the agitation for clear, pictures, though not showing radical tendencies against any certain pictures.

But the Star is constructive—however much it may be "hated" by people who do not believe it is conducted as a newspaper should be. And the project to show "Snow White" is a constructive attempt to lead children and adults to appreciation of the best in pictures.

This much was perhaps necessary to indicate why the Star is showing "Snow White." It is not merely a publicity stunt, nor a subscription scheme.

Convention Hall is Kansas City's big auditorium. The Hippodrome show of New York is being held there this week. It seats more than 10,000.

Four screens are to be erected in the center of the arena floor, and eight machines will be used to project the picture on the four screens simultaneously.

Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and the Regent theaters, is managing the Convention Hall production for the Star. He showed "Snow White" at the Royal, and was impressed with its popularity. He gave several free performances for poor children, at one of which a woman reporter was present. She carried the report of the event to the management of the Star, and the big show was quickly arranged.

A social orchestra of 40 pieces, partly from the Royal theater, will play for the picture. Music had to be secured from New York to supply this large orchestra.

Several performances probably will be given, and it is expected that a total of 100,000 will see the picture. Both children and adults will be admitted free.

A. E. Elliott to Build New Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—A. E. Elliott, who has been planning for some time to build a new theater on the site of his present theater, the Sapphire, is now about ready to go ahead. The new theater is expected to cost about seventy thousand dollars, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,000. There will be two balconies, and the charges will be five cents for the second, ten for the first, and twenty for the main floor. Only features will be shown, and as Mr. Elliot is an old man in the game it should prove successful.

George Hinsen to Be Metro Booker.

George Hinsen, one of the members of the Board of Public Welfare in Kansas City, Mo., recently accepted a position under C. W. Harden, manager of the Metro exchange. G. N. Montgomery to Manage World Film Office.

G. N. Montgomery, for the past three months manager of the World office at Denver, Colorado, will succeed Mr. Robertson. Mr. Montgomery has been in the motion picture business for some four years, the last two of which have been with the World Film Co. as manager of various branches.

Local Exchange Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—Joseph Skirball, district manager of the mid-west offices of the Metro, was a recent visitor in Kansas City for several days.

Invitation cards have been sent to all exhibitors in Kansas City inviting them to attend a private showing of the first episodes of the serial "Patria," at the Willis Wood, Jan. 15. The burning of the Willis Wood theater, which occurred after the invitations were sent, however, has made it necessary to have the showing at another place. Through the consolidation of the International and the Pathe companies, the international pictures are now handled by the Pathe office in Kansas City.

C. W. Harden, local manager of the Metro, besides leasing additional space in the Ozark building, will also remodel the office.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Minn.

SHELBYVILLE, IND.—As a result of the recent action of a jury in Indianapolis in acquitting the proprietor of a motion picture show for alleged violation of the "blue laws," the managers of the Alhambra and Strand motion picture houses here have announced that in the future their show houses will be open Sunday afternoon and Sunday night. The theater men say they feel that they have the same privilege as persons in other lines of business and the same as motion picture proprietors in other Indiana cities.

Friedman Enterprises Incorporate

New Distributing Organization with a Delaware Charter Opens Offices in Film Exchange Building—Capital Is $250,000—Benjamin Friedman Is President—Six Brothers Will Make the Directorate.

By John L. Johnston, 604 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—One of the biggest film distributing organizations in the West was formed here last week, when the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., was incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware. Benjamin Friedman, president of the Friedman Film Corp. here, is president of the new company, and the board of directors is composed of six brothers. Joseph Friedman, owner of the Strand and Park theaters, St. Paul, is vice-president; John Friedman, Minneapolis, is treasurer, and Israel Friedman is secretary. These four gentlemen and Charles Friedman, St. Paul, and Samuel Friedman, Minneapolis, make up the board of directors.

Benjaman Friedman.

The capital stock is $250,000. The company will exploit the biggest features obtainable. President Benjamin Friedman is now in New York City completing arrangements for the corporation's first feature soon to be completed in an independent Eastern studio. While in New York, Mr. Friedman will open offices in the Longacre building, but like Sherman-Elliot, Inc., the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., will have its headquarters in Minneapolis.

The rise of the Friedmans in the moving picture field has been rapid and marked by big success in every venture. The family has been interested in motion pictures about five years. The Friedman Film Corp., which will continue its business in the Film Exchange building, additional space for the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., on the same floor being arranged for. It has exploited "The Spoilers" deluxe edition in Minnesota, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

Local T. M. A. Elects.

Officers of the Minneapolis lodge, Theatrical Mechanical Association elected at the annual meeting, Dec. 28, are: William Wallace, president; Paul Quint, vice-president; C. L. Munston, treasurer; Julius K. Johnson, recording secretary, and Charles Wells, financial secretary. A campaign for 150 new members by April 1 has been begun by the lodge.

Ormi Hawley at the Blue Mouse.

St. Paul, Minn.—Ormi Hawley, under the management of Willis Kent, Chicago, appeared here at the Blue Mouse theater each performance during the week of Jan. 7 in connection with her film feature "Race Suicide." Miss Hawley was the guest of several exhibitors and exchangemen and their wives at a dinner at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Jan. 4.

Local Record of Big Features.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"The Crisis" began its third week at the Lyric here, January 7, and good houses were recorded at each performance. Elliott & Sherman kept the billposters working over time in putting up paper on the big feature, and this coupled with considerable attractive newspaper advertising has brought about good results.

St. Paul, Minn.—"Civilization" minus the lavish prologue, began a week's run at the Metropolitan opera house here, January 7. This is "Civilization's" first showing in St. Paul.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"The Little Girl Next Door" began a week's run at the Strand here, Jan. 7, at twenty-five cents admission. A private showing of "The Libertine," featuring John Mason, will be given at the Strand for the actor when he comes here in "Common Clay," the week of Jan. 14. "The Libertine" will have a week's run at the Strand later.

Price Rise Hope in Twin Cities Flivvers

Theaters Showing Films and Vaudeville and the Big Houses Fail to Show Inclination to Get-together on Admission Rates.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The boom to raise admission prices in the Twin Cities seems to be capped with a silencer, for, although many exhibitors battled hard for an increase of fifty per cent., the larger exhibitors, and those who show vaudeville and pictures together on their program seem to have smothered any chance for such an increase.

The Regent, formerly a five cent theater, raised its admission price to ten cents, and a new theater across the street from it for five cents admitted people who got "this ticket and five cents" at another theater under the same management, which practically makes that theater a "jitney" house. This same theater is running high class Fox, Vitagraph, Pathe and Mutual features.

Because the New Aster ran Clara Kimball Young's "My Official Wife" for ten cents, the Strand displayed "The Common Law" for a week at ten cents, thus starting a merry howl, which has not died down. One theater in order to "take the edge off" another theater's business several weeks ago advertised a big feature at ten cents and added "Why Pay More"? To the small exhibitor who has been living only a hand to mouth existence during the summer and fall, this stiff opposition from the big exhibitors makes them "warm around the collar." The matter of increased prices will come up before some future meeting of the Northwest Exhibitors, but little hope for a successful battle for "an extra nickel" is held out.

At Minneapolis Exchanges.

Bert Moran, formerly with the local Kleine exchange, has been made manager of the New Orleans branch of the K-E-S-E by George Kleine, and assumed his new position Jan. 7.

Manager J. F. Cubberley was host at a banquet and dance of Universal-Laemmle exchange employees at the West hotel, Minneapolis, Dec. 29. Heads of the various departments were called upon for short talks and each responded with a brief and spicey oration.

Manager R. E. Bishop, of the Mutual exchange, has advertised for information regarding the whereabouts of two films, "Making Things Hum" and "The House of Bondage," said to have been stolen with the automobile of H. J. Andress, manager of the Dayton theater, recently. To date no trace of films or auto has been found.

Manager J. A. Bachman, of the DeLuxe Films, Inc., exchange, has announced that he is prepared to book "Purity" outside of the Twin Cities, and that the "first come, first served policy" holds good at his office. "Purity" closed a big two week's run at the Metropolitan, Minneapolis, Jan. 6.

C. R. Filkins Now Vitagraph Road Man.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Charles R. Filkins, who came here to assume the management of the International Film Service exchange, but found that organization merged with Pathe, has been added to the road staff of the Greater Vitagraph exchange. Walter Strauus, assistant to Manager W. K. Howard, has gone to the Dakotas to visit exhibitors and talk about "The Secret Kingdom." Manager Howard, of the Vitagraph, has booked the serial for first run in Minneapolis at the Regent.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The New Palace theater has booked first run of the International serial "Patria" in Minneapolis, from Manager H. E. Friedman of the Pathe exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Manie Gottlieb, of the Favorite Feature Film Corp. here, has booked "The Libertine" for a week's run at the Palace theater, Des Moines, Iowa, beginning Jan. 14. Frank Woskie will have change of this showing.

Minneapolis, Minn.—E. M. Ames, representing the Serial Producing Co., has been visiting Manager Otto N. Davies, of the Minnesota Metro exchange here, for a week, and incidentally has been assisting in placing "The Great Secret" serial featuring Bushman and Bayne.

Denver Organization Makes Good

Local Exchange Men by Working Together Get Substantial Reductions in Tax Appraisals—Board of Trade and Screen Club Representing All Branches of the Business Put Shoulder to the Wheel.

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Colo.

DENVER, Colo.—The value of the organization in the various branches of the moving picture industry was strikingly illustrated in Denver this week when hundreds of dollars were saved the local exchanges through reductions in tax appraisals by the city officials.

For years Denver exchanges have been paying more than their quota of taxes. Individual protests availed nothing, but this year the Board of Trade, composed of all the exchange managers and the Screen Club, made up of men in all branches of the film industry behind the complaint the assessor took stock in the claims of the moving picture men and granted big reductions.

Of the fifteen exchanges in Denver there is only one which will not benefit by the organized move for lower taxes. In this case the manager admitted that his company had been under appraised and he was perfectly willing to shoulder his share of the burden in order that his associates get justice.

It has only been within the last two or three years that the film industry became a factor in the business world in this section and the city officials acknowledged that their appraisals of moving picture exchanges were more or less guesswork. They had no authoritive basis on which to work. Exchange managers also were uncertain of their ground and with only their own individual resources to fall back on, they failed of results even where protests were made.

When the tax bills came in this year the matter was immediately taken up by all the exchanges through their organizations. The managers compared notes and exchanged ideas. They obtained data from other cities, and when they had built up a case they sent their attorney, W. E. Foley, and a committee of managers to wait upon the assessor. He granted their demands.

Dozens of things have occurred since the first organization of screen men in Denver last February to convince them that there is strength in unity and the tax incident has served to emphasize the value of organization.

Clynes Theater Co. to Build.

Pueblo, Colo..—The Clynes Theater Company, of Bessemer, a suburb of Pueblo, will shortly begin the erection of a new theater at 419-521 Northern Ave. It will be equipped with a stage suitable for all kinds of plays and productions, but is a picture house.

The building will be of pressed brick and stone, with ornamental front, and will cost $10,000. James Clynes, pioneer business man and capitalist of Bessemer, will manage the new theater.

Separate Bluebird Exchange Opens.

Denver, Colo.—An important change in the policy governing the distribution of Universal and Bluebird films in the Rocky Mountain region was announced this week. The old system of handling Universal releases and Bluebird features through one exchange has been abolished and in the future there will be two separate and distinct offices.

F. Y. Langtree, formerly of New York, who for several months has been Denver manager for Universal and Bluebird, becomes head of the Bluebird forces for Denver, Salt Lake and Butte. He will confine its activities exclusively to the feature field.

Edward Armstrong, formerly manager of the Salt Lake office of the Universal, has been brought to Denver to take charge of the Universal office here.

The naming of Mr. Langtree as Bluebird manager means that the feature and regular program departments of Universal have been divorced in the entire western territory. Mr. Langtree will at once start on a tour of his district, visiting the trade and establishing branch offices in Salt Lake and Butte.

James Stratton Joins Fox.

James Stratton was added to the force in the shipping department of the Fox exchange this week.

Prohibition Helps Shows Here.

Denver, Colo.—Prohibition and its effect on the moving picture industry was strikingly illustrated in Denver on New Year's eve. All the theaters on Curtis street—the city's Great White Way—were crowded by throngs who in the past might have been found in wetter places. And by a strange coincidence the Rialto had for its attraction a tremendous argument for prohibition. Robert Warwick in "The Man Who Forgot" was the offering, and it seemed strange that on New Year eve—the first dry one Denver ever saw—a picture showing the evils of intemperance should be shown.

Every theater on the street did a record business, whereas in previous years New Year eve has been persistently a poor business night, closely rivaling Christmas eve. No doubt the expense was also much less.

Screen Ball to Be Managed by W. B. Glaeser

Rocky Mountain Screen Club Perfects Its Plans for the Big Dance on February Third—Decorations and Lighting Effects.

Denver, Colo.—W. B. Glaeser, who by serving in various capacities in moving picture exchanges in the west, and as manager of some of Denver's leading moving picture theaters has gained wide knowledge of the amusement business, has been selected to manage the Screen Club ball, to be held in Denver, Feb. 3.

The appointment was made at the last weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, held at the Albany hotel. Other plans for the big event were arranged at the same time. It was decided that the ball should be a masque affair and that an admission of one dollar per couple would prevail.

Arrangements were made for the services of the best decorators in town to dress up the spacious city auditorium for the ball, and some interesting features are promised in this line. Experts also will be in charge of the lighting effects. which, it is said, will be the most unique ever shown here.

There is still nothing definite as to the identity of the screen stars who will attend the ball. The Paramount Company has given assurances that it will send two of its leading performers, and it is expected several other companies also will be represented.

Mailing Films Proves Cheaper.

Denver, Colo.—Paramount holds the distinction of being the first Denver exchange to receive a shipment of films via parcel post. An exhibitor in Steamboat Springs took advantage of the new law regulating mails to return a five-reel feature to the Denver exchange with Uncle Sam as the messenger. When the mailman walked into the Paramount office carrying a box of films Manager M. H. Cohn thought that something was wrong. "Where did you get that," he asked, before recalling that the new law was in effect.

The postage on the package was 63 cents, including 25 cents paid by the sender for insurance of $100 on the films. The express charges for the same shipment would have been 98 cents. As a result of this experience it is expected that all exhibitors and exchangemen will be doing it.

Visitors at Metro Exchange.

Denver, Colo.—Manager Harry Lustig of the Denver Metro exchange was host last week for two eastern visitors. J. J. Ungar, special representative, and Harry Cohen of the New York office of the company were here. Ungar, who has charge of the western division, was making his regular visit to Denver, while Cohen stopped in Denver on a tour of all the Metro exchanges in the United States. The two left for the west together.

Pueblo, Colo.—The first midnight matinee in the history of Pueblo was staged New Year's eve by the Princess theater and proved a decided success. The show began at 11 P. M. and closed at 12:50 A. M. By advance arrangement with the street car company special cars were run on all lines to accommodate the theater patrons.

Why Not Boost the Good Films?

Spokane Managers Hear Interesting Talk on Censorship at the Ad Club by Harry J. Leland—Good Films Ought to Be Boosted.

By S. Clark Patchin, East 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Local theater managers and members of the Spokane Ad Club enthusiastically approved of an address delivered before that organization at a noon luncheon Wednesday, Jan. 3, by Harry J. Leland, manager of the American Stock Company, relative to censorship.

Mr. Leland said:

"In the last two months a censorship committee was formed with the object of condemning, in our theaters and picture houses whatever was not good. But why not have that censorship committee praise as well as condemn, whether it is the silent or the spoken drama, and why not advise the public to attend something that is good as well as tell it to stay away from that which is bad?

"No manager in the city wants to place before his patrons an entertainment that he cannot take his own wife, mother or child to, but it is a sad fact that theatergoers in this city will crowd a theater that promises something that is off color and will stay away from that which is good and worth while.

"A play or a picture that is good and is worth while should be advertised from the pulpits of our churches and thus a demand would be created for the good things. If that was done any manager who attempted to place before you immoral plays or pictures would be answered by empty seats."

Spokane Film Notes.

Spokane, Wash.—Manager H. S. Clemmer of the Clemmer theater has booked the new Selig version of "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, to run for three days, starting Sunday, Jan. 7. This production has been shown in Spokane on several previous occasions and always played to big houses.

The Clemmer Red Headed Club was entertained at the Pantages theater during the week.

SALT LAKE'S NEW STRAND.

Old Rex Theater to Be Reopened Under a New Name—Remains a Swanson House.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.—Within two weeks Salt Lake City will have another first calss motion picture theater. The Rex, which has long been a landmark on State street, and which was one of the first motion picture houses in the local amusement field, will close its doors to reopen one week later as the Strand theater.

The theater, which will remain under direction of the Swanson theater circuit, will be in charge of H. W. Pickering, a well known newspaper man of Salt Lake, who has been for two years the correspondent of The Moving Picture World in this city.

The Rex was William H. Swanson's initial moving picture venture in Salt Lake, and it was largely from the sucess of this house and its influence that Mr. Swanson was assisted in building up his present stupendous interests in the motion picture field.

Mr. Swanson was impressed with the need for another first class theater in Salt Lake. The American theater had booked more high class attractions than any one house could possibly show, and the result will be that the Strand will play the same class of program as the American. It is expected to open the house with the E. H. Sothern picture, "An Enemy to the King," the William Fox production of "A Daughter of the Gods" will be the attraction at the Strand for two weeks, beginning Feb. 4, and other first class bills are being arranged.

Artcraft Film at Paramount-Empress.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—The Paramount-Empress theater in Salt Lake has arranged for the Artcraft pictures service, and, beginning Jan. 14, will show the releases of this concern. The opening bill will be Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan." The Artcraft-Paramount pictures combination for the upper Main street house is expected to be a strong card and one which will appeal to the photoplaygoers of Salt Lake.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

Indecent Posters Banned.

Fresno, Cal.—The police and fire commissioners have ruled that nude and suggestive posters and pictures of all kinds should not be displayed in front of moving picture houses, in art stores or in public places. This action followed numerous complaints that improper pictures were being shown in front of moving picture houses where problem plays were being featured.

Sid Grauman Host at Big Party.

San Francisco, Cal.—Following a custom established five years ago, Sid Grauman, manager of the Empress theater, entertained the prisoners at San Quentin penitentiary on New Year's day with a vaudeville and moving picture show. The moving picture entertainment consisted of five reels of comedy pictures.

San Francisco News.

San Francisco, Cal.—The first week of the New Year was ushered in at the Imperial theater as Hayakawa week, the program including "The Typhoon," "Alien Souls." "The Soul of Kura San" and "The Cheat."

Plans are being prepared by Architect W. W. Weeks for a moving picture house to be erected on Clement street, near Eighth avenue, by J. R. Saul and associates, at an estimated cost of $85,000.

On Jan. 2 the local postoffice accepted for the first time motion picture films as parcel post mail, in accordance with an order recently received from Washington.

E. J. Carrol, of Sydney, Australia, was a recent visitor in San Francisco. He conducts a chain of theaters in the antipodes.

Local International Turns Over

San Francisco Business Carried to the Pathe Office in Musical Building—Several of Its Employes Are Working for Pathe for Time Being—Some Will Remain—H. L. Knappen Will Go to Los Angeles.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO. Cal.—The surprise of the week, as far as the local film trade is concerned, has been the consolidation of the Pathe and International film interests and the closing of the offices of the latter concern at 280 Golden Gate avenue. The New Year's greeting to the local International force came in the form of an order to close the office at once, while the Pathe exchange received a present in the form of the heavy booking business of the International. Steps were at once taken to transfer the business of the latter from Golden Gate avenue to the spacious new quarters of the Pathe exchange in the Musical building, 985 Market street, and this was completed almost before anyone in the trade was aware of the change.

Part of the booking and office force of the International has been retained by the Pathe exchange for the time being, and some of its members will probably be retained permanently. Manager Lotz, of the Pathe exchange, is now congratulating himself on having moved recently from Turk street and taken over so much floor space, with opportunities for expansion. Had the exchange still been in the old quarters it would have been difficult to have cared for the great increase in business.

H. L. Knappen, who has had charge of the San Francisco branch of the International since this concern entered the film exchange field, is to go to Los Angeles to become manager of the Pathe exchange and will have as his assistant H. I. Krausse, who recently went there to take charge of the International branch. As the Pathe Exchange, Inc., already has a branch at Salt Lake City, the sub-branch maintained there by the International will be discontinued and the business in the mountain territory will be cared for independent of the San Francisco office.

The Pathe exchange here has arranged for a society showing of its newly acquired serial, "Patria," featuring Mrs. Vernon Castle, to be given at the Palace hotel on Jan. 17. and more than 1,000 invitations have been sent out for this event. Four days later this production will be put on at the Imperial theater, when something out of the ordinary in a patriotic demonstration is planned by Manager J. L. Partington.

Local Interests Get Oakland House.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sheehan & Lurie, who have made such a great success of the Rialto theater in this city, and who recently took over the Savoy theater nearby, have branched out still farther, and a deal has been concluded whereby they will conduct the Reliance theater in the suburban city of Oakland, a splendid new house opened but a few months ago. It is planned to formally open this house under the new management with "The Daughter of the Gods," featuring Annette Kellermann, and following the run of this picture the regular Fox service will be used. The three big houses now controlled by Sheehan & Lurie in the Greater San Francisco, places this firm in a commanding position, a result that has been achieved within less than a year.

Crowds Flock to See Kellermann.

San Francisco, Cal.—Resplendent in fresh paint, new carpets, new decorations and new furnishings throughout, the Savoy theater on McAllister street, a house that has been the despair of aspiring exhibitors for years, was reopened under the direction of Sheehan & Lurie on the evening of Dec. 30 with "The Daughter of the Gods." featuring Annette Kellermann. The wide publicity that has been given the reopening of this theater, combined with the merit of the attraction, brought out great crowds and on the opening night it was impossible to accommodate all. A double string of festooned incandescent lights lighted the way from Market street and removed one of the former bugbears, a stretch of dark street. An orchestra of thirty pieces under the direction of Herman Heller, furnishes music for the entertainment, and both the film production and the music have come in for the unstinted praise of the local dramatic and music critics.

Edward Kemp Shows New Motiograph.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edward H. Kemp, who handles the Motiograph projection machine in this territory, has received the new 1917 model No. 1-A by express, and since the first of the year has shown it to a large number of operators who have visited his offices in the Commercial building. Mr. Kemp has been very busy of late caring for developing and printing business and reports having made 10,000 feet of film for the United States regulator, a motor-driven rewind, film poses, besides having furnished a projecting machine. He has also developed film brought down on the whaler Herman, owned by H. Liebes & Company, and is combining this with film secured a year ago, making a very interesting Arctic picture.

Opens Manufacturing Department.

San Francisco, Cal.—A manufacturing department was opened by G. A. Metcalfe on the first of the year, and equipment has been installed for turning out a self-feed arc controller, the Metcalfe speed regulator, a motor driven rewind, film cabinets and other equipment approved by the Board of Underwriters. Plans are also being made for the manufacture of a new projection machine. Arrangements have also been made for booking the advertising films of the Todd Protectograph Company and other films of a similar nature. Mr. Metcalfe now has a representative in Australia and recently made a large shipment of goods to that country, as well as to Java and Hawaii.

Consolidated Takes New Line.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Consolidated Film Company, 114 Golden Gate avenue, is now handling the releases of the Educational Film Corporation and has booked the first of these at the Portola and Market street theaters here and at the Franklin, at Oakland. Marion H. Kohn, head of the concern, has been in Los Angeles for several weeks and will remain there until the new exchange in that city is in running order, the local office being in charge of Mr. Epstein.

Warner to Put Out Road Shows.

San Francisco, Cal.—J. L. Warner, head of the Warner Film attractions, has arranged to put out three road shows in Northern California with "The Crisis" as the attraction, and is greatly pleased with the outlook. Reports from Los Angeles indicate that the production is being well received there and at an early date it will be put on at the Columbia theater in this city for an indefinite run.

Theater Property Sold.

San Francisco, Cal.—The St. Francis theater and lot on Geary street, near Powell, has been sold to Thomas W. Corder at a consideration said to be about $235,000. The house will continue under the present management.

Closing Question Will Not Down

Agitators of the One Day Rest in Seven Measure Have Approached State Legislators in an Effort to Have It Passed—They Claim That It Is Not a Sunday Closing Law That They Want Now—Legislature in Session.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, Ore.—When the legislature meets, as it will before this goes to press, a bill for the passage of a one-day-of-rest-in-seven law will be presented. The proponents of the measure are the old advocates of Sunday closing, Rev. D. A. Tufts and the One Day of Rest in Seven League. Legislators have been talked to, and it is said that Rev. Tufts claims the support of several.

Those who have seen the draft of the measure proposed say it is not a Sunday closing law, but that it merely provides for one day of rest in seven. Even if this were true it would be bad enough for the theater man, and the seeming inactivity of the state's exhibitors on the issue, and their apparent unconcern is deplored.

It is the opinion of those who have followed the ramifications of other attempted legislation by Rev. Tufts that this bill is to pave the way for general Sunday closing. The previous unsuccessful attempts to get Sunday closing measures on the Oregon ballot have been fully discussed in these columns.

"Intolerance" Opens.

Portland, Ore.—The big Griffith spectacle, "Intolerance," opened for a two week's run New Year's day, at the Eleventh Street playhouse. An orchestra of thirty pieces furnishes the musical interpretation of the film classic. The production is put over in elaborate style by the theater management. W. T. Pangle, manager of the Heilig, Portland's big legitimate house, is also guiding the destiny of the big attraction at the Eleventh Street playhouse.

Small Sells to Partner.

Corvallis, Ore.—C. E. Small has sold his interest in the Corvallis Amusement company, controlling the Majestic and Crystal theaters, to Whiteside Bros., his former partners. From a financial standpoint the Corvallis company has been phenomenally successful under Mr. Small's management. The company controls the theatrical situation here.

International at Portland Pathe.

Portland, Ore.—Following the absorption of International exchanges, the local Pathe office has secured its quota of International releases and is adjusting conditions to meet the increase in work and business. A number episodes of "Patria" have been received for screening.

The personnel of the Portland Pathe force will not be changed except that C. E. Waite, traveling representative for International, will be traveler for the united office in Portland. Mr. Waite was with International since the beginning of the office in Seattle.

Manager B. J. Sperry is looking for a prosperous year for his firm and said he has been particularly pleased with the business Gold Roosters have been doing of late.

Peoples Breaks All Records.

Portland, Ore.—The management of the People' Amusement Company claims to have shown to 6,000 people at the Star on New Year's Eve, the record for the cozy little theater. The extra midnight matinee, holding until 1:30 a. m., only made this possible, as the house was jammed to capacity all day. The program was "Arms and the Woman" and Charlie Chaplin in "The Rink."

At both the Star and the Peoples special stunts were arranged for the 1917 Midnight Matinee. A Max Linder comedy ten years old was shown, together with an up-to-date picture to show the improvement in pictures, and house manager J. C. Stille lectured on the subject to a most appreciative audience.

Heard on Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—"The Libertine," which Mike Rosenberg has in this territory, was recently condemned by a viewer and put up to the regular censor board.

Portland, Ore.—But don't feel so bad abount it, boys, the women of the city who interest themselves in our welfare recently prevailed upon Juvenile Judge Tazwell to decline to grant a permit for a Siamese Twins act to show after the manager had obtained a license from the city to exhibit. So you ain't the only ones in this city of "Intolerance."

Newport, Ore.—S. H. Evans has opened a theater here. He was formerly located at Walport.

Portland, Ore.—Herbert L. Davies, who manages the Opera House at Sumpter, Ore., was a caller at the exchanges. This is his first visit to the metropolis in over five years.

Gardiner, Ore.—A. F. Edwards has closed his theater on account of a fire in the big lumber mills, which has put several hundred men out of employment.

Myrtle Point, Ore.—Harry Heywood has taken over the Unique theater.

Portland, Ore.—Other visitors were Carl Stearn, K-E-S-E, Seattle, who showed "The Truant Soul" to exhibitors; C. J. Kerr, Mutual, Seattle, exhibiting five chapters of "The Great Secret"; R. C. Montgomery, World, and Sam W. B. Cohen, formerly manager of the Empress, Spokane, with "The Unborn" for this territory.

Another Censorship Seizure in Portland

Secretary Colwell of Local Board Has the Police Remove "The Black Orchid" from the Strand Theater—Film Is Recovered Later.

Portland, Ore.—"Make your excuses to the court," Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the Portland censor board, is reported to have said to Sol Baum, manager for Bluebird in the Pacific Northwest, after "The Black Orchid" had been seized by the police for alleged censorship irregularities. Mrs. Colwell denies she said it or that she had anything to say.

At any event the five reels of "The Black Orchid" were taken by a policeman from the projection room of the Strand theater to the police station at five o'clock of the eventful day and it was only after persistent telephoning by Mr. Baum and Nick Pierong, manager of the big first run house, to Mayor Albee, Secretary Warren, chairman F. T. Richards, of the censor board, and to Mrs. Colwell that the films were recovered from the police station about two hours later and nobody went to jail.

The facts that could be gathered by listening to the stories of both sides were these: Mrs. Colwell became advised that "The Black Orchid" was running at the Strand and had not been expurgated as the censors had demanded, also that Nick Pierong had no permit to exhibit, all of which was contary to the Portland censor ordinance. Mrs. Colwell claims there were two counts which could have been alleged and proved in an information against Mr. Pierong.

On the other hand the Bluebird management said that if there were any censorship irregularities in showing the picture it was caused by a minor error which could have been readily corrected as soon as discovered and did not warrant the attitude taken by the censors. There were two copies of the film, one which had been expurgated and for which a permit had been issued, and which the board said was all right for the Portland people to see. The other was a copy unexpurgated by Portland censors and which was to be distributed for the rest of the people in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana to see. The error was made in not distinguishing the copies and the wrong one was sent to the Strand. This was first noticed when Mr. Baum, called on the telephone by Mr. Pierong, came to the Strand with the strips of film that had been cut from the Portland reels and attempted to convince Mrs. Colwell that the eliminations had been made. The permit to exhibit was in Mr. Baum's office.

Seattle Moving Picture Shows the Mecca of Merry Makers When 1917 Is Born—Dryness of Town No Dampener of Fun

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—For some weeks before New Year's, Seattle folk kept wondering how they could find a way to make merry in appropriate fashion on that night. In a dry town, not only legally dry, but really dry, and all their favorite cafes and cabarets wrecked by the destructive axes of the "dry squad," the chance for a little New Year's fun looked very dubious to the would-be merry-makers, until a day or two after Christmas they began reading the advertisements of some of the motion picture houes; then they began to sit up and take notice. It seemed that after all there was to be something doing on New Year's night, and Seattle folk took the tip and went to see the fun, and they are ready now to admit that it doesn't take "booze" and cabarets to make New Year's night a success.

Coliseum a Bit of Hawaii.

The Coliseum was turned into a bit of Hawaii, the effect being gained by the use of palms and other decorations in foliage and flowers, and enhanced by unusual lighting effects; while the balcony was entirely shut off. The show was advertised as "The Folies" where "Mirth, Maids and Music" would hold sway. Passageways were built from the stage into the aisles, so as to bring the players into closer touch with the audience, of which the men highly approved; for the Maids were good to look at. The star attraction was a band of real Hawaiians. To put the pleasure seekers in a better mood for the enjoyment of the music, a little hammer and block of wood was given to each person for beating time, and serpentine throws were also distributed. And to make it seem more than ever like the real thing, cake and punch were served after the show. The fun began at 11:30 at night, after the close of the regular showing of the pictures, and lasted until 1:30. The prices were one dollar admission and a dollar and a half for the loges.

The Grand's Special Program.

At the Grand, where vaudeville and pictures are combined on the regular bill, the New Year's show started at 11:30 and lasted until 1:30, as at The Coliseum. Manager Eugene Levy put on twenty acts of vaudeville and had an extra orchestra on the stage, as well as his own in the pit. He also advertised after the show the audience would have the privilege of dancing on the stage, and he built a new oak floor for the occasion. The feature of the show was the reproduction on the stage of Dick Fleming's South End dance hall, so famous in Seattle; and Mr. Levy also arranged for the Hawaiian band to come to the Grand, after it had finished at the Coliseum. Fifty cents and a dollar were the prices asked at the Grand. At one o'clock the crowd was buying standing room, but the police came in and stopped it, because of fire regulations, and the box office was forced to return two or three hundred dollars. The audience danced until two o'clock.

A Censor Conference in Regina

Saskatchewan Officials and Film Men Confer on Changes in Moving Pictures Act —Appeal Board for the Province Wanted in Regina—A Desire for a National Board of Censorship for All Canada.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Bldg., Vancouver, B. C.

REGINA, SASK.—A meeting which may have an important effect on the future of the censorship question in this province took place here recently between Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon, Provincial Secretary Wright, and other members of the government, as well as the board of censors, and a large number of western Canadian film men, most of whom had come from outside points for the conference. Those present as representatives of the industry were: W. R. Marshall, Calgary, Mutual; W. P. Wowees, Vancouver, Triangle; A. L. Johnson, Winnipeg, General; B. Witham, Regina, Mutual; F. Miller, Winnipeg, Pathe; M. Rose, Winnipeg, Metro; R. Scott, Winnipeg, Fox; R. Downey, Regina, Universal; J. H. Booth, Winnipeg, Mutual; H. L. Gage, Regina, Famous Players.

For an Appeal Board in Regina.

During a discussion which lasted practically all day, the picture men submitted to the government authorities several suggestions involving changes in the laws affecting the film industry. They asked for the establishment of an appeal board in Regina, to pass on the films rejected by the censoring board in Winnipeg. The present system of censoring, with the Saskatchewan board working jointly with the Manitoba board, but with the privilege of controlling the showing of films in Saskatchewan, is quite satisfactory to the moving picture interests, but they see no reason why an appeal board should not be provided for Saskatchewan as well as Manitoba.

Another suggestion put forward was for an amendment to the Moving Pictures Act authorizing the passing of certain pictures which would only be shown before segregated audiences—that is, for women only, for men only, or for adults above a certain age. Relative to this request it was pointed out that under the act, as at present in force, the censors can pass pictures for special audiences, the only condition attached being that such pictures be not exhibited except before the audiences intended.

Want National Censor Board.

The picture men also announced themselves as in favor of the establishment of a Canadian national board of censors, passing on films for the entire Dominion. Even were the censoring charges established at an amount approximating $10 per reel, the cost would still be considerably less than at present, and the exchanges would not be under the uncertainty which is constantly present regarding the likelihood of certain subjects being passed in this or that province. The consensus of opinion seems to favor Toronto as the best location for such a board, as it would be most convenient for all points in Canada.

Favorable action is anticipated from the Saskatchewan government at an early date as the result of the conference.

Picture Show for Children of Soldiers.

Edmonton, Alberta. — Manager John Hazza, of the Empress theater, arranged with Secretary John Blue, of the Edmonton Patriotic Society, to give a special children's performance on New Year's morning. The young guests were children between 5 and 10 years, whose fathers are at the front, and the 800 free tickets were distributed through Mr. Blue. The Empress theater orchestra under Earle C. Hill gave its services free for the entertainment.

Children's Saturday morning matinees, which a few months ago were given regularly at several local film theaters, had recently been abandoned, until the practice was resumed by Manager McQueen, of the Garland theater. Mr. McQueen is not only using special juvenile programs on Saturday morning, but is putting on a children's show on Friday afternoons. So far the move has proved to be a most successful one.

Danny Freeman Wins Another Feather.

Vancouver, B. C.—Danny Freeman, shipper at the local Universal branch, and claimant for the title of champion 125-pound boxer of western Canada, appeared at a recent smoker held by the 231st Battalion, and effectively disposed of another local light named Stanley Clement.

Showmanship Notes of Interest.

Calgary, Alberta.—The Princess theater has inaugurated a "Baby Popularity Contest" each week, and the idea has attracted much attention. On each Wednesday and Thursday night all patrons are given coupons, on which they are requested to write the name of the baby for whom they wish to vote, and deposit it (the coupon) in a ballot box in the lobby. The votes are counted on Thursday night, and the winning child is presented with $5.00. The winner's picture is also later shown on the screen.

Vancouver, B. C.—"Cabiria," the Canadian rights for which are owned by the L. Girdler Feature Film Company, recently played a week's engagement at the Avenue theater at high prices. L. Wagner, of this city, is handling the show in British Columbia for Mr. Girdler, who is at present in Calgary.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. P. Nichols, managing director of the National Amusement Company, played "The Dumb Girl of Portici," the Universal's big Pavlowa feature, for an entire week at the Globe theater, and did very heavy business at 25 cents.

Vancouver Wants a Tax on Theater Tickets

City Authorities Will Ask Provincial Government for Sanction to Levy a Tax at the Flat Rate of One Cent a Ticket.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The city authorities, at the suggestion of local women's clubs, have under consideration the taxation of all theater tickets sold in this city, and it is announced that sanction to levy such a tax will be sought from the provincial legislature at its coming session. The present intention is to place the tax at a flat rate of one cent, although the proposition of levying a certain percentage of the value of the ticket has also been discussed.

At a recent meeting of the civil health committee Aldermen McIntosh and Kirk fathered the amendment, and explained that it was proposed to devote the proceeds thus secured to hospital or war funds. The proposition will be submitted to the entire council at its next regular meeting, and in the meantime the city solicitor was authorized to inaugurate the necessary six weeks' advertising before the session of the legislature. It is thought that the yearly revenue from this tax will be about $60,000.

Four Reels Burned While Audiences Waited.

New Westminster, B. C.—The excellence of the arrangements in Exhibitor Boener's operating room at the Royal theater here, recently prevented a certain panic in the house, if nothing worse, when a film caught fire during a matinee, and the operator found it necessary to make a quick exit. The Universal's Red Feather feature, "The Black Sheep of the Family," was being shown, and four reels of it were burned, although those in the audience were unaware that a fire was taking place until it was all over. The theater was not damaged.

Credit Was Due Manager Inverairty.

Vancouver, B. C.—In connection with a recent item accompanied by a photograph showing a street-car advertising idea for Pathe's "The Shielding Shadow," we credited the stunt to Manager Milligan of the Pantages theater in Calgary, entirely forgetting the fact that Mr. Milligan went to New York many months ago, and that Manager Inverairty is now in charge. Our apologies to Mr. Inverairty. (If we have spelled the name wrong, we extend still more apologies.)

A Day's Receipts to Xmas Fund.

Winnipeg, Man.—On the Friday before Christmas, Manager Seamans, of the Strand theater, turned over his entire receipts from noon to 11 p. m. to the City Christmas Fund.

Harold Bell Wright's Film at Clune's Auditorium Is Better Than Book

By Maitland Davies

THAT Harold Bell Wright's story, The Eyes of the World, makes a better photoplay than it does a novel, was conclusively proved at Clune's Auditorium yesterday afternoon, and, at that, goodness only knows how many million people read the book. A huge audience gathered to see the first Los Angeles presentation of W. H. Clune's second big film production.

Without striving to make The Eyes of the World a spectacle, the producers have succeeded in making it one of the most picturesque productions of the season, by reason of the excellent judgment used in selecting locations. Nature has provided a world of wonderful sets, and there happened to be a man in the organization with brain enough to pick out the most likely of them, with the result that some of the most splendid pictorial effects the screen has shown are disclosed in this picture.

The Eyes of the World is not something to recommend for the other man to see. It is something to see yourself. You, personally, will enjoy it. There is something about it that will appeal to everybody. I don't think I am different from the average man and I enjoyed every bit of it.

HERALD

By GUY PRICE

There is a "Hall of Fame" for almost everything nowadays, so why not have one for motion picture producers?

And while we are about it, let's reserve a spot for our own home-grown producer, W. H. Clune.

Along with Griffith, Ince, DeMille and possibly one or two others, he is deserving of front-wall position.

Yesterday at his Auditorium theater Mr. Clune revealed to an avid public his second cinematographic production, "The Eyes of the World," which not only equaled the former in the matter of scenic beauty and romantic theme, but far surpassed it in story, thrills, photography and human appeal.

TAKES HIS SEAT

Therefore, what the first film child, "Ramona," lacked to place its promotor into the coveted realm of renown the second child, "The Eyes of the World," possesses in abundancy—and now, Mr. Clune, step forward, please, and take your seat in the select row!

Harold Bell Wright, the California-Arizona author, who enjoys the distinction of having more readers to the square inch of literary Mss. than any other novelist, furnished the book "The Eyes of the World," consequently, if we are to make our deductions on "best seller" form, the second picture will double, if not triple, the popularity of the first.

As an entertainment, "The Eyes of the World" is keenly enjoyable. It has the happy faculty of annexing your complete attention in the beginning and keeping your mind—and eyes—riveted on it until the last foot of the last reel has unwound itself—a feat seldom performed nowadays in film circles.

EXPRESS

By George St. George

THE EYES OF THE WORLD scored a great big hit at Clune's Auditorium yesterday afternoon. In making a photoplay out of Harold Bell Wright's widely read novel, W. H. Clune has presented an attraction that lives up to the high standard set by Ramona, his first production. In fact, The Eyes of the World will almost unquestionably prove a much more popular attraction than Ramona. It has all the essentials of popular success and, like Ramona, has a very large ready-made public waiting to enjoy it. The audience that attended the premier yesterday afternoon was the largest I have ever seen crowded into the auditorium.

The story is handled in splendid style. The producers have added a prologue for the purpose of properly placing and explaining the characters, and it proves interesting in spite of its being purely explanatory in purpose. Once it is over and act 2 begins the play sweeps along, gathering force with every stride until, as the big scene is approached, climax piles upon climax and bursts in the tremendously dramatic fight on the narrow ledge of rock thousands of feet up the cliff. This scene is one of the most effective bits that ever has found its way into a picture, and it held the whole audience spellbound yesterday afternoon. There was absolute stillness in the theater while it lasted and a sigh of relief and a burst of applause as it finished. Although it is big enough to stand competition with anything in the way of thrills, the director has, very wisely, let it be the great, big, logical climax of the play, and the events leading to it have been handled in a supremely sensible and unphotoplay-like manner.

The photography in the play almost beggars description. The locations have been chosen with an eye for the beautiful as well as for the effective, and Enrique Vallejo has made them things that are exquisite through the fineness of his art.

TIMES

"EYES OF THE WORLD."

FILM VERSION OF WRIGHT'S NOVEL AT CLUNE'S.

Another master picture has been added to the list of the few really great screen dramas. In some respects "The Eyes of the World," which made its debut at Clune's Auditorium yesterday, stands absolutely alone.

Nothing approaching its photographic effects have been thus far produced in pictures. The play also stands pre-eminent in the matter of vivid character types. There is no other screen play now before the public in which the characterizations are so telling or so interesting.

This production sounds a new note in pictures. Big multiple reel pictures have come to stay. Heretofore, most of these ambitious pictures have been great spectacles in which the story was almost submerged in the smoke of battles. "The Eyes of the World" goes back to what people really want to see—an appealing love story.

Those familiar with the book need not be told that in the unfolding of this love story there is an exciting succession of tense and dramatic situations. One of these is a fight on the edge of the precipice and drops and the villain. As the hero weakens and is about to be thrown over the abyss, an escaped convict, watching the struggle from another cliff, shoots across the chasm and the dead body of the villain slips over the edge of the precvipice and drops into eternity.

Most of the scenes are taken in the mountains of California and Arizona. As mere landscapes, some of the scenes are superbly beautiful.

'Eyes of World' Opened to Startlingly Magnificent Photoplay at Clune's

By Otheman Stevens

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD" were opened yesterday at Clune's Auditorium. Opened to startlingly magnificent photography; opened to what has generally been termed the best form of photodrama—the narrative which commands.

Every place in the Auditorium was filled to the limits of the fire ordinance, and I venture that every seat will be filled as long as the picture is on.

Mr. Clune has only made two pictures, "Ramona" and this one, which proves the value of concentration of effort in results that are marked with radiant success.

The story is too familiar to readers to warrant repetition. It is intense in its action, mingling the most naturally intimate traits of humanity in a series of dramatic incidents, and saturated throughout with the ultimate of idealized romance.

It is a melodrama in the higher form of that method of dramatic expression; perhaps at times somewhat naive, as ultra intense situations are apt to be when devoid of talk; but always beautiful, always holding attention with irresistible power and always awakening a response of both understanding and admiration.

For it is all that long demanded product, a powerful drama with nothing that excites the baser instinct. No picture has been shown approaching in tensity various episodes, particularly the final fight on a mountain top; nothing in the way of a picture has been so totally devoid of faking effects, and no picture was ever more or probably equally healthy and sane in all its attributes.

One day, however, she meets Bill, a man of iron will, who proves his calibre on his arrival by starting a little gun play after blowing smoke in the faces of a few strangers. As Bill goes to the saloon, he passes the graveyard and the epitaphs on the tombstones set him thinking. At the saloon he introduces himself and treats to drinks. When he refuses to pay, Kate starts a scrap in which Bill is victorious. In another encounter Bill is again the victor. Kate finally becomes submissive and marries Bill, who is very domineering and is in the act of scolding her when his wife wakes him with the aid of a rolling pin and Bill appeals for mercy.

ESSANAY.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY (Black Cat Feature—Two parts—Jan. 16).—The cast: "Sunshine" Billy (Mary V. McAlister).

The darkness in the home of Caleb Howe and his wife was due—though they did not realize it—to the absence of a little ray of human sunshine. This old couple had grown crabbed in their loneliness, and almost hated each other. They called her "Sunshine Billy" at the orphanage, for, though she herself was an orphan, the little girl was the sunshine of the dreary, sad institution. She "muvvered" the other little orphans and each evening prayed that they would all get good homes soon. It was Sunshine Billy fate decreed should go to the home of Caleb Howe, when he applied at the orphanage for a girl to help his wife with the housework. Though the aged couple at first were cold towards the little girl, it was inevitable that they soon should recognize that the real happines of life which they had missed was a child. Having found that happiness in Sunshine Billy, life took on a new aspect for them.

ONE ON HIM (Jan. 17).—Hunting a job as a chauffeur, a rich idler is told that the boss employs only married men. He promptly decides to get married and win the job. The first girl he meets is willing and they are married at sixty miles an hour in an automobile. He shows up for work and discovers he has married his prospective employer's daughter. B autiful scenic taken in Yosemite Valley makes up the rest of the reel.

THE SINFUL MARRIAGE (No. 6 of "Is Marriage Sacred?"—Two Parts—Jan. 20).—The cast: Jesamine Rogers (Marguerite Clayton); Dr. Roderick Tredmore (Edward Arnold); Duncan Reed (Snyder Ainsworth); Marion (Marion Lydston); Darius Rogers (Thomas Commerford).

The marriage of Jesamine Rogers to the wealthy Richard Denslow has not the sacred seal of love. The girl's ambitious mother deemed the ample Denslow dollar mark quite sufficient and her maternal domination leads to her daughter's sale at the altar. Jesamine loves Dr. Roderick Tredmore. Denslow is good to her, however, and so she did her best to be a loyal wife to him.

Through a diabolical plot of a lawyer who seeks the Denslow fortune, Jesamine's husband is poisoned. Dr. Tredmore, now risen to fame, is called and saves his life. But Denslow, in the greeting between his wife and the physician, detects that her old love still lives. He declares that his marriage has been a sinful one, and permits his wife to obtain a divorce and marry the man she loves.

THE TRAIL OF GRAFT (No. 13—"Grant, Police Reporter"—Jan. 12). The cast: Tom Grant (George Larkin); boss Kelly (Harry Gordon); Nell, his stenographer (Ollie Kirkby); Thompson, his secretary (Robert Ellis); Stacey (Bert Tracey); Mansfield (William McKey). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Tom Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle, finishes a story and lays it before Mansfield, the city editor. It explains how Boss Kelly, a city politician, has grafted $350,000. Mansfield asks Grant if he has the proofs. Grant promises to have them before the day is over.

Grant arrives at the building where Kelly has his suite of offices. From a window across the court he attracts the attention of Nell, Kelly's stenographer. She raps out a message in the Morse code on her typewriter which explains that she has the checkbook stubs and other incriminating documents that will convict Kelly, and asks that Grant meet her at Field's restaurant at 5:30.

As Grant and Nell are about to leave the restaurant, Stacey rushes in and tells him Mansfield wants him at the office on important business. Stacey, a linotype operator on The Chronicle, has a taxi waiting. Grant will take Nell to her home on the way. Nell gets in the taxi. Grant is sandbagged and thrown in. The crooks leap in and the taxi speeds away. Kelly follows in his auto.

The taxi and auto stop in front of a shabby house and Grant and Nell are taken in and up to a room on the fifth floor rear. Grant is searched by the men while Nell is searched by the woman of the house. The crooks find nothing on either. Grant and Nell are tied up. At Kelly's direction, the old woman builds a fire in an iron pot reposing in the fireplace of the adjoining room. The smoke pours into the next room through a flue hole high up near the ceiling.

Grant throws himself and the chair he is tied to, on the floor and, with his teeth, loosens Nell's bonds. Grant smashes the window glass to allow the smoke to escape, then wrenches off several iron bars. He and Nell crawl out on the window sill.

Grant sees a fire escape balcony on their building some distance away. There is none where they stand at the window. Grant ties the end of the rope used to bind him up to the iron bars, grasps the other end and leaps down. His momentum swings him over to the fire escape. He hooks on with his feet, secures end of rope tightly and crawls back on the taut rope hand over hand to the window. Nell's climbs on his back and Grant makes the return trip to fire escape over the rope. They land safely.

An hour later Grant reports to Mansfield. From his shoe he takes out the checkbook stubs and incriminating letters. Mansfield congratulates his plucky reporter.

THE FIREMAN'S NEMESIS (No. 114 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Jan. 13). The cast: Helen, operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Joe Cordona, the fireman (Richard Johnston); Scarlotta, an Italian (George Routh); chief despatcher (G. A. Williams). Written by Frank Howard Clark. Directed by Walter Morton.

Joe, the Wop, employed in the roundhouse near Lone Point is notified that he has been promoted and will take his place that night as a fireman on the local freight. On his way home he stops at the station to tell Helen, the operator, of his good fortune.

As Joe starts down the track towards home, Scarlotta, a member of a notorious vendetta that has marked Joe for death, shoots him from ambush. Helen sees Joe fall in the middle of the track and barely succeeds in dragging him to safety out of the path of the limited.

Joe's wound is not serious and that night he takes his place as fireman on the freight. Determined to "get" Joe, Scarlotta visits the station where Helen is still at her key and after binding her and locking her in a closet, throws the switch so that the freight will collide with the cars on the siding. Helen frees herself by tipping over the clothes closet and saves the freight and its crew by reversing the switch.

Thwarted again, the Vendetta agent climbs aboard the engine the following morning, overpowers the engineer and ties Joe to the drivers' seat after dumping the engineer out of the side door. As the runaway engine (Scarlotta has uncoupled it from the train) proceeds to certain destruction, Helen gives chase on her motor cycle. After a perilous ride across a high bridge, she leaps for the engine cab and pulls herself up by the rope that Scarlotta has used to tie up Joe, the fireman. She is just in the nick of time for the remorseless Italian had tucked a stick of dynamite in Joe's belt and set fire to a short time fuse. As Helen hurls the dynamite from the window it explodes, tearing a great yawning hole in the right of way.

CUPID'S CADDIES—(Jan. 16).—The cast: Ham and Bud (The Caddies); Prince Poppycock (Henry Murdoch); Flirtatious Flossie (Ethel Teare).

Ham and Bud are on the verge of starvation when a newspaper advertisement arrests their attention. It states that Prince Poppycock will pay $10,000 for an American wife weighing exactly 145 pounds. Cupid's caddies set out to earn the reward.

Having interviewed the Prince they stroll through the park, armed with a Fairbanks scale, in search of their prey. After several bitter disappointments, they encounter Flirtatious Flossie and although she fills the specifications, Ham decides to keep her for himself. The Prince and his bodyguard have followed our heroes and proceed to clap Flossie into a trunk and bear her away.

Ham and Bud follow. Once in his house the Prince exchanges places with Flossie, who hides behind the portieres as the avenging knights arrive upon the scene. After transporting the trunk some distance down the road, our friends pause to rest. The Prince rises from the trunk in time to enfold Flirtatious Flossie in his arms. "Stung again," remarked Ham and Bud.

THE HOMESTEADERS' FEUD—(No. 23 of "The Girl from 'Frisco"—Two Parts—Jan. 17).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); Ace Brent, Barbara's father (Frank Jonasson); John Wallace, land agent (True Boardman); Anson Dukes, homestead broker (Roland Bradbury); John Tisbury, a homesteader (Edw. Clisbee). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by James W. Horne.

John Tisbury, a homesteader, driving a covered wagon bearing his wife, children and household effects, arrives before the office of John Wallace, government land agent at Sourgrass. He is but one of many homeseekers who have come to file upon the rich, watered land controlled by the government but always used by the cattle barons for grazing their herds.

Wallace is obliged to permit Tisbury to file upon land cut by Tarantula Creek, a watering hole for the stock owned by Ace Brent, whose charming daughter Barbara is some day to become Mrs. Wallace. Anson Dukes, hating the cattle barons, advises Tisbury to fence off his claim immediately. He openly defies Brent and his daughter, Barbara.

Brent's cowpunchers cut the wires strung by Tisbury and an open war of the rapidly arriving homesteaders versus the cattlemen is imminent. Dukes arms the settlers but that night the cattlemen capture Tisbury and proceed to flog him. A pitched battle then ensues which Barbara nips in the bud by riding between the two factions, thereby calling a council of war. Matters are satisfactorily adjusted, and the flogging administered to Dukes who has been mulcting the homesteaders of their savings. Barbara's forgiveness includes Wallace, who, she now realizes, has only done his duty as demanded by the government.

THE BLACK CIRCLE—(Episode No. 14 of "Grant, Police Reporter"—Jan. 19). The cast: Tom Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle (George Larkin); Royce Rolston, retired eye surgeon (Robert Ellis); Genevieve Rolston, his daughter (Ollie Kirkby); Dr. Standish, a blind man (Harry Gordon); Jamison, the butler (William McKey). Written by Robert Welles Ritchie. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Tom Grant, police reporter on the Chronicle, is on his way to his office when he sees a blind man hesitating in front of an apartment house entrance. Springing forward he assists the gentleman up the steps and courteously rings the bell for him. Later that evening he is sent to the same house to get the story of a mysterious shooting that has resulted in the death of the master of the house, Royce Rolston, a retired eye specialist.

Grant, by his investigation, determines that the fatal wound has been inflicted by a shot gun. Rolston's blind visitor has carried a heavy cane. Grant discovers circular marks upon the floor that appear to be powder stains. He questions the butler and from him learns that just prior to Rolston's marriage, Dr. Standish had been blinded in a fight over Genevieve's mother.

Having established revenge as a motive and being suspicious of the cane carried by Dr. Standish, Grant gains admission to his apartment. He comes to grips with the blind man on the balcony but is unable to prevent him from tumbling to his death when the railing gives way.

By a superhuman effort Grant swings himself clear and proceeds to the ground via some telephone wires, hanging head downwards until he can reach a rain spout leading to the street. The broken cane proves to be a cleverly de-

He attends the death-bed of a poor musician, who leaves a little girl of eight, penniless. John has been kind to the child and on the night of the funeral she appears at his door, saying that she has come to be his housekeeper.

He tries to explain that this is impossible, but finding her starving and ill-treated determines to adopt her.

Ten years later John has become wealthy. His adopted daughter (christened Johanna, but called Jo), is engaged to Gerald. When John's consent is asked he hides his love for Jo, but questions Gerald about his past, knowing that he has had a love affair with a widow of doubtful reputation. Gerald assures him that is all over, but the reappearance of the widow soon puts a different light on the matter. When Gerald remains away for two or three days, John goes to the house of Leonie (the widow). He discovers her on the eve of departure with Gerald. She defies the doctor and laughs at his solicitude for Jo. John leaves, although Gerald is shaken by the contempt of his friend John.

Amongst Jo's friends is a poor girl called Sue. She was about to be married to a bank clerk, when he became attracted to a young widow. He neglected Sue, and the matter ended in his serving a term of imprisonment for theft, instigated by the woman.

At the time of Jo's trouble, Sue's sweetheart has been released, and he comes back a crushed and broken man.

Sue recognizes in Leonie the woman who ruined her sweetheart and taking her sweetheart exposes Leonia to Gerald. She tries to deny her guilt and determines to be revenged. John's words are fixed on her memory, "Jo does not know that such women as you exist." She sends for Jo and is about to open her eyes to the horrible side of life when she discovers that Jo is her own child. Next day she goes to John, telling him the truth, and demanding the girl. However, her better nature conquers, and she leaves without disclosing the truth to Jo. Meanwhile Jo discovers that John loves her, and realizes the love of such a man is worth more than that of the weak, vacillating Gerald.

At a society leader's garden party jewels of great value are exposed and Patricia with her aunt are invited guests. When Pat learns Kelly has been employed to guard the jewels, she decides to demonstrate again that Kelly is not so adept as his friends think he is.

She has found among the Apaches an aviator and instructs him to hover over the grounds during the party and at a signal to drop bombs, then to sail to the hangar and await developments. The exploding bomb creates great excitement and when the guests rush from the house the girl steals the jewels.

Kelly suspects Pat and follows her. She rushes to an automobile and is driven to the hangar, closely followed by Kelly, in another machine. Kelly and his men attack Pat and her assistants and in the fight Kelly is knocked senseless. Pat and her aviator ascend, but the machine acts badly. Observing the bandit throw away the handkerchief in which the money had been wrapped. Lem picks it up.

Lem sticks the shaving brush in Christy's face and is about to settle the argument when Christy draws his gun. Zillia, Christy's daughter, mockingly calls out "Don't hurt the little barber, dad!" That evening Lem again pays his respects to Zillia, but Christy empties a basin of water on his head and departs, vowing vengeance on Zillia and her dad.

Later a card game is in progress and Lem is winning, while Christy is a heavy loser. A dispute arises and Lem bets his pile against Christy's girl. Winning the wager, but dropping his handkerchief in his excitement, the barber starts for Christy's shack.

Meanwhile, Zillia has been exploring about the woods, and comes upon an express-box hidden in the bushes. She recognizes her father's handiwork, but resolves to keep silent.

Finding Zillia at home, Lem carries her off by force. Before reaching the preacher's, however, Lem decides to return home with Zillia, as he doesn't care to force her love. They are overtaken by a posse sent out by the sheriff, who has recognized Lem's handkerchief as the one stolen by the bandit. Realizing Lem is not guilty, Zillia returns to her shack and is shadowed by the sheriff. She accuses her father of stealing the express-box and helps Lem to escape from the prison. He is caught, however, and about to be hanged, when the sheriff appears with Christy, the real bandit. Chagrined at her rebuff, he planned cunningly. On his way from her home, he sent a fake wire to Jim, purporting to come from his uncle, Frank Foster, and asking him to come at once, as he was dangerously ill. Jim, heeding the request, met Uncle Frank, who had just come to visit him.

With Jim gone from the office, Dan had the office boy telephone to Nan, telling her that Jim wished her to come to the office. When she arrived, she found only Dan, who began forcing his attentions upon her. She struggled with him. Jim and Frank had gone home and the maid told of the message. Jim hurried back to the office to find his wife battling with Dan. Then it was that murder was done.

Now he is hiding in a cabin, cheered by a note from Nan that she and Frank are working so that he can make his escape. A detective is put on the trail, and he locates Jim in the cabin through the dog which has been his companion. The detective straps Jim in a chair and then leaves to get a horse. The dog, having been shut out of the cabin, manages to dig his way into the house, and tugs at the strap which binds Jim until it snaps and Jim is free. Eddie heard Pietro say, "I will not sign unless you give me the girl."

The detective read in his book that one whistle was for five cops and six whistles for one. Five policemen dropped in beside him, and broke into the room. The cops grabbed Lee, but he told them to read the agreement

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

BELOVED ROGUES—(American—Five parts—Jan. 15).—The cast: Louie Vandergriff (C. William Kolb); Mike Amsterdammer (Max M. Dill); Madge (May Cloy); Jack Kennedy (Thomas Chatterton); "Boss" Kennedy (Clarence Burton); Andrews (Harry Von Meter).

Two foreigners own a hardware and plumbing store. The Amalgamated Hardware Company, a trust, make Mike and Louie an offer on their place, which they refuse. Amid their denunciation of the trust Madge and her sweetheart, Jack Kennedy, enter. Jack has come to ask Madge's uncles for her hand, but they will give Jack no answer. That evening Madge is told the story of her life. Her father, while mining in the West, was killed by a blast and she has been raised by Mike and Louie, who are informed by John Andrews that her father passed away leaving nothing.

Jack's father, "Boss" Kennedy, is the silent partner with John Andrews, none other than the former partner to Madge's father, in the Amalgamated Hardware Company. Though a crook, Kennedy endeavors to keep his actions from his boy. Andrews and Kennedy decide to squash the two Dutchmen by opening a store across the street and underselling them. Eventually the trust forces the foreigners out of business. Madge gets a position in a laundry where an alkaline tank explodes and blinds her. Andrews and Kennedy argue and vow "to get" each other.

Mike and Louie read that a specialist has come to town, who can perform an operation upon the blind which will enable them to see, but charges $500 for his service. Mike and Louie offer to sell their store to Kennedy, who refuses them. He refers them to Andrews if they are in search of charity. Leaving Jack in charge of the store, Mike and Louie visit Andrews. Introducing Madge as Miss Morton, the Dutchmen do not notice that Andrews is surprised. He informs them that he will think about it. Madge's name causes visions of the past and Andrews sees his old partner as he died begging Andrews to take care of his child, for which he wills him one-half interest in his mine. After Morton's death the mine paid enormously and Andrews took no further interest in Madge other than to inform her guardians that she had been left nothing by her father.

Andrews is informed that Kennedy is double-crossing him and that Jack is caring for the store across the street. Andrews buys the store for $500. Crooks learn that Mike and Louie have $500 and that night rob them of their money. The crooks are captured and in the night court Mike and Louie accuse them. The crooks send for Kennedy who arrives with Jack, and the "Boss" has his henchmen released and Mike and Louie get the worst end of it. Jack, realizing his father's actions, demands an explanation, which results in an argument and the boy leaves his father's house. Intent upon revenge, Mike and Louie steal into Kennedy's house and rob him of $500, which pays for Madge's operation. Inspired by their success, they go out to make another haul and accidentally get into Andrews' home, where they rob his private safe and get a tin box which they take home. On opening it, they find evidence to prove Andrews' guilt and resolve on revenge. Madge is released from the hospital, able to see again.

Andrews in attempting to get even with Kennedy, frames circumstantial evidence proving Jack guilty of stealing the tin box. In the court trial everything is going against Jack when Mike and Louie jump up and confess. Andrews makes a get-away, but Mike and Louie are sentenced to two years in State's prison. For one year they are remorseful but later are shown as trusted trusties. They speak to their fellow convicts and impress upon them the folly of wrong-doing; they avert a break

GAUMONT.

REEL LIFE, NO. 39 (Jan. 28).—First in importance in this issue is the series of views of an X-ray outfit carried upon an automobile to the French hospitals at the front where the surgeons are often forced to operate almost under the fire of the enemy's guns. There is a demonstration of how the machine can be set up hurriedly at whatever spot the temporary hospital is located, and also of the method employed in photographing a patient.

A business not known to many is the preparation of butterflies for decorative purposes. The entire process is shown, together with some of the plaques and with some of the bouquets ornamented with some of the more beautiful specimens. One butterfly is shown which is valued at $75.

A third section of the reel shows how salt is made from sea water in California. The process is not complicated, yet eighteen months elapse from the time the water is pumped into the vats until the refined salt is ready for market.

The Hawaiian wave of ukulele music and hula hula dancing has not abated with the coming of cold weather, and nightly from coast to coast theaters and cabarets vie with each other in presenting these beautiful dancers of the South Seas to the strains of the sensuous music of the Pacific Isles. The Gaumont Company shows for spectators just how the hula hula is danced on the beach at Weikiki.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, NO. 13 (Jan. 30).—The little known capital of Persia, Teheran, opens this issue of "Tours Around the World." On the same reel are pictures of the coast resorts of Normandy—Etretat, Honfleur and Trouville, and pictures of winter scenes in the Vosges Mountains.

The Teheran section offers a panorama of the bazaar, views of some of the principal streets, the great market, the Gate of Diamonds, a mosque and characteristic pictures of natives.

The Normandy resorts are frequented, not only by the French, but by all other nations—when war does not give them over to the military, the huge hotels turned into hospitals. Etretat sprang into popularity because of its frequent mention in the novels of Alphonse Karr. Honfleur dates from the eleventh century. Its inhabitants live chiefly upon the fishing industry. Trouville is the most frequented and perhaps the most fashionable French resort on the English channel.

The pictures in the Vosges mountains were taken at Gerardmer. There is a panorama of the town, views of streets and mountains covered with snow, and exciting pictures of winter sports.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 73 (Jan. 31).—The great influence of the Franciscan friars that is traceable in the civilization of the southwestern part of the United States makes doubly interesting this issue of "See America First," for the town shown is San Diego, Cal. Here Father Junipero Serra first raised the cross, established his first mission on California soil, and began to minister spiritually to the Indians.

The pictures include Fifth street, the principal business thoroughfare, Serra Cross, where the Franciscan pioneer began his labors, the Mission of San Diego de Olcala, founded in 1769, the old Spanish Lighthouse at Point Loma, the Normal School, the garden in which Ramona was married, made famous by Helen Hunt Jackson's novel; Balboa Park, formerly the exposition grounds; the Union station, and the celebrated Hotel del Coronado. Near San Diego, at Point Loma, is the home of the Theosophical Institute of the "Universal Brotherhood." Its buildings are beautifully classical structures. The pictures show the Temple of Peace, the Raja Yoga College buildings, and the open-air Greek theater.

On the same reel is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer, entitled "Never Again." This Kartoon Komic relates the adventures of a man trying to get rid of a box of cigars purchased for him by his wife.

PATRIA—(No. 1. The Last of the Fighting Channings) (International) (Three parts—Jan. 14).—Synopsis published in issue of Jan. 6 on page 137.

PATRIA—(No. 2, "Treasure") (International) (Two parts—Jan. 21).—Synopsis published in issue of Jan. 13 on page 280.

PATRIA—(Episode No. 3, "Winged Millions"—Two parts—Jan. 28).—The cast: Patria Channing (Mrs. Vernon Castle); Donald Parr (Milton Sills); Baron Huroki (Warner Oland); Juan de Lima (George Maharoni).

Patria and Donald return and find the secret service on guard at the underground entrance to the vault. They are joined by Ryley, Donald's assistant, and a mechanic. Neither Patria nor Donald suspect that Huroki has stolen the treasure but when they are fired upon by a Jap stationed in the house next door, Donald starts to investigate. He goes through the half-burned Channing mansion, and crossing to the next roof finds that the scuttle has been forced. On locating the room from which the shots were fired he jerks open the door, kills the Jap and rushes out to find the vans gone. He makes inquiries and goes in pursuit of the treasure.

Patria has followed Donald into the next house. Her search leads to the cellar, where she discovers the breach in the wall and learns of the loss of the treasure. A Jap left by Huroki captures and ties her to a chair. He places dynamite and after lighting a time fuse departs. Patria screams and realizing that help cannot reach her from the outside gets her right hand free and severs the fuse with a shot from her revolver. Ryley and his mechanics cut through the steel door with an acetylene outfit and Patria is rescued. She tells Ryley not to bother about the money but to find Donald.

Donald has followed the vans to a pier alongside which is moored the Japanese freighter Sandai aboard which the treasure has been placed. He slips aboard and conceals himself in the hold. The ship sails but a fog retards her progress. Donald gains the upper deck unobserved, and at the point of his big revolver compels the operator to send the following wireless to Patria: "S. S. Sandai. Fog bound in lower bay. Advise Ryley."

Before Donald can retreat to his hiding place his presence is discovered by Huroki and he is overpowered, beaten, and placed in the hold. Patria receives the message, and leaving directions that Ryley be notified, starts in a motor boat to overtake the Sandai. She succeeds and steers alongside without being seen, because of the fog. The exhaust of her motor has been heard, however, and when she climbs aboard is caught by the sailors and locked up in a stateroom. She manages to get out, dives into the sea, and swimming to her motor boat starts off.

The fog has lifted, and those on the Sandai are alarmed to observe a U. S. torpedo boat. They try to put on speed but when a shot is sent across her bows conclude to sink the ship and take to the boats. The water pouring into the hold has reached Donald's neck when he is saved by American jackies, for the torpedo boat has picked up Patria, and she leads the search until Donald is rescued. It is then discovered that his peril was not extreme because the Japs had sunk their ship in shoal water and she soon touched bottom. Huroki and DeLima with the Japanese crew escape and land on the Jersey shore.

THE BRIDE OF HATE (Kay Bee)—Jan. 14).—Dr. Dudley Duprez is a well-known Louisiana physician. His beautiful but wayward niece, Rose Duprez, is seduced by Paul Crenshaw, a friend of the doctor, and to prevent her shame from becoming known, Rose kills herself. Dr. Duprez learns her secret and determines to make Crenshaw expiate his crime. While traveling on a Mississippi River steamer, the doctor wins Mercedes, a beautiful slave, at cards. He takes her home, and, passing her off as a distant relative, arranges it so that Crenshaw falls in love with the girl.

A wedding is arranged, and immediately after the ceremony Dr. Duprez announces to the assembled guests that Mercedes is a slave and that he considers he has punished Crenshaw sufficiently by making him the husband of a "nigger." A yellow fever epidemic breaks out shortly after, and Crenshaw is shot when attempting to evade the quarantine. Dr. Duprez is told by a dying overseer from the plantation where Mercedes was born that the girl is of Spanish and American ancestry, without a drop of negro blood in her veins, and was made a slave through a conspiracy. The doctor returns home, confesses his wrong to Mercedes, and is forgiven by her. In the end they are married.

THE LITTLE YANK (Fine Arts—Jan. 14).—Sallie is a beautiful Kentucky girl who belongs to a family of Union sympathizers. Her brother is a lieutenant in the Union army, and on a visit home brings Major Rushton, his superior officer, who falls in love with Sallie, "the little Yank." Lieut. James Castleton encourages his sister to make hospital supplies for the wounded soldiers. While the two Union officers are at the Castleton home, the house is surrounded by Confederates, but Sallie utilizes a clever ruse in helping her brother and the Major to escape. She herself starts through the Confederate lines to carry her supplies to the wounded Unionists. She is assisted by Captain Johnny, a handsome young Confederate. Lieutenant Castleton is captured by the Confederates after a battle in which he has been injured, and Sally goes to the enemy's camp to nurse him. While there she falls in love with Captain Johnny.

Meanwhile Major Rushton has become a spy, following the Confederates as a sutler. He learns of the attraction between Sallie and Captain Johnny, and decides to break it up. He returns to the Union lines and sends Captain Johnny a note, presumably from Sallie, asking him to meet her at a trysting place. Johnny is captured, evidence is "planted" on him, and he is condemned to death. Sallie learns of the perilous situation, and, going to Rushton's headquarters, flirts with him, so that attention is diverted from her Confederate lover, and he is enabled to escape. Shortly after hostilities cease and a long lifetime of happiness dawns for Sallie and Captain Johnny.

The release date of "The Great Secret" has been postponed from December 25, 1916, to January 8. The title of the first episode is "The Secret Seven," and a story of it was published on page 136 of the issue dated January 6. The synopsis of Episode 2 was published in the same issue on the same page; Episode 3 on page 281 of January 13, and Episode 4 on page 424 of January 20th issue.

THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter 5, "The Trap"—Two parts—Feb. 5).—The thugs swarm upon Strong, who is fighting desperately when a gangster "blackjacks" him, and, unconscious, he is imprisoned in a room. Beverly, in another room, is being put through a "third degree" by the thugs, who believe she knows where the treasure is to be found. Threats failing, the girl is carried downstairs and put into a place known to The Secret Seven as "The Room of Last Resort," a desperado of the "hyena" type following her.

Strong revives, tears a leg from a table and beats down the door. Half a dozen gangsters waiting in the hallway attack him, and while he is lying on the floor unconscious and a prostrate thug is training a pistol on him, policemen, led by Ackerton, The Shadow and Miss Tredwell, a woman detective, burst into the den.

Two policemen are shot. Strong knocks a thug down a stairway and is himself struck with a blackjack. Wee See flees down a dumbwaiter. The "Room of last resort," built like a huge elevator, is lowered with Beverly and two of the gangsters in it. When the police have overpowered those in the building, a search for Beverly is begun, but no trace can be found. Wee See, however, holds the secret.

THREADS OF FATE—(Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five parts—Jan. 22).—The cast: Dorothea (Viola Dana); Jim Gregory, "the wanderer" (Robert Whittier); Tom Wentworth (Augustus Phillips); Dr. Grant Hunter (Richard Tucker); Marquis Giovanni del Carnacacchi (Fred Jones); Sarah Wentworth (Helen Strickland); Marcella (Nellie Grant). Scenario by June Mathis. Directed by Eugene Nowland.

Marcella, the wife of Jim Gregory, a Pennsylvania coal miner, elopes with Giovanni, her lover. She leaves their baby daughter with her husband. Gregory, feeling powerless to give proper care to the little one, abandons her on a doorstep, tying around her neck a note and her mother's discarded wedding ring.

Tom and Sara Wentworth are the child's foster parents, and Tom calls her Dorothea, meaning "the gift of God." She grows up in sympathy with him, but wholly misunderstood by her foster-mother, who is much displeased at her propensity for caring for all the stray dogs and cats she can find, and turning the Wentworth home into a haven for animals. In later years Dr. Grant Hunter falls in love with Dot and she persuades him to give up his work in vivisection.

"Dot" loves Grant, but his suit is frowned upon by Sarah Wentworth. Her husband has inherited a large coal mine, and she wants someone more important than an impecunious doctor for her daughter. "Dot" has never been told of her true parentage.

Marcella and Giovanni, after many years of prosperity in Naples, have come to grief, Giovanni, known as the Marquis del Carnavacchi, is the leader of a branch of the Camorra. The Italian Secret Service has discovered his operations, and he tells Marcella, who is posing as his sister, that they will be compelled to go to America. Marcella is alarmed, fearing to encounter her husband.

At this time the miners in the Pennsylvania town where Gregory lives are talking of going on strike. Gregory has stirred the much abused foreigners into action, telling them the wages paid them are insufficient. In his friendship for them he has drifted into a branch of the Camorra, where he is their spokesman. Little dreaming that Wentworth is the man who has cared for his child all these years, Gregory leads a delegation of strikers who go to the Wentworth's mansion. He sees Dorothea, but does not know she is his daughter. Later, an accident to him at the mine interests "Dot" in him, and she visits him daily in the hospital, the two being strangely drawn to each other. Giovanni is ordered by the Camorra to visit the coal mine.

He represents himself as an agent of the Italian government. Sarah Wentworth welcomes so remarkable a personage as a Marquis, and invites him and his "sister" to make her house their home during their stay. They do so, enabling Giovanni the better to betray Wentworth to the miners, and also to make love to Dorothea, whom he makes up his mind to marry. He tells Marcella that he will divide with her the money he receives as a marriage settlement. An intuitive feeling causes Marcella to oppose the match, and "Dot" herself joins her foster father in objecting, but Sarah is determined to have a Marquis in the family. The marriage settlement is ready to sign, when "Dot" upsets everything by saying that if it costs so much money to get a husband she will remain single.

His plans thwarted, Giovanni decides to abduct "Dot" and kill Wentworth. Marcella is horrified, but Giovanni tells her to pack up and be in readiness to leave. Gregory, now recovered, refuses to be a party to the murderous plans of the Camorra members, but carries a message from them to Wentworth. While there, he overhears Sarah upbraiding "Dot" for spoiling the match with the Marquis, and he learns that "Dot" is his own child.

Under Wentworth's roof he meets Marcella, and husband and wife join forces in an effort to save their child. Marcella invents a pretext to take "Dot" out of Giovanni's reach, and Gregory remains to fight with Wentworth against the coming strikers, having sent in a call for the police. Gregory and Giovanni struggle and the former is shot. Giovanni is caught by the police, but Gregory has been mortally wounded, and dies, giving "Dot" his blessing, but not letting her know he is her father. Marcella places her daughter's hand in that of Dr. Grant Hunter.

THE GIRL PHILIPPA—(Eight parts—Special release—January).—About the year 1900, in a midnight raid on the palace of a Balkan king, emissaries of a great power slay the royal pair, and carry off the infant crown princess. The time shifts to the present. Foreign agents steal the plans of a new shell loaned Great Britain by America. Halkett and Gray, English officers, recover the plans; and the foreign agents endeavor to gain possession of them again.

Warner, an American artist sojourning in the neighborhood of Ausone in France, secures as his model, Philippa, cashier of the Cabaret de Biribi. He sees great intrinsic character in the beautiful pensive girl. Browbeaten by her burly foster father Wildresse, she is made to spy upon Warner, who has become a confident of Halkett. She exposes Wildresse to Warner and goes to him for refuge. Wildresse and his band capture her. Warner penetrates the master spy's stronghold and resues Philippa. Meanwhile war between France and Germany has broken out. A hint from a tool of Wildresse who has deserted him causes the girl to desire to find proofs of her birth. She hastens to Ausone, which is already besieged, and rifles the safe of Wildresse. She discovers proofs that she is a princess and is trapped in the cellar because of a battle fought in the streets. Warner, who had sought her, defends her from Wildresse and the invaders until the French save them by retaking the village. The spy is shot as a traitor, Philippa's true identity is established, and Warner, who has wooed her as a waif, now receives his answer from her as a princess.

HER RIGHT TO LIVE (Five parts—Jan. 22).—The cast: Polly Biggs (Miss Peggy Hyland); Mrs. Biggs (Mrs. Costello); Jimmy Biggs (Bobby Connelly); Janet Biggs (Helen Connelly); Alice Biggs (Mildred Platz); John Oxmore (Anutonio Moreno); Daniel Hoadley (John Robertson); Hawkins (Jack Ellis); Mrs. Hoadley (Eulalie Jensen).

Polly Biggs helps care for her younger brother and sisters, while her widowed mother works hard as a seamstress to earn a living. Mayor Hoadley, Mrs. Biggs' brother, a crooked politician, calls to sympathize with her on the death of her husband, and Polly takes a dislike to him. Within a short time Mrs. Biggs dies, and for the sake of appearances, Hoadley and his wife take the children to live with them.

Oxmore, a reform candidate, opposes Hoadley's re-election. His son, John, an artist, meets Polly and calls on her at the Hoadley mansion, where he saves her from the advances of Hawkins, a ward boss who "has something" on Hoadley. Hawkins threatens to "get" John for his interference, and the threat is heard by Hoadley.

Polly and the children are treated so badly that they run away to the poorhouse, which later burns; Polly saves the children, and they wander to a bungalow in the woods, John, who owns the bungalow, finds them there, and permits them to stay all night.

During the night Hoadley visits Hawkins and kills him in self-defence, using a cane that John has inadvertently left at his house. When John goes to town he is arrested. Polly and the children are his only alibi, and he cannot tell of Polly's presence. The evidence is strong against him, and, if he is convicted his father will lose the election. Polly, who has been sent away by Hoadley, returns in time to straighten matters.

Constance, the beautiful wife of Mark Barr, is in fear of her husband's jealousy. Among the guests at their reception are Myrtle Gale and her fiance, Billy Craig, to whom Constance was at one time engaged. Mark misinterprets a friendly chat between the two and forbids Billy to visit his house.

Myrtle goes to the city, and is to return on an early evening train, on which Constance also expects her husband. Both are delayed and Constance persuades Billy, who has come to meet Myrtle, to take her for a ride in his new car. They lose their way and are out nearly all night. Constance is beset with fear at her husband's anger. Billy takes Constance to an inn for a bite to eat and they discover it is a notorious roadhouse. On their way out of the grounds, lightning strikes a tree which falls in the road as another automobile, driven by Fletcher, cashier of the bank, approaches.

Monck, watchman at the bank, learning that Fletcher has gone out, breaks open the safe and takes a large sum of money. As an alibi he takes a watch charm which belongs to Fletcher, to the police, and tells them Fletcher overpowered him and robbed the bank. Fletcher is placed in jail and sends for Billy. Mrs. Fletcher also seeks his aid. Constance goes to Billy's office and hides behind a screen as her husband enters. She sneezes but Billy will not allow Mark to look behind the screen. Constance pictures the difference in size between the watchman and the cashier. Billy places his stenographer behind the screen, sends for Monck and secures his confession. Mark comes in and finds the stenographer behind the screen and Constance's happiness is assured. Fletcher is released and Mrs. Fletcher is made happy, while Billy goes to his sweetheart who is doubly happy in the knowledge that Billy has caused justice to be done.

BETTY TO THE RESCUE—(Lasky—Five parts—Jan. 15).—The cast: Betty Sherwin (Fannie Ward); John Kenwood (Jack Dean); Constance Kenwood (Lillian Leighton); Henry Sherwin, Betty's father (James Neill); James Fleming, mining expert (Charles West); big Jim (Ted Duncan).

Henry Sherwin has every cent invested in a mine, which is apparently valueless. James Fleming, a mine expert, discovers a rich vein of gold in the mine but keeps it secret. Mr. Sherwin dies and leaves Betty, his daughter, in the care of John Kenwood and his sister, Constance who, finding the estate worthless, allows Betty to believe she has an income. She goes to boarding school, lives luxuriously, and when she returns home is shocked to find John and Constance working, so she hires two servants.

A frost wipes out the orange crop, their last hope. Fleming proposes to Betty and is refused. Betty tells John he may have all her money, and although heartbroken and discouraged, he is greatly amused. Fleming finally tells Betty her mine is worthless, again asks her to marry him and is again refused. Betty dreams she sees gold pouring from her mine and runs away.

Going to the mine she finds Big Jim, and together they search for gold. The boys "salt" the mine and Betty is delighted at her supposed find of gold. She learns of the joke and decides to try her luck at gambling. She stakes her nuggets in a roulette game and loses. Fleming finds her here and takes her in his arms, announcing, just as Kenwood enters, she is to become his wife.

As Jim and the proprietor of the gambling house are looking over the nuggets Jim notices a strange one and asks Betty where she found it. She leads him to the mine and he discovers a rich vein—worth a million. Fleming's conspiracy is discovered. John takes Betty in his arms and tells her he has always loved her, and is informed of the discovery of the gold.

Her sudden wealth seems in his mind to create a great gulf between them, but she wriggles back into his embrace. She tells him she loves him and asks him to be her husband. He takes her closer in his arms and their happiness is complete.

THE HONEYLESS HONEYMOON—(Klever Komedy—Jan. 29).—Victor Moore, a young jewelry salesman, who has just been married, is leaving with his bride on the Clyde steamer on his honeymoon. Bill Manton and Bert Scott, two friends of his, determine to play a joke on him. They read in the paper that Mrs. Holstein of West 72nd street has been robbed of $75,000 worth of jewelry and that a former maid and butler are suspected. They write a note to the chief of detectives and inform him that the maid and butler are making a getaway on the Clyde steamer, sailing that day, posing as a young married couple.

By a singular coincidence the real crooks wanted for the robbery are employed on this steamer as stewardess and steward; the plunder is concealed in the steward's cabin. Vic and his bride arrive on the boat and find that their stateroom has been decorated by their friends. The only mar to their happiness is the dog that Vic's bride insists on taking with them. Vic loses his new high hat overboard while going up the gangplank. The thieving steward lends him his cap. The chief of detectives receives the joker's note and sends Vera Fleming and Darnton, two detectives after him. Before they arrive, Vic has had trouble with the bride about the dog who has chewed up her new hat. Unseen by her he drops the dog over the side of the boat but it is caught by Moulton, a souse.

The jewelry firm Vic works for send a sample case of jewelry to him by messenger to deliver in Jacksonville. The thieving steward overhears the reading of the letter and seeing the jewelry, determines to get it. The two detectives arrive just before the boat starts and show the steward and stewardess the letter from the jokers. They inquire how many "honeymooners are booked." The crooks tell them only one couple. Seeing safety for themselves they work with the detectives against the innocent Vic and his bride.

Vic and his wife are annoyed after the boat starts by the prying eyes of the two detectives. The stewards tell the detectives that they saw the jewelry taken from the Holsteins in Vic's room. They determine to arrest them that night. But seasickness prevents them and raises havoc with Vic and his bride. The next morning Vic and his wife are arrested in the presence of the passengers in the salon. Things look back for them until Moulton, who is a detective, proves that the steward and the stewardess are the guilty parties.

the farm and purchased a travelling show to give Mary her chance to be a stage dancer. There was a Madame La Rue in the company, who had a daughter of about Mary's age, and the two girls disagreed, with Mme. La Rue continually inspiring discord.

Mary's father is stricken at a time when Mary is on the stage giving her performance. Mme. La Rue has him removed to her own dressing room, and there the old man makes his dying statement to the scheming woman. He tells her where, in his trunk, he keeps his money; asks that his wealthy brother, in a distant town, be notified of his death, and that Mary be taken to her uncle who will provide her from his abundance with a home.

Mme. La Rue takes the money from the trunk, wires to Mary's uncle that she is bringing Mary and the body of her father to him, and, deserting Mary, takes her own daughter instead. Mme. La Rue and her child are, accordingly, established in luxury. When the authorities disband the juvenile opera company because the owner is dead and there is no one to carry on the show, Mary is taken in charge by a shrewish woman who makes a kitchen slave of the child.

Mary bears oppression as long as she can, and then runs away to the town where her father is buried. Near the ocean shore she locates a cottage that offers shelter, even though the owner is not at home. Mary goes to sleep in the bed and awakes next morning to find that a kindly disposed young man, who makes his living fishing with his nets, owns the cottage and straightway offers a home and working partnership.

Mary one day meets Phillip, a handsome young author, who is a visitor at the home of Mary's uncle. Mme. La Rue has been trying to ensnare Phillip as a husband for her daughter, Zella, but Phillip is slow to advance. Mary and Phillip meet frequently on the beach, and Bob grows jealous of his rival. One day Mme. La Rue and Zella recognize Mary as she is conversing with Phillip—they also observe Bob's jealous conduct. Going to Bob they tell him that Phillip is engaged to Zella and is only trifling with Mary.

Bob in a rage assaults Phillip, and believes that the blow he strikes has killed the young author. Informing Mary of what he has done, the two friends agree that they had better leave the neighborhood and go at once to a distant town.

In the years that follow Bob devotes himself to the task of realizing, for Mary, her ambition to become a great dancer. At a society function where Mary is the attraction, Phillip (who has only been stunned by Bob's blow) sees the girl and recognizes his little friend from the fishing village.

The renewal of acquaintance discloses Mary's parentage, and the locket she wears proves that she should be occupying the place in her uncle's home that Mme. La Rue had, by fraud, established for Zella. The outcome gives Mary her proper place and we are left to believe that she and Phillip will find their way to happiness.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE—(Five parts—Jan. 22).—The cast: Lorenzo Todd (George Hernandez); Warren Todd (Val Paul); Dudley Phillips (Frederick Montague); Virginia Phillips (Myrtle Gonzalez); Oracle Jack (Jack Curtis); Wilkins (Edward J. Brady); Bobby (Francis Lee); Ira Todd (Harvey Griffith). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Lorenzo Todd, in his childhood had been strictly dealt with; in his youth the girl he loved deserted him, and, growing into manhood, he became morose and grouchy. The only ones he cared for were: Dudley Phillips, his youthful rival for the love of the girl Phillips married. Her daughter, Virginia, and his own son, Warren. Warren and Virginia were betrothed, and Warren was sowing his final "wild oats" before settling down and becoming a partner in his father's business.

Dudley objected to Warren's pranks, while Todd liked the idea of his boy displaying a little "ginger." Finally, Warren was sued by a chorus girl for breach of promise, and Dudley declared that he should never marry Virginia, while Todd declared he would not allow Warren to marry her.

When Warren told his father that he still intended to make Virginia his wife, or leave home forever, Todd told him to go and when he left Todd's soul shrivelled even smaller, and he became more of a grouch than ever, until his heart was actually affected, and the doctor ordered him to go to Arizona.

While snow-bound in a trapper's cabin at Christmas a little boy makes him rejoice in the realization of God's great works, and touches the spring that opens his shrivelled soul.

Fate restores Warren to his father, and Dudley, having heard of Todd's predicament, takes Dorothy with him; there is a general reunion. Warren thoroughly cured of his wildness, completes the pact that he and Virginia had made; and the boy, who had been the cause of Todd's rejuvenation, starts life as a millionaire.

THE BONDAGE OF FEAR—(Peerless—Five parts—Jan. 22). Vesta Wheatley (Ethel Clayton); Dr. Jason Wheatley (Edward Kimball); Dick Mortimer (John Bowers); John Randolph (Rockliffe Fellowes); Skinny (Arthur Ashley); Mandy Lee (Frances Miller); Rastus (William Nash); Jim, Skinny's pal (George Morgan); Maisie (Elsa Bambrick). Directed by Travers Vale.

Vesta Wheatley and Dick Mortimer have been friends from childhood, but when he declares his love and asks her to marry him, she tells him their friendship is too pleasant to spoil it by love-making. John Randolph, a wealthy city man, is attracted to Vesta and a romance develops which culminates in a quiet wedding. Although Vesta is happy she enjoys tasting of worldly pleasures heretofore unknown to her. However, after a short fling she returns to her husband with increased love and respect.

Unable to stand village life, after Vesta's marriage, Dick comes to the city. He and Vesta meet by chance and he avails himself of her invitation to call. John, returning home unexpectedly, is surprised to find Dick talking to his wife; he recalls a scene in the country before his marriage, when he saw Dick making love to Vesta. However, he hides his suspicions and he and his wife go to their country lodge.

Beset by thoughts of Vesta, Dick follows and during her husband's absence, enters the lodge. Vesta resents his declaration of love, and hearing a noise on the outside, begs him to leave before her husband returns. The door is burst open and Skinny, a gangster, enters. In the struggle that ensues Dick is killed by Skinny. Vesta grabs the pistol and holding Skinny at bay, prepares to call the police, but Skinny tells her that she had better think before phoning, as the news will create a scandal. Cowed by his threats, Vesta is compelled to watch in silence as he drags Dick's lifeless body away.

Although her husband suspects nothing, Vesta is haunted with memories of Dick's murder, and Skinny, by frequent blackmail, helps keep alive the memory. At last she feels that she can bear it no longer and when Skinny comes with a demand for an enormous sum, she seizes a pistol and kills him. She then phones to the police, telling them she is alone in the house and hears a burglar entering—there is a pistol in her husband's room. The burglar is approaching—what shall she do? The officer tells her to hold the burglar off until help comes—with the receiver down, she fires a shot into the air. When the officers arrive they pronounce the killing is self-defence, and Vesta is happy with her husband, knowing that her tormentor is out of the way.

The fathers confer and a scheme is hatched. Harry tells Neal he must marry and settle down or leave the paternal roof. The butler tells him of a place where a chauffeur is needed.

It happens to be George's livery that Neal dons, but he does not know it. Mutual interest soon springs up between Betty and her handsome chauffeur. This is bitterly opposed by George, and he hires a detective to watch them. The obstacles only ripen their love and they elope, furiously pursued by the parents, who remain a safe distance behind, enjoying the joke. Jack Merry arrives to purchase cotton from Colonel Silverthorne, a Southern gentleman of the old school, who looks after his dead brother's estate, for his niece and nephew, Juliet and Lee.

Col. Silverthorne tells Merry that years ago his brother chastised a field hand named Judas, and that little Selma disappeared. Her mother died of grief, while her father had not been seen since, on one occasion, he rowed to a houseboat, and was supposed to have been murdered; and that according to his will, the entire estate was to go to his missing daughter Selma if found within twenty years. If not, the estate was to be divided between Juliet and Lee.

That night Judas demands money from Lee on penalty of disclosing the whereabouts of Selma. In the meantime, Merry meets Patches and kisses her hand, exclaiming "May the Princess of Patches have a happy reign." He leaves with Col. Silverthorne, the money for the cotton, and Lee steals it. Lee claims that Waggles, a tramp friend of Patches, is the thief, but Patches believes Judas has the money and he is captured with part of it in his possession. Col. Silverthorne, despite the protests of Juliet and Lee, invites Patches to become one of the family.

Years pass. Patches returns from a fashionable school and again meets Merry Judas, who has escaped from prison, also returns, as does Waggles the tramp. Waggles asks Lee where he can find the "Princess of Patches," as he wishes to return a locket which she lost. Lee recognizes the locket as the one proving the identity of Selma, and upon his promise to deliver it to Patches, Waggles surrenders it. This is the locket Judas gave to Liza, and which Patches afterwards secured.

Patches, among the daisies, plucks the petals and murmurs "He loves me, he loves me not." "He loves you dearly," exclaims Jack Merry behind her, as he takes her in his arms. Lee is dumfounded to see Judas, who tells him unless he helps to keep him out of jail, he will produce proofs that Patches is Selma Silverthorne. Lee gives money to Judas and tells Juliet what he has learned; she tells him he must marry Patches.

Waggles overhears Judas and Lee and informs Patches. At midnight they secrete themselves on the houseboat and hear Judas tell Lee that he stole Selma, and that the baby clothes he produces are proofs of her identity. The money Lee offers Judas is not satisfactory, and as the two fight, Waggles secures the proofs. They discover the loss, and suspecting someone else is on the boat, light the fuse connected with a box of gunpowder. Lee springs overboard, and Patches confronts Judas, exclaiming: "I know everything and you shall be punished." Judas overpowers the girl and Waggles, binds them, and swims ashore. Patches finally frees herself and releases Waggles. They spring into the water just as the explosion demolishes the houseboat.

On reaching the shore, Waggles overpowers Judas, who confesses Patches is the real heiress; and repeats the confession to Colonel Silverthorne a few minutes before Lee and Juliet would have come into possession of the property. Lee, implicated by Judas, disappears and Patches is happy in the love of Jack Merry.

CLUNE FILM MFG. CO.

THE EYES OF THE WORLD (Ten Parts—January).—The cast: Act I—Aaron King, Sr. (William Machin); Mary Gibson (Katherine Miller); Conrad LaGrange (Monroe Salisbury); Edward Taine (Jack McDonald); James Rutlidge, Sr. (Edward Peil); John Willard (Arthur Tavares); Myra Willard (Lurline Lyons); Dr. George, King family doctor (Robert Dunbar); Mrs. Rutlidge (Violet Reed); Brian Oakley (Fred Burns); Will Andres (Robert Burns); Mrs. Andres (Mary Burns).

Act II.—Aaron King, Jr., Art (Jack Livingston); Sybil Andres, Nature, (Jane Novak); Edward Taine, Materialism (Jack McDonald); Mrs. Taine, The Age (Kathleen Kirkham); James Rutlidge, Jr., Sensuality (Edward Peil); Conrad LaGrange, Civilization (Monroe Salisbury); Myra Willard, Symbol (Lurline Lyons); John Willard, the convict (Arthur Tavares); Louise Taine (Beatrice Burnham).

PROLOGUE.—Conrad LaGrange proposes marriage to Mary Gibson. She refuses him, and marries Aaron King. A son, Aaron King, Jr., is born to them. John Willard, who does not approve of the intimacy between his sister, Myra, and James Rutlidge, provokes a quarrel with Rutlidge. Thinking he has killed him, Willard goes West. A baby is born to Myra, who does not know that Rutlidge has a wife. Mrs. Rutlidge learns of it. Crazed with jealousy, she seeks Myra, throws acid in her face, marring her for life; then commits suicide.

With Myra's permission, Rutlidge takes the baby to raise with his son, James Rutlidge, Jr., and shares his wealth equally between them. Myra refuses his offers of money, and writes to John Willard, her brother, asking for help. In California, he holds up a mail stage to get money for her fare west. Willard is arrested. Myra, ignorant of this, goes to Graymont, Cal. Not finding her brother, she wanders into the mountains and to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Andres, who take her in. She is like a mother to Sybil, Andres' only child.

Years pass. Aaron King, in financial difficulties and disgrace, dies. LaGrange, who has prospered, pays some of Mrs. King's debts and again asks her to marry him. She refuses, saying her life belongs to her boy. Mrs. King, sacrifices all to keep Aaron, her son, now a young man, in a Paris art school. Graduating with high honors, he receives word that his mother is ill, and rushes home in time to see her die.

THE STORY.—(Twenty-five years have elapsed.) Aaron King, Jr., leaves for the West. On the same train are Gertrude Taine; her husband, Edward Taine, many years her senior, a wreck; and Louise Taine, stepdaughter of Mrs. Taine. They are met by James Rutlidge, Jr. Myra, who now lives in Fairlands, recognizes Mrs. Taine and Rutlidge. King becomes acquainted with LaGrange. Friendship springs up between the pair.

King is commissioned to paint Mrs. Taine's portrait. He and LaGrange take a cottage next to Sybil and Myra. Rutlidge annoys Sybil with his attentions. King and LaGrange meet Sybil. Mrs. Taine becomes infatuated with King. John Willard (now known as John Marston) escapes from prison. He meets Rutlidge, who befriends him and hides him in a mountain cabin.

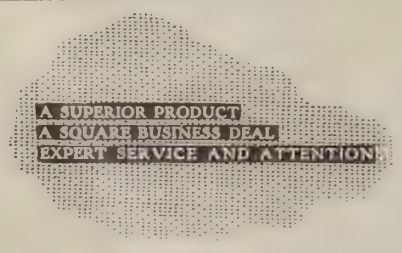
Mrs. Taine is pleased with the portrait. As King contrasts Sybil with Mrs. Taine, he sees the latter as a designing soul in a beautiful body. Refusing to let her have the portrait, he asks her to pose again. Thinking she has infatuated King, she consents. He also paints Sybil's portrait. Mrs. Taine gives a reception in honor of King and LaGrange. She tries to influence King by causing Sybil to play her violin as one of the paid performers. Mr. Taine collapses in the midst of a speech and is carried off, dying.

Mrs. Taine, visiting King's studio, finds him absent. Sybil comes in. Mrs. Taine, bringing in the fact that Sybil was up in the mountains with Myra while LaGrange and King were on a camping trip in the mountains, convinces Sybil that the world thinks she is the artist's mistress. Sybil stops long enough to write a note for Myra, and then rides away. Myra tells King of Sybil's disappearance. He follows her, and enlists the aid of Brian Oakley, the forest ranger. Rutlidge learns of Sybil's departure. By threatening Marston with exposure, he forces him to kidnap Sybil. Marston takes her to a cabin. Oakley, King and a posse of men search the mountains for her.

King goes to Granite Peak, but Rutlidge gets there first. Rutlidge makes the proposition that they throw down their guns and fight it out. As Rutlidge is about to throw King over the cliff, Marston appears with Sybil, who begs him to save King. He shoots Rutlidge, who topples over the cliff. Then Marston disappears. King and Sybil go back to town. Sybil has discovered that she loves King and that he loves her.

Mrs. Taine goes to the studio. She sees herself on the canvas as King sees her, and flies into a rage. She threatens to blast King's career and to ruin Sybil's reputation. LaGrange, overhearing, brings Myra in and has her tell her story. As Mrs. Taine listens, she bares her shoulder, showing a scar which identifies her as Myra's daughter.

LaGrange threatens if she ever speaks ill of Sybil or King to publish the story broadcast Mrs. Taine retreats. Later, Sybil, learning from LaGrange that King has completed his masterpiece, goes to the studio. King takes her in his arms.



Our Policy is a Clean Cut One!

We are giving serious thought and careful consideration to the business of selling Motion Picture Projection Screens. Ours is not a business gone into for a day in the hope of making tremendous profits quickly. We are dealing with our customers in much the same way that the corner grocer deals with patrons he hopes to keep for years.

We are satisfied that ours is "A Superior Product." We know that there are many other projection screens made and that for some of them the most extravagant claims are made. We know, too, however, that the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN was well out in front when it was first offered to the trade and has been kept there ever since.

We promise "A Square Business Deal"—and what we have done for others in the past is the best guarantee of the kind of treatment you will receive.

"Expert Service and Attention" is important in our stock in trade. RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS are made by men who have made a careful study of their business. And we're not through with you when we have collected your money. You buy screen satisfaction and we make it our business to see that you get it.

Opportunity Knocking at Your Door Now!!!

One of President Wilson's strongest policies has been the increasing of our export trade.

South American republics have been completely cut off from their former sources of supply; due to the great European conflict. These Latin-American people are continually appealing to these United States for the fulfilment of their needs.

Are you availing yourself of this wonderful chance to erect a permanent, profitable export trade?

CINE MUNDIAL, the Spanish Edition of the Moving Picture World, is your ever ready ally in breaking into this vast market.

CINE MUNDIAL is reaching directly over 5000 of your prospective customers in the Latin-American countries every month.

CINE MUNDIAL is one year old in January. It has done a good service to a few of the live American concerns, who have had an "eye out" for this new business.

CINE MUNDIAL is bound to grow because it is founded on a rock bottom basis.

CINE MUNDIAL should be carrying your message each month to these prospective buyers. The cost is small. The results would be gratifying.

Why not take time by the forelock and obtain the information necessary NOW?

Address Spanish Department, Chalmers Publishing Co., 17 Madison Ave., New York City.

It's your business duty to yourself, and to your customer, to secure positive prints clear, clean and brilliant, showing on the screen all that is good in the negative.

We do this properly, and, while our price may be a bit higher than for ordinary work, our quality is decidedly higher, and when you do business with us you are sure and safe and satisfied.

Usually, where low price is the bait, quality is a secondary consideration. With us it's quality first, last and all the time—properly priced of course.

We will gladly send studio-laboratory description and price schedule at your request.

Then follows the receiving depot. This is a structure measuring 48 by 50 feet and is designed for the invoicing of all goods delivered for any of the departments. Several times every day automobile trucks drive up to this depot and there deposit consignments of merchandise, which, after being [illegible] matically checked [illegible] custody of their respective departments.

A short distance from the receiving depot is the carpenter shop. This measures 50 by 190 feet and, when in operation, it provides one of the most awe-inspiring sights of the place. Humming with activity from sunrise to sundown, its giant machine saws and long work-benches, presided over by master-carpenters, constantly are turning out the finished settings daily required on the stages. In a loft at one end of the building are employed a staff of wood-carvers, whose rare skill is responsible for the pretentious decorative effects in many of the Ince settings.

The last in the line of buildings fringing the eastern boundary of the plant is the garage. This measures 50 by 90 feet and houses the trucks and "location" automobiles used daily by the company. This is fitted with all devices necessary for a machine shop, where almost every "ailment" of an automobile or truck may be remedied. On the outside of the building is a 500-gallon underground tank for gasoline equipped with Bowser automatic measuring pump, similar to those used at all gasoline stations. The number of cars needed by the company require of expert mechanics for their proper care. [illegible] dirty automo[illegible] included in the equip-

Just beyond the film vault is the varied arts building. This is two stories in height and measures 31 by 90 feet. On the ground floor are located two projecting rooms and a department wherein the tinting of the sample positive is done. In this are installed three 6A and one 6B Power's Cameragraphs, supplied to Mr. Ince by the Pacific Amusement Company, who have been handling these machines for a considerable time. The upper floor is devoted to the cutting and assembling rooms, sub-title art work rooms and "still" department, and on the roof is a thoroughly-equipped portrait gallery for publicity purposes.

Even greater pains have been taken to secure absolute fire protection for this building. There are five rooms for film cutting. Each is fitted with fire shutters furnished by the Variety Manufacturing Company, of Chicago. In case of fire, a shutter drops on both sides of the door, and over the windows. At the same time a ventilating flue is opened. Such equipment assures that in case fire in one cutting room starts, no other portion of the building will be injured in the least. The Varied Arts building is also fitted with water pipes extending on all sides which gives the same protection as for the film vault.

Next, in alignment with the Varied Arts building, is the commissary. This measures 100 by 60 feet and is capable of accommodating four hundred persons at a sitting. The food is prepared by culinary experts and served at cost to the employes. In a corner of this structure is a barber-shop and manicure-parlor for the convenience of the players. It has an elegant soda-fountain and well-equipped cigar-stand.

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

FEBRUARY 3, 1917

CHARLOTTE WALKER IN "PARDNERS," BIG REX BEACH DRAMA

AS ITS feature release for the week of January 29, the Mutual Film Corporation will present Charlotte Walker, talented wife of Eugene Walker, the famous playwright, in a tremendously powerful Rex Beach drama of the North West, entitled "Pardners." Charlotte Walker has firmly established herself with the playgoing public as a star of the first magnitude. She brings both beauty and brains into her work and a finished character portrayal results, no matter what the role she assumes.

Story of North West.

"Pardners" is one of Rex Beach's most vivid and colorful stories. Its scenes are laid in the far North West. In adapting the story to films the utmost care has been taken to preserve the proper "atmosphere" and locale. Props, scenery and stage settings are all in keeping with the region they represent. The costuming is exact and accurate. Special pains were taken in the selection of proper "types" for even the most minor roles. Miss Walker has been surrounded by a cast of real note.

Tremendous Box-Office Possibilities.

Exhibitors will quickly realize the tremendous box-office possibilities in "Pardners." They will instantly recall such Rex Beach film successes as "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Barrier" and others. All were adapted from Rex Beach novels. There is something about this writer's work that particularly fits it for the screen. His following among the American public is tremendous. A Rex Beach story will bring to the theatre hundreds who never otherwise attend. Any exhibitor can capitalize this interest in Rex Beach and his works by booking "Pardners." It can conscientiously be announced as a banner attraction. Bookings can be made at any Mutual Film Exchange.

Beautiful Scenery In "Lumberlands"

No chapterplay that has ever been released has evoked one-half the comment that is resulting from the beautiful scenery that forms the background for the latest Mutual photo-novel, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." Almost daily the Mutual office receives letters from exhibitors voicing their delight over this feature of the production. The current release of this chapterplay is particularly notable for its wonderful mountain views.

FORTHCOMING MUTUAL PHOTOPLAYS ILLUSTRATE "BIG STARS ONLY" POLICY

Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neil, Gail Kane, Edna Goodrich, Marie Cahill, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, Charlie Chaplin and William Russell Are Among Those Featured

THE list of forthcoming Mutual Photoplays clearly illustrates the Mutual Film Corporation's 1917 policy of "Big Stars Only." In this list the exhibitor will find such noted players as Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neil, Gail Kane, Edna Goodrich, Marie Cahill, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, Charlie Chaplin and William Russell. All of these headliners are established favorites. The public has already shown its interest in them.

The plays are the works of America's foremost authors. Marjorie Rambeau, for instance, will first appear in "The Greater Woman," an adaptation of Algernon Boyesen's successful play. Her second vehicle is "Motherhood," by the well-known author, Frederick Arnold Kummer, who wrote "The Brute," "The Ivory Snuff Box," "A Lost Paradise," "Mr. Buttles," "A Daughter of Eve," "The Painted Woman" and others. Nance O'Neil's first Mutual Photoplay is "Mrs. Balfame," prepared from Gertrude Atherton's famous novel of the same title. The Atherton novels are read by millions, and each new work is looked forward to with eagerness. Gail Kane and Edna Goodrich are each being equipped with vehicles worthy of their talent. No expense is being spared in securing the most notable works of the world's masters of literature. Marie Cahill, who is to appear in a series of two-reel Cahill-Mutual Comedies, offers as her first effort "Flirting With Romance," a story from the pen of a celebrated humorist. The other stories of the series will be provided by equally notable authors. Mary Miles Minter-Mutual Photoplays are specially prepared with a view to exploiting Miss Minter's unusual traits, and future offerings will be even more notable than those already released. Her next appearance will be in "The Gentle Intruder." "The Devil's Assistant," the next Margarite Fischer photoplay, is a powerfully impressive bit of screen literature that points a moral. It presents Miss Fischer at her very best. Nell Shipman, author of books, plays and scenarios by the score, wrote "My Fighting Gentleman," which is the title of the next William Russell-Mutual Photoplay, now in course of production at the American studios in Santa Barbara, California.

Such an array of stars and authors is unusual to say the least. However Mutual is resolved to offer its patrons nothing but the best. It aims during 1917 to offer only the world's greatest stars in the world's greatest plays. The coming months will see the realization in the fullest sense of its announced policy of "Big Stars Only." Bookings on the Mutual Photoplays can be made now at any of the Mutual Exchanges.

ENLIGHTMENT PHOTOPLAY OFFERS THE SUPREME DRAMATIC SPECTACLE

This is one of the most vivid and appealing lessons ever shown.

Mark this picture as a feature of worth for any house.

Exhibitors Trade Review

It is uncommonly well acted, not a single member of the company being miscast. There are several plots, and counterplots of a delicate family nature, all of them handled with tact, and a nicety that should not offend any but an uncompromisingly prudish individual. It is in proper style for sensational exploitation.

JOLO in Variety.

In "Enlighten Thy Daughter" Ivan Abramson again demonstrates his keen sense of dramatic values.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" resolves itself into a powerful object lesson on the object indicated by the title.

The story of "Enlighten Thy Daughter" moves forward with a sweep that is irresistible.

FEATURING

PRODUCED BY LOIS WEBER

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

START A BLUEBIRD NIGHT

Successful idea now being used by BLUEBIRD Exhibitors with splendid results.

BLUEBIRD NIGHT is the latest idea conceived by one of the many successful BLUEBIRD Exhibitors. It's an idea that is simple of establishment and productive of exceptional results when used in connection with BLUEBIRD Plays.

At least one night each week is set aside for the exhibition of a BLUEBIRD Play. The exhibitor announces this particular night, advertises it on slides, in programs, and in the newspapers.

Once this fact is registered, BLUEBIRD nights will prove the big nights, because the public will know they are to see the finest pictures of the week. Thus, you practically guarantee yourself ONE SURE NIGHT of capacity every time that you show a BLUEBIRD.

We recommend this splendid plan to you. TRY IT beginning with your next release. Announce it, advertise it and keep hammering on it till EVERYBODY in your community knows which night is BLUEBIRD NIGHT in your Theatre.

If you are not showing BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS you can make a magnificent introduction to your House by booking either "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M." produced by LOIS WEBER, or "GOD'S CRUCIBLE." These are truly wonderful productions. The former with typical LOIS WEBER cast, stars and direction and the latter with the Grand Canyon as a background. Two that your public will pronounce the finest pictures ever screened.

It will mark your House as THE House for exceptional pictures. Watch for the two coming BLUEBIRDS—"The Saintly Sinners" and "The Boy Girl" featuring Violet Mersereau. Book thru your local BLUEBIRD EXCHANGE or thru—

Pathe Exchange,

Gentlemen:-

Accept my hearty congratulations on the reception that your serial "PEARL OF THE ARMY" is securing at this theatre. It is one continuous round of applause from the audience from start to finish, showing conclusively that the star, MISS PEARL WHITE is certainly a favorite.

In my theatrical experience in different sections of the United States I assure you that I have never seen or heard such demonstrations from an audience.

The week that I opened with the first chapter of this serial I was running a very good feature, but the audience showed very plainly that it was the serial that was the interesting picture and not the feature.

Wishing you the well merited success that you deserve with this serial and with best wishes for the coming year,

Very truly yours

Lessee & Genl Manager

Pearl White will draw more people into your theatre than any other star, man or woman. Thousands of exhibitors say so. When the public see her name in front of the theatre they flock in.

BATTLE ALONG NEW LINES

From Exhibitor's Trade Review
of January 20th

There isn't anything new about producers making cleaner pictures. Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas, produced strong, viril, thrilling and even emotional pictures, but they were always in good taste. This fact was advertised week after week, to 55,000,000 people, over a year ago, in the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Ladies' World, Woman's Home Companion, and American Sunday Monthly Magazine, Every Week, American Club Woman, and General Federation of Women's Clubs Magazines.

As many more people will be looking for Paramount Pictures when they read about them in the new campaign beginning in an early issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Note the advertisements herewith and also the opposite page.

Gentlemen:

Subject: SMALL TOWN ACCOUNTS.

I claim the record for the United States. I have just closed a contract today with John J. Motl of Mullen, Nebraska. The town of Mullen is so small that it does not even appear in the Postal guide which I have been using as a basis of figuring populations. I finally found the town listed on Rand-McNally's map as having a population of 105 people. To make it still more singular Mr. Motl will use each picture two days.

How is that for a record? I would like to know to satisfy my own curiosity.

Yours truly,

Gentlemen:—

Relative to what success we have had with your film "GERMANY AND ITS ARMIES OF TO-DAY," I beg to advise that last week's business broke all records in the history of the Strand Theatre, with the exception of one week last year, the attraction that week being the Lasky production of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

The picture of "GERMANY AND ITS ARMIES OF TO-DAY" will unquestionably arouse tremendous interest throughout the country, and considering the success which it has met with here at the Strand Theatre, it ought to prove to be a bonanza for all exhibitors. We are now in the third week with the installment of "GENERAL VON MACKENSEN AND HIS ARMIES IN ROUMANIA."

What the Great Critics Think of Goldwyn Stars and Plans

ANNOUNCEMENT of Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl, and Mae Marsh as Goldwyn stars resulted in an amount of newspaper praise unique in motion picture history.

THESE voluntary comments by the greatest critics on powerful newspapers should convince all exhibitors in advance of the tremendous drawing power our stars and productions will have:

CHICAGO JOURNAL: "In Maxine Elliott Goldwyn has discovered a Goldmine."

NEW YORK TIMES: "Mae Marsh is the Maude Adams of the screen."

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: "There is only one Mae Marsh."

CHICAGO AMERICAN: "Jane Cowl is our greatest dramatic actress."

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "We welcome Goldwyn to filmland. Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn and Arthur Hopkins will greatly advance motion pictures."

INDIANAPOLIS STAR: "Goldwyn Pictures Corporation . . . the film Company with brains."

PHILADELPHIA LEDGER: "Goldwyn combines an exceptional group of stars and managers."

THE PITTSBURG DISPATCH: "Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Mae Marsh. . . . Evidently Goldwyn has 'gone out for bear.'"

THE SEATTLE TIMES: "Goldwyn's announcements seem to forecast the greatest stars ever assembled under one management."

The novelty of this announcement lies in the fact that many great authorities say about our organization and its stars the things that, otherwise, we might have to say about ourselves.

THE SERIAL SUPREME

Supreme in every respect is Gloria's Romance — the serial extraordinary. The star is supreme above all others. The story is unique. The direction is that of a master. The stage settings and costuming are elaborate. The success of the film has been extraordinary. Never before was there a picture attempted on which so much thought, care and money were expended.

Gloria's Romance is notable for

1st. Its star—radiantly beautiful Billie Burke—engaged at a salary of $4,000 per week to play "Gloria." A salary far in excess of that ever paid any other star of either the stage or screen.

2nd. Its author—Rupert Hughes—internationally famous as a novelist—dramatist of note, and ranked as one of America's foremost literary celebrities.

3rd. Its producer—George Kleine—the man who gave the world such masterpieces as "Quo Vadis," "Last Days of Pompeii" and others too numerous to mention.

Wherever Gloria's Romance has played it has been successful. It has packed theatres! As a fashion exposition it is unrivalled. Scores of thousands of dollars' worth of Lucile, Henri Bendel and Balcom frocks are worn by Miss Burke. Palm Beach, Florida, and Riverside Drive, New York are the location of most of the scenes. Gloria's Romance is conceded to be the serial supreme. Don't be satisfied with anything short of the best. Book Gloria's Romance NOW. Pack YOUR Theatre by presenting the serial supreme.

Facts and Comments

WE ARE much mistaken if the "signs of the times" do not point to a better understanding and greater co-operation between manufacturer, exchangeman and exhibitor in the near future. This simply has got to come. The present more or less chaotic condition can only spell ruin for all concerned. The present "get the most out of it for ourselves" policy of the exchanges, advance deposits and all such unbusinesslike ideas will soon go and instead let us hope will come the same straight, square, open and shut methods on which business in all lines is founded and with the same co-operation between manufacturer, middleman and retailer that looks for the best results for all.

IN PRODUCING circles the pot is again boiling. Popular players, whose reputations have been established by long and favorable connections, have broken away from their moorings and entered the "open market" of competition for their services for the future. Fabulous figures said to have been offered for the services of these popular ones are being bandied about, tossing from tongue to tongue; new companies are being formed to produce and exploit the efforts of this one or that one until ye patient scribe is fairly dizzy with the contemplation thereof and wonders how so much money got away from the munitions makers.

BUT with all this munificent largess bestowed upon the popular motion picture star, will his popularity be increased or maintained? Plainly his unrest is born of a perfectly natural and intensely human desire to get his share while the getting is good, and no truly human being finds the least fault with him for that attitude. Nevertheless he is at fault in his desire to get rich quick. Up to now all motion picture stars have won their popularity because they were able to reach the plain people—the masses—the patrons of the five and ten cent picture show. Higher salaries to stars mean higher prices for admissions and a consequent narrowing down of the star's audience and his popularity to the vanishing point. Will it pay?

NOTHING goes in this age like a big noise. Billy Sunday can get them out, and so can the big sensational film provided it's bad enough to start the band of wind instruments going. What the moving picture business most needs is something that will make a big caliope holler whenever and just as soon as any particularly fine picture comes to town. They do start boosting clubs; but, then—well, what can you do? There's no scandal in it. Few people want to work for nothing, and where there's no scandal there's no limelight and no advantage. But isn't it strange how the censors do love to boost the lurid film.

PUTTING the other fellow out of business as the only road to success may be necessary when he comes into territory already fully supplied. It is often, however, the excuse of those who do not have the ability to meet honest and fair competition in neighborhoods fully able to support two enterprises under efficient management.

THE fallacy of censorship is never better demonstrated than in comparison of the work of a fairly large and representative board with that of a board composed of one or two individuals. A case in point happened in Birmingham, Alabama, recently when a newly appointed Commissioner of Public Safety was overruled four to one on a decision after an appeal by a local exhibitor and a re-showing of the film to all five commissioners at the same time.

The Secret of Big Profits

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE idea of making money, conceded to be the first appeal of any business, is not at all remarkable. It is simply the lure which leads men into production and exhibition. The whole thing looks so bewilderingly easy to those outside of the game that they plunge in without personal qualification for what they are about to do and very little knowledge of the difficulties to be encountered. "Others are coining money at it—why cannot I?" is the idea that starts a man, and he can win out if he happens to follow, from instinct, or from observation, the example of successful men in nearly all other lines of achievement.

The reason that most men stand still in either production or exhibition, almost perpetually on the edge of failure, is because they are at a standstill themselves. Many are misled by a few waves of good luck at the start into believing that the tide always flows one way. Others do not give consideration to the fact that moving pictures are in a state of evolution, of constant change and growth, in which producers and exhibitors alike must participate in order to keep up with the times.

It is one of the functions of this paper to keep its readers alive to progress. Those who read and observe, can count themselves among the big possible winners of the future. Out of the varied assortment of matter presented every week, much of it bearing directly and truthfully on what is going on now, some of it indicating future possibilities, the live showman or the live manufacturer can extract enough information to form an abstract working principle for future guidance irrespective of the past, what is known as an ideal.

The idea of making money represents simply an inspiration. It is the right ideal which gets results. Any man can start with the idea. Thereafter he must bend his attention to every sincere contribution from thinkers on the subject, hold himself open to conviction, and gradually build a fine conception of his own as to some definite means of getting what he is after. The right ideal is not a visionary thing alone—it is reached through observation, experience and good judgment. The word "vision" has had a little evolution of its own. It used to be associated with what was purely fanciful and more or less impracticable, but today's man of vision is one who can see beyond his immediate surroundings.

The head of a great steel company opened his heart the other night in addressing a famous New York club and revealed himself, as have other multi-millionaires before him, as a man who combined in himself the practical and that creative imagination which reaches out into comprehension of the future and plans accordingly. Balancing that prudence which keeps an ordinary man from acting contrary to what he thinks he knows, this man of extraordinary success has a vision which looks carefully forward to the consequences of present situations. He states positively that success in every great line of business is founded on right ideals.

It was up to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD at one time to stand for a right ideal. Many other papers, reasoning only from the immediate, without vision of future consequences, let their columns be filled with unpaid-for publicity by producers who managed in this way to get just so much more advertising irrespective of product quality. To make the reading matter a source of dependable information was our ideal, with a result that we distanced all competitors.

There is not the slightest doubt that circumstances play a part in every man's success or failure. Conceding that good or bad luck may affect him one way or the other, there are ways of making the most of good chances and of overcoming those in reverse. It is to help men in this line of business, never to hurt them, that our own ideal is followed as closely as possible. What we are striving for is the greatest good for the greatest number. In line with that policy, even when caustic is applied to sore places in order to more quickly heal them, right ideals can be formed in every department and avenue of the trade.

Criticism in this department of the paper is necessarily removed from the direct and the personal. It can only be general, to apply where needed. Perhaps there are serious faults of exhibition to be corrected, but it is not always an easy matter to get at the exact truth in faulty methods. Broadly speaking, for instance, there is a painful lack of variety in the average program shown at the little theaters, though the audience is one of varied tastes. Wherever I have talked with people who are really fond of moving pictures, who give their unqualified support to the shows, I hear the claim that there is too much sameness of program.

I have not found a single person who does not enjoy stories of the wonders of nature and those which attractively present the achievements of science. The love story stands first, but the fascination of romance can be made to delightfully veil the presentation of fact. All the world loves the love story, but those of information and purpose rest and charm an audience and often serve as a stimulating relief. The desire to see something that is new and strange is not confined to the young in years. There is a vast amount of curiosity in those young of mind.

In the public libraries books of science are beginning to rival those of fiction in popularity. That is only a straw to show which way the wind is blowing, but consider the tremendous popularity of science periodicals with young and old. The success of moving pictures in a general way depends largely upon how closely what is shown on the screen fits the public demand—why not study the character of that demand in other methods of expression, where the audience can choose what it likes, or believes to be of value?

It pays for the exhibitor to constantly broaden his own vision, to consider the whole people, to gauge the tendency of their minds, to get at the drift of the times. The selection of a program, or of special releases, should not depend upon this or that minor consideration any more than the verdict of a judge on the bench, but upon intelligent grasp of two sides of a question. The ideal civil officer is the one who renders justice. The ideal exhibitor is the one who sincerely strives to do the right thing to all concerned.

The public is most deeply concerned, the happiness and safety of our whole people. To form an ideal of how that can be done is far from being an easy matter, but the exhibitor of right ideals will be prospering in this business when those who have no ideals are out of it for good. To drift along, without definite policy, means only mediocrity or eventual failure. The secret of lasting success lies beneath the surface—it is surely not that of killing the industry to get all the golden eggs at once. The secret of big profits in this business is to use infinite pains in selecting the finest possible means for the very best ends that can be conceived by the mind of man—to work with an ideal.

President Ochs vs. Universal Company

IN OUR mail of Friday, January 19, the Moving Picture World received a communication under date of January 18, from the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. This letter requested publication of an article which was inclosed and based this request on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States. The letter further requests our editorial support. The article in question begins with a protest against the proposed appointment of any member of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company on any committee entrusted with the task of fighting censorship. It then reprints and elaborates on an article published in the Universal house organ about Nov. 20, 1915.

Readers of the Moving Picture World will remember that we went into this very incident carefully at the time. See article on page 1918 of our issue of Dec. 11, 1915.

After a very careful consideration of the whole matter, we are satisfied that publication of this open letter and article would be of no benefit to the exhibitors' cause, or to the industry in general. We do feel that it would be a positive injury in that it would again help to place an old weapon in the hands of those who are fighting for censorship and legislative control of the industry. To simply print the few paragraphs of the article published in the Universal house organ of some time ago, which have already been garbled and used to suit their own ends by the enemies of the moving picture, cannot be, by any stretch of the imagination, beneficial to the cause of the exhibitors. We are frank to say that the resurrection of this rather antiquated incident at this particular time is somewhat out of place, and suggests ulterior purposes or motives.

In spite of all that has been said, or is likely to be said in this connection, no one knows better than the president and officers of the Exhibitors' League that the Moving Picture World is anxious to assist the cause of exhibitors in every way possible. Furthermore, this paper has always given the exhibitors as well as every other branch of the industry a "square deal" in its news columns despite repeated statements to the contrary. All our unbiased readers are well aware of this fact. We have never made any apology or excuses for productions of the Universal or of any company that are causing censorship agitation. Keep the pictures clean and keep them out of politics has been one of our slogans for years.

After reaching our decision that it could serve no good purpose to publish this open letter for the reasons stated above and because of many of the statements contained therein, we were more than confirmed in our feeling of an outside motive by the receipt of a statement from R. H. Cochrane, of the Universal Film Mfg. Company. We believe our readers will be fully able to judge of the merits or demerits of both sides of the case without further comment on our part. Mr. Cochrane's statement follows:

On Wednesday, January 17, Mr. Lee Ochs called at my office and solicited advertising from the Universal Film Mfg. Co. for the Exhibitors' Trade Review, in which Mr. Ochs has a proprietary interest.

After listening to all that Mr. Ochs had to say, I called his attention to the fact that he had not given me any reason why the Universal Company should advertise in his publication. I likewise called his attention to the fact that unless he wanted the Universal Company to pay his publication some money for either charity or blackmail, there was nothing for our company to gain by advertising in his columns. He denied that he wanted either charity or blackmail.

He then asked me if I did not believe in reciprocity to the extent of giving advertising to the Exhibitors' Trade Review (Mr. Ochs' paper) because exhibitors pay money to the Universal Company for film rental. I replied that every exhibitor who paid money to us got full value for it; and that whenever he did not get full value, he transferred his business to some of our competitors; that I would not buy advertising space on any but business grounds; and that if we could not hold the exhibitors' business on the merit of our film we surely would not try to hold it by advertising in Mr. Ochs' publication.

THIS WAS ON WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17.

On Thursday, January 18, Mr. Ochs wrote a scurrilous letter to various trade papers, making a bitter attack on the Universal Company as a whole and on the officers in particular.

From various sources the Universal Company has heard that if it did not support the Exhibitors' Trade Review, scores or even hundreds of exhibitors would cancel their orders with Universal exchanges. I have forgotten how many thousands of dollars per week was to be taken from us. This has been threatened ever since the Exhibitors' Trade Review (Mr. Ochs' paper) first entered the field of trade papers.

The Universal Company does not believe that the Exhibitors' Trade Review is owned by exhibitors. Neither does it believe that the exhibitors of this country would approve of the methods used by Mr. Ochs to compel the Universal, and other companies, to buy advertising space in his paper.

Mr. Ochs, however, endeavors in every way to make it appear that the exhibitors of the country either own his paper or are backing it. For example, the letter in which he attacks the Universal was written on stationery bearing the imprint of the Exhibitors' League of America, but was mailed in an envelope bearing the imprint of the Exhibitors' Trade Review.

In his letter he rakes up an editorial which was published in the Universal's own weekly publication a year or more ago. It was an article on smutty pictures and was a part of a series of articles, the intention of which was to bring forth from exhibitors a storm of protest against such pictures. It accomplished its end, but ever since then it has been used by pro-censors as an argument for censorship. To do this they resorted to the old trick of quoting only extracts from the series, instead of the whole. Before the articles were published in our house organ, we showed them in proof form to Mr. Stephen Bush, then employed on the Moving Picture World and now working for the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and explained the campaign to him. Mr. Bush instantly saw what the plan was and pronounced it a good thing. I feel confident that Mr. Bush will bear me out in this statement, regardless of the fact that he is interested in the Exhibitors' Trade Review at the present time.

Kindly remember Mr. Ochs' remarkable letter was written the day after the Universal refused to advertise in his paper.

The Universal's editorial, to which he takes such violent exception, was published something over a year ago. At that time, so far as I can recall, Mr. Ochs did not fly into a public fury over it and ask to have the Universal put out of business. Since then he has been elected president of the National League and has been enjoying that office for several months. But not until the day after the Universal finally refused to give him some advertising did he decide that we had insulted the exhibitors of America. On the day that he solicited advertising the Universal was all right in every respect, but over night we had become a menace to the whole industry!

With this issue, in response to repeated requests, the Moving Picture World returns to a policy of long ago in selling to its advertisers the available space on its front cover for advertising purposes.

Copy for the cover space, subject to certain restrictions which will be made known upon request, is being accepted and used in the order in which applications are received.

With these facts to judge by the Universal is more than willing to let the exhibitors and the trade in general judge the case and pass their verdict against Mr. Ochs and his methods or against the Universal as they see fit.

Perfect Organization—No Small Task

By Sam Spedon.

A GREAT printing press is made up of so many thousands of different units it is impossible to enumerate them. When it is set up in place in full working order it is apt to be spoken of as Smith's or Jones' press, although Smith or Jones may only be the capitalist or promoter who furnished or raised the money to place it on the market. The workmen whose brains and skill made it possible are never mentioned. Smith or Jones can arrogate to himself all the credit, and generally does.

This may be permissable in the case of an inanimate article of manufacture, but is not so in an organization of human beings.

We must not lose sight of the fact that an organization like the National Exhibitors' League and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are made up of many parts, or other bodies, who contribute to the perfection of the whole. To perfect an organization is no easy matter; all parts must harmonize with each other; no one or more parts can run counter to the other, and it requires a master mind or minds to keep the completed organization running smoothly to produce results. At the same time those minds cannot arrogate to themselves the credit of the whole; they must give each component part thereof credit as well as a voice in its success.

Every local league deserves as much credit for their part as the National League. Every branch of the motion picture industry is entitled to commendation for its part of the National Association, if each and every part works for perfect organization. We might call this "oiling the machinery."

In our analysis of organization the central body is representative of the whole and dependent upon the many branches of the industry for its name and its existence.

If our analysis is clear what is the conclusion? Simply a realization of the task that presents itself to those who have undertaken the organization of the motion picture industry and the necessity of the co-operation of every branch of it in its perfection.

The task may never be accomplished, but it is worth the effort. It will certainly lead to a better understanding of where we are at, and possibly to the organization of the different interests, centralized in a board of arbitration (call it what you may), presided over by a man of unbiased judicial mind, without commercial affiliation with, or financial interest in, the industry.

This would eliminate suspicion of politics and favoritism, which seem to be the obstruction to constructive organization.

To carry our conclusion further and applying it to the National Exhibitors' League, or any branch of it, the president of it should be an exhibitor only, without financial and salary interest in any other branch of the industry.

Any one to be a leader of men must be sincere in his purpose to serve those whom he represents, thinking only of how best he may best serve the whole, regardless of personal aggrandizement. His slogan should be every man for the whole organization and not "Every man for meself."

The failure of most organizations has been caused by the lack of sincerity and too much politics. To be successful we must practice the former and exclude the latter.

What State Censorship Would Cost

IF LEGISLATIVE investigators would like to know what burden of taxation is now placed upon the shoulders of the moving picture business and how it will figure up should all the proposed censorship laws be passed that have been proposed, the following bit of statistical information may enlighten them:

In 1915 the National Board reviewed 9,588 reels of film. Had the state censorship bills passed in the thirteen states in which they were introduced, the cost in fees alone to the producing companies would have amounted to $311,610 at the average rate of $2.50 per reel, the inspection fee indicated in the bills introduced.

In 1916 the National Board reviewed 9,180 reels. Had the state censorship bills passed in the eleven states in which they were introduced in the course of that vear, the cost in fees alone to the producing companies would have amounted to $252,450, based on the same average fee.

The total cost to the industry, had the state bills, introduced in these two years, passed, therefore, would have been $564,060.

The actual cost, 1916, in the four states where censorship laws exist, for fees alone, was $36,720.

In 1915 in the state of Pennsylvania the censorship expressing the opinion of one individual condemned 65 subjects and 169 reels. In 1916 the same Board condemned 148 subjects and 407 reels.

The earning capacity of the pictures condemned by this Board in 1916, based on an estimate of $10 per day each for 60 days, amounts to $88,800. This was the cost of the motion picture industry for the activities of one State Board in one state for one year.

Had the eleven bills introduced in 1916 become laws and the censors of these State Boards taken the same action as in the State of Pennsylvania, condemning the 407 reels, the cost to the motion picture industry at the same rate of earning capacity for these pictures would have been for the year $976,800.

This choice bit of information should arouse motion picture makers to the desirability of doing something definite to head off or kill any attempt to pass censorship legislation. At the same time it would be well for them to do all within their power to prevent the making of pictures calculated to stir the censor bug to activity.

NEWARK'S MAYOR TO LEAD GRAND MARCH.

Mayor Thomas L. Raymond, of Newark, N. J., and Miss Anita Stewart will lead the grand march at the Movie Ball to be held in Krueger Auditorium, Newark, on Thursday evening, Feb. 1. This is to be but one of a score of features. Many surprises will be sprung.

Entries in the contest for young women who are desirous of becoming motion picture actresses are pouring in daily and that many stars will be present is indicated by the acceptance of scores of invitations. As with other affairs of this kind, novel publicity stunts will be staged by various film manufacturers.

The First Infantry Band and Orchestra, of Newark, will furnish the music. Members of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League will act as hosts to those attending.

"WHAT BECOMES OF THE CHILDREN" COMPLETED.

Walter Shumway and his director, Walter Richard Stahl, have just returned to New York from Jacksonville, where they completed the feature production "What Becomes of the Children." They are now busy arranging for a trade showing of the feature, announcement of which will be made in next week's issue. The production deals with the divorce question and its effect upon the children whose homes are thus broken up. Messrs. Shumway and Stahl will be at the Knickerbocker theater until the above arrangements have been completed.

FILM SALESMEN TO DINE.

On February 17 the Film Salesmen's Association will give a dinner and vaudeville at Kean's Chop House, West 42d street, New York City. The price of each plate will be $5. Aaron Korn is chairman of the entertainment committee.

Legislative Investigators Get Busy

Senator Wheeler and His Committee Hear Testimony of Motion Picture Men.

THE committee appointed by the New York State Legislature, consisting of Senators Parsons, Walker and Yelverton, and Assemblymen Wheeler, Flamman, Marsh, Brereton and Schimmel, to ascertain whether the motion picture industry is a proper subject for a State tax, began their investigations at Murray Hill Hotel on Thursday morning, January 18.

Harvey D. Hinman is counsel for the committee. Assemblyman Wheeler, who is presiding, said the committee intended to be fair and to secure reliable facts and figures. William L. Seabury and J. Robert Rubin, counsel for the motion picture interests, protested that the inquiry was discriminatory, that it was for the purpose of finding out the profits, to tax them, and that a similar proceeding directed toward newspapers, magazines or groceries would be just as fair.

Mr. Seabury suggested to the committee that they permit two or three of the exhibitors, called as witnesses to give their explanations of the methods of running their business and then examine them afterwards. In this way the committee would become familiar with the general methods and terms employed. The same mode of procedure could be applied to the producers called as witnesses. This suggestion was adopted and Lee A. Ochs, president of the State and National Exhibitors' Leagues, was called as the first witness.

The points brought out by Mr. Ochs were these:

The exhibitor now pays the following taxes:

A city license tax of $100.

A Federal theater tax of between $25 and $100.

A realty tax of $1,375.

An incorporation tax of $40.

A sign tax of $15.70.

A personal property tax.

A Federal income tax.

Three of these taxes are imposed on the motion picture business. The result of such burdens is, he said, that where there were 1,089 theaters in New York City three years ago, now there are only 530, and within a year, he predicted, the number will be less than 400. Any more taxes on the business would make it impossible for most of the exhibitors to continue in the business.

Mr. Ochs was requested by the committee to furnish data as to expenses and receipts of different capacity houses and the general conditions governing those matters. This it was explained would give them a basis by which the committee could be governed.

Mr. Seabury made an addition to his first suggestion; that the committee might visit the different theaters in different localities and get a more practical idea of the governing conditions.

Lee Ochs should be complimented on the way in which he gave the committee their first lessons on the modus operadi of running a motion picture theater, the many difficulties involved and the business methods employed. His talk was well worth hearing.

On Friday, January 19, the second day of the hearing, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, who was called as the first witness yesterday, representing the producers, declared that the salaries of motion picture stars are increasing without limit or regulation until they threaten to crowd all the profit out of the films for anybody else.

Having heard the exhibitors, the inquiry took up the producing and distributing end of the industry. Mr. Sherrill's testimony was to the general effect that the profits of the motion picture business are grossly exaggerated. Mr. Sherrill said:

"The business is progressing toward perfection, but there is yet much to be done to make it steady and well paying."

He suggested that the enormous salaries paid to stars make the business at present unsteady, and in many cases unprofitable. He pointed to the constant decrease in the number of motion picture theaters, which he said was only partly explained by the development of large picture houses with elaborate programs driving out of business the smaller and less attractive houses.

Asked if he thought the motion picture industry could bear the burden of another tax the witness said:

"Any business ought to be taxed if it is justified, but I do not know that it is in the case of motion pictures."

The committee questioned Mr. Sherrill as to amount of salary he received as president, the cost of maintaining his offices and studios. The amount of studio payroll each week and the number of regular employees at his studios.

In conclusion he was requested to furnish the committee with a written general statement of the expenses of running the Frohman Corporation.

P. A. Powers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was the only other witness of the day. Mr. Powers declared that there was no danger of the motion picture industry forming a combination, although there has been rumors in that direction.

The cost of production of the motion picture film, according to Mr. Powers, has increased since 1909 from 50 cents a foot to more than $2.50. First as the cause of the increased cost of production Mr. Powers mentioned the high salaries paid to the screen favorites.

He was asked the cost of raw film, positive, negative, etc. This was for the instruction of the committee.

Mr. Powers was then asked to enumerate the largest producing companies who employ the high priced stars, so that the committee may summon the officers of these concerns. The committee will meet again on Wednesday, January 24, to continue the inquiry.

To Tax Excess Profits

Revenue Proposition Before House Ways and Means Committee May Touch Picture Men's Pockets.

THE new revenue bill soon to be reported to the House of Representatives by the Ways and Means Committee has one provision that will prove of interest to the motion picture industry. They have found it necessary to raise between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 to meet a deficit that will be present in the treasury at the end of the fiscal year. A number of plans were suggested, including the proposal that a tax of one cent a foot be levied against motion picture films, but this scheme was nipped in the bud and never got beyond the rumor stage, thanks to the friendly feeling of the members of the committee towards motion pictures, it is said.

It was thought that perhaps the old internal revenue law providing for a stamp tax on all telephone and telegraph messages, and on express and freight receipts and other documents would be re-enacted, but Congress does not want to play around with a number of different schedules, and at last centered upon an increase in the inheritance tax and what is known as an excess profits tax. It is the latter which will be of interest to the trade.

The House Ways and Means Committee proposes to enact legislation providing for a tax of eight per cent. against all net profits above eight per cent. derived from the businesses of corporations and copartnerships. This will rest largely with the producing companies, although there are many theaters throughout the country realizing more than eight per cent. upon their investments. The tax will work out something along this line. Take an organization having a capital of $100,000, upon which a net profit of $10,000, or ten per cent. is derived. Of this profit $8,000 would not be taxable, the taxpayer merely making returns on the $2,000 excess, or $160.

This is a tax that should not be overlooked. It is going to be charged against producing companies and theaters alike —wherever there is a corporation or copartnership making more than $5,000 per annum.

Revenue experts from the Treasury Department have been sent to the Capitol to work out the details under which this tax is to be administered, and it is expected that the bill will be before the House of Representatives about the middle of the week. A great deal of opposition is expected to crop up in the meantime, but it is pretty generally believed that the bill will be rushed through. This bill also provides for the issuances of several hundred million dollars worth of bonds to meet the enormous expenditures of the Government.

Photoplay League at Rialto

Small Attendance Fails to Dampen Ardor of More Serious Members—Manager Rothapfel Speaks His Mind

WHILE the inauguration of the Photoplay League took place several months back, and it has since that time been quietly endeavoring to shape itself into a solid and national organization, it has made no move of what might be termed public activity in New York until the morning of January 17. On this date S. L. Rothapfel with his usual progressive spirit threw open the doors of the Rialto theater to the Photoplay League and its friends, and gave of his hospitality and good cheer for the entertainment of a much smaller number of persons than was expected.

The meeting was called for 11 a. m., and the earlier moments were filled in with music from the big theater organ and from the Rialto quartette, after which Frank Lascelles, chairman of the occasion, explained the ideals and intentions of the Photoplay League. He stated that the League had since its inauguration sent representatives throughout the country for the purpose of sounding conditions in the various cities and communities, and that the proposal to establish branches of the League in these various cities had met with enthusiastic support. He stated further that it was the intention of the League to set aside three mornings of the week to view selected pictures which would be listed for recommendation throughout the country, and that it would then be the duty of the branch Leagues to see to it that sufficient calls be made for these particular pictures in a measure to repay the manufacturers for the trouble and expense which they had had in producing them. The Photoplay League hopes to be able to suggest to the manufacturers certain pictures that they would like to have produced, when their plan of development may have more nearly reached maturity. He spoke also of the large responsibilities of New York in the matter of the moving picture, and of its immeasurable influence over the millions of persons who attend the motion picture theaters in the United States every evening. Inasmuch as that ninety per cent. of the moving pictures sent out into the entire world are sent out from New York, are reviewed and censored in New York, we must look upon New York as the hub of the industry; it is therefore most fitting that New York should take the initiative in improving the moral tone of the moving picture output. Such was the gist of Mr. Lascelles' remarks, with an appeal to the public, as much of it as was represented, to give their support to the proposed uplift work of the Photoplay League.

Following Mr. Lascelles came A. J. Westermeyr, eloquently irate at the emptiness of protest which the emptiness of seats implied among a certain class of citizens loudest in their censure of the moving picture, and most boastful of what they would do to improve conditions, but who when the opportunity occurred for them to back up empty words with action failed to put in an appearance. And it may be said here that invitations to attend this meeting were sent out to some of New York's most prominent citizens. He referred to the moving picture as the most powerful educational factor known through all the ages. He stated that he had been in a position to study the moving picture from all angles, and was utterly impatient with the attacks made upon it. He quoted a certain newspaper man who had said that a newspaper was always a little ahead of the people who read it, following it with the remark "so is the moving picture always a little ahead of the people who view it." The urgent necessity, according to Mr. Westermeyr, is the crystallization of public opinion. This can never come to pass so long as we are satisfied merely to talk the matter over at our firesides. We must get out and talk the matter over where we can be heard, and get other people interested enough to give the matter serious thought; thus we can do our share toward crystallizing public opinion. Such was the import of Mr. Westermeyr's remarks, who before taking his seat moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Rothapfel for his expression of good will in throwing open his theater to the Photoplay League.

The last and not by any means the least interesting address of the morning was made by Mr. Rothapfel, who equally incensed by the small attendance aimed his resentment full face at the audience, stating emphatically that he would continue to cleanse the pictures "not because of you, but in spite of you. You don't really do anything—you only talk and obstruct instead of aid our progress."

After a few more scathing remarks aimed rather at the absent than at those present, Mr. Rothapfel opened a campaign of encouragement. He begged the Photoplay League not to be discouraged, but to forge right ahead with the work which they had begun. He said, "I am with the moving picture now and always; and I am going to throw my house open again to the League, and I am going to keep on throwing it open to them until it is filled from the bottom to the top. And if they don't come by being invited we'll make them pay to come. We're going to make them come.

"Perhaps you think that I have not suffered, that I haven't had to struggle in reaching the point in the exhibiting business that I have," Mr. Rothapfel continued. "You may not know or think it possible that the first moving pictures I ever showed were shown in back of a bar-room with a bed sheet for a screen, a second hand piano, and for a five cent admission fee."

He further stated that the slogan of the showman is "We give the public what they want." This, said he, "is impossible. I don't know, and you don't know what the public wants. The public itself doesn't know what it wants. We give them what we want to give them, and if they don't like what we give them they don't come. And we have proved that it is possible to run a moving picture house successfully on a clean, wholesome program."

Before closing his remarks Mr. Rothapfel promised that on later occasions he would continue to give the Photoplay League the benefit of his experiences. It had been his intention to exhibit for the enlightenment of the audience certain types of pictures illustrative of the development and psychology of the photoplay. This was dispensed with, however, on account of a lack of time.

The officers of the Photoplay League, with headquarters at 665 Fifth avenue, New York, are E. H. Blashfeld, president; Frank Lascelles, director, and Helen Varick Boswell, secretary. Among those on the advisory board are Mrs. Chas. H. Whitman, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Adolph Lewisohn, E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Mrs. Marcus M. Marks, John D. Crimmins, George F. Kunz, Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Edward T. Devine, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Lillian D. Wald, Chas. Dana Gibson, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Henry Fairfield Osborn, Mrs. Simeon Ford, Frederick A. Stokes, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Ogden Armour, Isaac Seligman, Norman Hapgood, Evart Jansen Wendell and Cornelius Vanderbilt.

HARRON TO STAR.

Plans for the first trans-continental photoplay featuring an individual star are being perfected at the Triangle-Fine Arts studios in Los Angeles. Robert Harron has been selected to appear in this novelty production, which will be under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

A definite date has not yet been decided upon, but Harron and Ingraham, together with a small supporting cast and mechanical crew, will probably start from Los Angeles as soon as work has been completed upon "The Bad Boy," Harron's present starring vehicle.

A story has been prepared by the Triangle-Fine Arts scenario department which calls for many contrasting scenes, and episodes will be filmed in all of the big cities visited, including El Paso, San Antonio, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington, Philadelphia and New York. Many interesting bits of open country will also be utilized for settings, and if any striking adventures befall the pilgrims en route, they will be incorporated in the story whenever possible.

Bert Hadley, Ingraham's assistant director, will make the trip in advance of the Harron company, to arrange for accommodations, and look over the various locations.

LILLIAN WALKER LEAVES VITAGRAPH.

Miss Lillian Walker, long a star in Vitagraph productions, has left that company and will shortly announce new connections. Miss Walker, the "Dimples" of many a famous one and two reel subject, has lately been featured in five-reel Blue Ribbon productions. Two of these remain to be released "Kitty Mackay" on February 19, and "The Star Gazer" on April 2.

California Exhibitors to Organize

Meeting of Showmen Held at Berkeley Favors State Association.

ON THE afternoon of Thursday, Jan. 11, a special meeting of members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Alameda County was held at the Lorin theater, Berkeley, Cal., at the call of President H. L. Beach to discuss whether it would be feasible and desirable to form a state organization. President Beach outlined in a few words the great amount of good that had been done by the local organization, which for some time has been the only active association of exhibitors in the state, and expressed the opinion that a larger body, with a wider scope of activities, was almost a necessity. He called attention to the fact that the state Legislature was already in session, that a Sunday-closing bill has been prepared and that a state-wide censorship measure would be introduced, according to an announcement of the local Rotary Club. He spoke of the possibilities of getting a law enacted prohibiting the taking of deposits on film service and of being of service through organized effort in securing the passage of other measures of interest to the moving picture industry.

The discussion that followed indicated that the members of the local were very much in favor of starting a state organization, with the present body as a nucleus, the only differences of opinion being whether it would be best to maintain the local and also support the more general organization, or eliminate the local entirely. It was finally decided to adopt the first plan and upon a motion the intention of the local to form a state organization was set forth, this to be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of California, the present local to be known as Alameda County Local No. 1. The by-laws of the local body were adopted as by-laws for the state, with the initiation fee waived for the present and the dues placed at $1 a month, payable six months in advance. Secretary William F. Krahn was instructed to send an urgent invitation to all exhibitors in the territory served by San Francisco exchanges to attend a meeting to be held in that city on January 25th.

On January 18 the annual meeting of the Alameda County organization will be held at the Hotel St. Marks, in Oakland, when officers will be chosen for the ensuing year, and on this date it is also planned to elect officers for the state association. By this means the association will be a regularly organized body when the San Francisco meeting is held and full attention can then be given to securing a satisfactory membership. It is planned to hold one meeting a month in San Francisco and one in Oakland.

In outlining his reasons for believing that a good membership can be secured, and that the attendance at the regular meetings can be made quite heavy, Mr. Beach called attention to the fact that a year or two ago but few exhibitors reviewed pictures before booking them, but that now there were few who did not, with the result that hundreds of them visit San Francisco every month. By securing the co-operation of exchanges and having the review of some noteworthy production fall on the regular meeting date of the association he expressed the belief that many country exhibitors could be led to attend regularly.

Among the Alameda County exhibitors who attended the recent meeting were A. E. King, J. Hellman, E. W. Scott, John Peter, Charles Mehrten, William F. Krahn, H. L. Beach and W. S. Smith. W. A. Cory, of San Francisco, came over for a short stay and offered his assistance in the work of organizing.

Pictures for Children

President Adele F. Woodward, of the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board, Talks to New York Exhibitors.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League No. 1 was held at its rooms in West Forty-second street, New York, on Tuesday, Jan. 16. Samuel H. Trigger, the president, opened the session by introducing Mrs. Adele F. Woodard, President of the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board, an organization similar to the Child's Welfare League.

Mrs. Woodard explained that the Juvenile Board was instituted to advocate the showing of pictures suitable for school children throughout New York City. Its object was to select pictures from the different exchange programs and recommend them to exhibitors with the indorsement of the board. She asked the co-operation of the exhibitors present, in introducing in their theaters a Saturday matinee, or if they would, the showing of these pictures two or three times a week after school hours, between three-thirty and five o'clock.

In answer to the question: "Has the Juvenile Board or any member of it any financial interest in the pictures it indorses?" she said absolutely none. Their services were purely philanthropic. She made it clear that exhibitors were to run the pictures as they would any others, at their usual prices of admission.

One point Mrs. Woodward brought out was particularly interesting. She showed a sample of a circular the board distributes in all the schools in the neighborhood of the theaters, announcing the pictures and telling when and where they are to be shown. Attached to these circulars are coupons to be filled in by the children's parents, authorizing the members of the board (some of whom always were at the theaters) to act as the children's guardians, when the parents were unable to accompany them. Permission had been given the Juvenile Board by License Commissioner Bell and the Board of Education to use the coupons.

In addition she asked the exhibitors if they could see their way clear to give on Monday a free exhibition of the children's pictures to the school teachers and parents.

She also stated, in answer to a question, that already several theaters in New York City and Brooklyn were giving exhibitions of these pictures, in connection with the Board, with great success, naming the theaters, in some instances to as many as a thousand children in an afternoon.

The exhibitors in attendance were very favorably impressed with the proposition. Mr. Trigger appointed a committee to confer with the Juvenile Board and report their interview at the next regular meeting of the league.

J. R. Rubin, the league's attorney, was next introduced. He gave a very clear explanation of the "Wheeler Committee" appointed by the Legislature to inquire into the feasibility of taxing moving picture theaters. He also set forth the work of the league's legislation committee to be carried out at the Exhibitors' Convention at Albany on Jan. 23, 24 and 25, touching upon Sunday closing.

His views on both these subjects were very hopeful. He announced his intention to be at Albany during the convention.

The proceedings of this special meeting were executive and as such are held in confidence.

Waking Up in Idaho

Movement Started to Get Exhibitors Together in An Organization—Evils to Be Combatted Enumerated.

OVER the signatures of six of the leading exhibitors of Idaho a circular letter has been issued to all exhibitors in that state urging them to assist in the formation of an exhibitors' association. The circular enumerates the several evils to be combatted by organization and is accompanied by a blank form upon which several pertinent questions are asked. The circular is printed below in full:

Boise, Idaho.

Fellow Exhibitors:—Believing that organization for mutual protection against the many enemies and evils that beset the exhibitor, is a desirable and necessary thing, the undersigned are sending the enclosed form for you to fill out and mail to us if you are interested in combination for mutual protection.

Today the producers and exchanges have associations that are most effective in their fields as also have the various agencies that make a specialty of throwing stones in the path of the theater manager by censorships and unfair and undemocratic laws. The exchanges have as we all know become more and more arbitrary and dictatorial, exacting heavy deposits that are a serious burden and handicap on many exhibitors and forcing the signing of unfair and unbusiness-like contracts in which the exhibitor as second party has no voice in the writing.

Lately we have had even worse specimens of what the exchange and film men contemplate. We are openly told that these contracts covering films with heavy deposits in some cases reaching the cost of three pictures and at rentals that strip the exhibitor of the last cent of profit, are used by the exchanges to deposit in banks and finance themselves.

We have lately had an epidemic of "off-color" state rights films that rob the town of their "show money," create talk of censorship and by skillfully figured percentages take every cent of profit from the exhibitor that shows them, as well as hurting that exhibitor's competitor. A week later another similar film will play the opposition and the first man gets the gaff. In both cases the road man wins and gets all the coin, and smears over the good name of the business and in both cases the exhibitor is the goat.

The cry for censorship is not dead. Sunday, the best and most profitable day in the week, is a dead letter as far as shows go in dozens of the cities in this state. The towns enjoying the advantage of open Sundays are menaced by the closed towns which furnish encouraging examples to fanatics.

This year the legislature meets and there is no official body of show men to meet suddenly proposed legislation that may be rushed through the legislature on a few days' notice and which may vitally affect every theater in the state.

All the above being true it seems advisable to call a convention of the Idaho Theater Managers for the purpose of creating a permanent organization to be affiliated with one of the National Associations.

Awaiting your early and favorable reply, we are,

Plans for Albany Convention

All Exhibitors Invited to Take Part in Sessions Opening January 23.

A STATE convention of the motion picture exhibitors of the State of New York has been called by President Ochs for Tuesday, January 23, to Thursday, January 25, to be held at the Hotel Ten Eyck, Albany, N. Y. The original arrangements for the convention had been made with a view of having it held in Rochester, but in view of the important legislation which is contemplated in Albany in regard to motion pictures, it was thought wise to make the State Capital the scene of this convention.

Notices have been sent to every exhibitor in the state, whether affiliated with the state organization or not, and numerous acceptances have been received.

There is a strong sentiment throughout the state among exhibitors that this is the right time to give an impressive display of the strength and unity of the industry and such strongly organized cities as New York, Yonkers, Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Utica, Rochester, Buffalo and Binghamton will be strongly represented at the convention.

The program for the three days will be substantially as follows: The convention will be called to order at 3.30 P. M. on Tuesday, January 23, at the Hotel Ten Eyck, when committees on the following subjects will be appointed: legislation, by-laws, transportation, deposit system, membership, finance and grievance. An important conference will then be held between the various local organizations on the personnel and standing of Assemblymen and Senators on all matters touching the motion picture industry.

On Wednesday at 11 A. M. the various committees will render their reports. Immediately upon adjournment, the delegates will proceed in a body to the Capitol and visit the Assembly and Senate Chambers.

On the last day, Thursday, January 25, at 11 A. M., the delegates will meet in committee of the whole. The subject of discussion will be means of propaganda for Sunday opening and against censorship, slides, petitions, etc. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the convention will elect state officers and delegates to the national convention to be held in July in Chicago.

A banquet at the Ten Eyck to which prominent speakers have been invited within and without the industry will be the last event of the convention.

The New York City delegation will go by special train, leaving Grand Central station at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, Jan. 23.

Censorship Threatens West Virginia

Impending Calamity Stirs Exhibitors to Action—Now Want to Organize.

THE exhibitors of West Virgnia are greatly concerned over impending passage of a censorship bill during the present session of the legislature of that state. Letters have been received by National Organizer Fred J. Herrington and others connected with the trade, from Wheeling, Fairmont, Parsons, Charleston and other points, expressing the need of immediate organized action. The West Virginia legislature convened at Charleston on January 10. It is hoped to get the exhibitors together in the principal cities to meet the crisis on the censorship question. A campaign fund is being raised.

The position of the exhibitors in the state will be unusually precarious, it is said, if the bill is passed. While the burdens of censorship in the states where it is now in force fall on the exhibitors in an indirect way, in West Virginia the burdens would be direct. On account of the absence of any number of film distributing centers in the state to bear the expense of maintaining censorship and the penalties for violations, the new law will be directed against the exhibitor and the exhibitor alone.

Organizer Herrington estimates that fully 95 per cent of the films exhibited in West Virginia now are censored by either the Pennsylvania, Ohio or Maryland boards of censorship, and all bear the approval of the National Board of Review. There is no excuse, therefore, for the legislation now pending, and the creation of a board of censors in West Virgina is regarded as a political move and for the advancement of individual interests.

At the present time there is no state exhibitors' league in West Virginia and little semblance of organization anywhere except in Wheeling.

NEW PENNSYLVANIA LEAGUE OFFICES.

The Pittsburgh branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the headquarters of the Pennsylvania State League was moved on January 15 from Penn avenue and Ninth street, Pittsburgh, to more commodious quarters at 310 McCance block. The new location is a more central one for the trade and is regarded as a vast improvement over the old. The new quarters, which comprise an assembly room, also used as the secretary's office, and a room for supplies and accessories, are to be kept open at all times for the convenience of the members. Secretary G. A. Sahner, who recently succeeded James Delves, deceased, reports that the affairs of the league are being rapidly rounded into shape for an active membership campaign and a series of get-together meetings.

For Sale and To-Let Signs

Attributed to the High Cost of Service and a Surplus of Features.

AN EXHIBITOR in Brooklyn presented to your humble scribe a concrete and parallel instance of the position many exhibitors find themselves in to-day. Two years ago he built himself a 600-seat house, one of the finest, on the basis of ten cents a seat. At the time he built he was paying seventy-five dollars a week for his service, to-day he is paying from fifty to seventy-five dollars a night. This increased cost of service with the added restrictions of the standee ordinance makes it nigh unto impossible for him to make his theater pay.

Add to this the possibility of the proposed war tax by the state legislature and Sunday closing, then decide where he will be. We would not be surprised to see him looking for a job, or for some profitable investment for his money.

He blames big features, the overproduction of them, and high salaried stars. In other words, the high finance of production.

He also stated that over two hundred theaters in Greater New York had hung out the For Sale or To-Let signs since April, 1914. This he mentioned in justification of his deductions. S. S.

EXHIBITORS CONDEMN ANTI-VICE PICTURES.

The biggest portion of the time used for discussion at the last meeting of the Northwest Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corp., of the Northwest, at Minneapolis, Jan. 9, was devoted to "anti-vice" pictures. Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, Minn., was the principal speaker, and he expressed himself as strongly opposed to the freedom exchangemen had taken in flooding the territory with so-called "anti-vice" features. It was stated at the meeting that there were undoubtedly more vulgar features being exploited in the Northwest at the present time than in any other district of the country.

It was the opinion of many exhibitors that the association should adopt measures to prohibit the exploitation of so many such films. Letters from several exhibitors of Minnesota and the Dakotas were read; each condemning the practice of overdoing the "anti-vice" film exploitation.

C. H. Hitchcock, Minneapolis, was appointed chairman of the grand ball committee to succeed J. A. Keough, who resigned from the organization, and D. G. Rodgers was appointed chairman of a special grievance committee by President J. G. Gilosky.

BRONX EXHIBITORS INSTALL OFFICERS.

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County, New York, held an installation of its newly elected officers at Fleischman's on Thursday evening, January 11. The installation was made by Borough President Douglas Mathewson, these officers being duly inducted: President John J. Wittman, Vice-President Nathan Vineyard, Secretary Henry Cole, Treasurer Samuel Suchman, Financial Secretary John Bolte, Sergeant-at-Arms Dan Newman, Trustees Matchet, Coleman and Suchman. President Wittman and Secretary Cole were the recipients of handsome present from the members of the association. At the supper which followed the ceremonies, remarks were made by District Attorney Francis Martin, National President of the League Ochs, President Samuel H. Trigger of the New York State League and others.

CLEVELAND'S MAYOR EXPLAINS HIS ORDER.

Cleveland film organizations have been particularly active lately. Last Wednesday, Mayor Harry L. Davis, of Cleveland, spoke before the Exhibitors' League, outlying his order to stop showing pictures with nude women in the theaters. He explained that he was friendly toward the exhibitors and wished to do them no harm, but at the same time he wished to curb such films, because it would do the theaters as much good as the public. Members of the league claim they were not the offenders and are willing at all times to co-operate with the Mayor and police officials.

Indiana Convention

Enthusiastic Meeting at Indianapolis Results in Reorganization of State League.

RESPONDING to an S. O. S. call from F. J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana Exhibitors' League, the writer journeyed to Indianapolis and attended a convention which proved in fact to be a reorganization of the Indiana State Exhibitors. The meeting was perhaps as earnest, business-like a body of men as it has been my good fortune to meet.

In the evening of Wednesday, January 17, a preliminary conference was called by President Rembusch, to meet in the State Exhibitors' rooms at the Lyric theater. This meeting, President Rembusch stated, was merely for the purpose of considering the various matters which ought to be placed before the convention on the morrow, and to decide which of them would take precedence, to the end that neither time or energy be wasted after the convention finally got down to business. And let me say right here and now, that, in my judgment, this was the right course to pursue. The conference, in my opinion, saved at least two days of convention work.

Frank J. Rembusch.

Among those present at the preliminary meeting were the following: Frank J. Rembusch, president Indinapolis State Exhibitors' League; Gus Schmidt, president Indianapolis Down Town Exhibitors' Organization, Crystal theater, Indianapolis; B. V. Barton, Isis theater, Indianapolis; L. H. O'Donnell, Grand Opera House, Washington; Dolly Spurr, Royal Grand theater, Marion; W. H. Lipps, Alexandria; C. R. Andrews, Star and Columbia, Muncis; L. Levine, Phoenix theater, LaPorte; Harry Koch, Manhattan, Indianapolis; Edwin Booth, Alhambra theater, Indianapolis; Robert H. Harris, Grand, Princess, Crescent, Bloomington; Guy Perfect, Princess and Empress, Huntington; W. H. Esch, Phoenix and Princess theaters, LaPorte; M. I. Wohl, Cosmo theater, Gary; V. U. Young, manager, Art, Grand, Twentieth Century, Orpheum, Broadway, Gary; C. J. Attardt, Orpheum, South Bend.

The discussion at the preliminary meeting was decidedly enlightening. From remarks from President Rembusch and Gus Schmidt, president of the Indianapolis Down Town Exhibitors' Organization, it appears that up to within just a few weegs ago the Indianapolis Exhibitors were literally at swords' points. They wer so antogonistic that, to use the expression of President Schmidt, "If one exhibitor saw another coming down the street, he would cross the thoroughfare in order not to meet him." That seems, of course, like an exaggeration, but according to the sentiments set forth at the meeting it really is not. Indianapolis exhibitors were literally cutting each other's throats in the matter of bidding up programs, and other things as well.

Finally Frank Rembusch got after the matter, and, aided by Gus Schmidt, of the Crystal theater, Indianapolis, got some of the Indianapolis men together at a meeting and after five hours' discussion they discovered there really was nothing for them to fight about, and that there was every reason why they should be friendly and assist each other An organization was formed and, again using President Schmidt's own expression, "Today you could not pry one of the Indianapolis exhibitors loose from the organization with a crowbar." They have all agreed to let each other's programs alone, and instead of fighting each other they are now on the most friendly footing and are working hand in hand to the mutual advantage of all.

The conditions which obtained in Indianapolis still obtains, to a greater or less extent, throughout the State of Indiana, except in two or three of the smaller cities which have followed Indianapolis' example and organized local exhibitors' leagues. Muncie, Ind., is one which has such an organization, C. R. Andrews of that city being its president. At the preliminary meeting the discussion took a rather wide angle, but the meeting was unanimous in agreeing that it was nothing less than suicide for Indiana exhibitors to remain unorganized and after three hours of discussion it was decided to go into a committee of the whole and decide upon what form of organization would be best suited to the needs of the State, the plan decided upon to be presented to the convention. This meeting lasted until 2 a. m. and much was accomplished in bringing forward ideas which were of value.

Convention Meets.

At 10:35 a. m. President F. J. Rembusch called the convention to order in the Assembly Hall of the Hotel Severin. The president, in a few words, introduced Cranston Brenton, chairman National Board of Review, New York City, who for an hour held the close attention of the convention and the many visitors who had been invited to hear the doctor's address. These visitors were, for the most part, officers and members of various Indianapolis women's clubs and organizations. In speaking of the children's program, Dr. Brenton brought forth a chorus of "that's rights" and a laugh when he said, "If you want to empty your theater quickly, allow committees of well meaning women or men to select a 'children's program.' They will invariably select that what they think the children ought to see, and little or nothing the children themselves want to see. Result: Everybody tremendously interested in the children's program—except the children."

"Place upon the children's program," said the Doctor, "the good wild west stuff, some good clean comedy and a little educational. Thus the child will be interested, amused and, incidentally, educated in spite of himself or herself."

After an extended explanation as to how the nude first got on the screen, the Doctor made the following announcement: "Beginning January 1, there will be no more pictures passed by the National Board of Review which contain the nude, no matter what the excuse may be for its introduction."

The Doctor's address was extremely interesting, and at its close our president, Mr. Rembusch, introduced F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department, Moving Picture World, New York City, who delivered an address on the benefits of organization, and called the attention of the convention to the fact that if they expected to maintain the organization it would be absolutely essential that there be such work for the organization to do as would provide a selfish interest, and convince its members that the payment of dues and the attendance at meetings is really worth while. Mr. Richardson suggested that perhaps the better form of State organization would be for each county to organize a local league to attend to the affairs within that county, the same to affiliate with the State organization. Mr. Richardson called attention to the necessity of regular and frequent meetings, and suggested that one benefit of this form of organization would be that the county bodies could meet once each week, or once each two weeks, without any prohibitive expense or any particular hardship in the way of travel and expenditure of time. Then delegates from the county organizations could meet as a State organization each month, or each three months, as might be deemed advisable, and then, perhaps, once a year there could could be a big State convention.

"In order to have the organization succeed and maintain an active and useful existence," said Mr. Richardson, "it is absolutely essential that the members be kept directly and continuously interested therein, which is hardly possible where there is only one yearly meeting."

Mr. Richardson also gave the exhibitors some very pointed advice with regard to the presentation of the picture on the screen. His address was well received and highly spoken of afterwards by many of the exhibitors.

Afternoon Session—Election of Officers.

The first order of business at the afternoon session was the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville; first vice-president, V. W. Young, Gary; second vice-president, A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis; secretary, Ray Andrews, Muncie; treasurer, Ben Crose, Indianapolis.

A board of directors was appointed consisting of the following named exhibitors: H. Kornblum, Evansville; J. T. Keating, Terre Haute; L. H. O'Donald, Washington; J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis; C. S. Allard, South Bend; R. A. Harris, Bloomington; H. H. Johnson, LaFayette; M. J. Wohl, Gary; Ben Barton, Indianapolis; F. J. Mack, Indianapolis; F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, and O. G. Murray, Richmond. The board will meet monthly.

A request for funds to carry on the work of organization until initiation fees and dues began to come in brought an immediate response to the amount of $600 which was subscribed in about ten minutes.

At two o'clock p. m. Governor James B. Goodrich appeared and addressed the convention. He expressed himself as having a high respect for the educational value of motion pictures and said that he was opposed to Sunday closing. "We are not now living in a puritanical age and I cannot see that any injury can come to any one in Sunday motion picture shows; in fact, I believe they have a large value." At another point he said, "The moving picture has great power for good or for evil, and I believe it is mostly for good." The Governor's address was punctuated by applause.

The convention then took up various matters affecting the welfare of Indiana exhibitors, particularly Sunday closing and the matter of cash deposits. Miss Dolly Spurr, Royal theater, Marion, Ind., presented a particularly atrocious case of official bull-headedness. It seems Indiana has a peculiar statute governing Sunday performances, and that the Marion mayor has caused the arrest of Miss Spurr on three separate occasions, once actually causing her incarceration in the city jail. Each time the Circuit Court dismissed the case. We thus find the mayor of a small town actually overriding the decisions of the courts, notwithstanding the fact that Attorney Pettijohn says that for a mayor to disregard or go contrary to any decision of any court is grounds, under Indiana law, for impeachment. It is not unlikely that the State organization will cause the impeachment of the Marion mayor.

Viewed as a whole, the convention gives promise of building up a real exhibitors' league in Indiana and accomplishing real good for the industry of that State. The men composing the convention were in earnest and it is to be sincerely hoped they will remain in that frame of mind.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

SIDE LIGHTS ON THE CONVENTION.

A month ago Rembusch told us he was through and that the whole blanked business could go to the bow wows for all he cared. Huh! You should have seen him in Indianapolis. He was not the entire show, but he certaintly was a goodly portion of it.

Query: Is Andrews of Muncie tongue-tied? Answer: NO!

Query: Who is Ed. J. Caldwell? Answer: Merely an exhibitor who has a $10,000 investment in a town of 1,640 folks —and that's going some. He is making money too. Danville, Indiana, is the place. Royal theater; seats 310.

Query: Why did so many delegates eat downstairs in the grille? Answer: Lady orchestra; peaches, too! F. H. R.

Arrangements Complete for Brooklyn Ball

Exhibitors' Association Plans Big Affair—To Be Held in Stauch's, Coney Island, February 21.

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed for the Movie Carnival and Ball to be given under the auspices of the Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, at Stauch's Palace, Coney Island, on February 21. Plans already put in operation by the various committees assure success. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company has agreed to run special trains to and from Coney Island on the night of the ball.

Interest in the ball is being aroused all throughout Brooklyn and Manhattan by announcement of the voting contest, by which will be selected the most popular motion picture actor and actress, who will respectively be crowned King and Queen of the carnival. The contest will be conducted by the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. The newspaper has devised ways and means of making this feature a real popularity contest.

The best known motion picture stars will attend the affair. Assurances that they will be present have already come from many of the foremost actors and actresses.

The entertainment committee is at present negotiating with R. H. Burnside, the famous producer, to stage the ceremonies attending the crowning of the King and Queen.

More than 300 exhibitors in Brooklyn and Long Island are working as a unit to make this affair such a signal success that it will stand out as one of the biggest and best in film history.

SOL LESSER HAS HEIR.

Sol Lesser, otherwise known as the little Napoleon of the film field, has just acquired the world's rights to a new feature. As a New Year's gift his wife presented him with an eight pound baby boy.

Advance Deposits to Guarantee Film Contracts

By George Kleine.

THE exhibitor raises three principal objections to the current system of exacting a cash deposit to guarantee fulfillment of a film contract.

1. He resists placing a sum of money in the hands of a rental exchange without a guarantee as to its safety, and sees the danger of some of them being unable to refund his cash in case they are unable to deliver the films guaranteed under the contract, because of accident, fire, failure in business, etc.

2. He objects to the deposit of his cash without receiving interest therefor.

3. He suspects that his deposit is being used before it is earned by the distributor in the conduct of his business, or by the manufacturer in paying his operating expenses, salaries of stars, etc.

I agree entirely with the exhibitor who holds these views. On the other hand some exhibitors hold their signatures to contracts in slight regard, violating sometimes on impulse, sometimes with reason, without consideration of the damage to the distributing agency or manufacturer. Sometimes he signs a contract for service to prevent his competitor from getting the films, with the deliberate intention not to meet his obligation to the exchange, and canceling without regard to the rights of the distributor when his purpose is accomplished.

There is no doubt that the mass of exhibitors of the present day are more solid financially and more responsible business men than those of five or eight years ago. At the same time there is a class of exhibitors that has but little regard for its agreements and justifies its mistreatment of an exchange that conducts its business honorably, because it has suffered from the evil practices of another exchange.

Agreeing on the one hand with the exhibitor who raises the objections enumerated above, while on the other finding it necessary to safeguard our business by giving stability to the contracts made by our distributing branches with their customers, I have worked out the following system for the K-E-S-E service:

Our releases are grouped arbitrarily in lots of ten features. Exhibitors contracting to use a group are asked to pay in advance 20 per cent. of the contract price, to cover the rental price of the last two subjects. The ten may be picked from our entire stock of regular releases or the group of any one quarter.

This serves to tie up comparatively little money, as the advance covers only two features, instead of four to eight; and the obligation not more than one release weekly for ten weeks (instead of fifty-two) or one hundred and four releases covering one year.

In order to assure the exhibitor of the safety of his deposit, my personal guarantee stands back of it; and all funds so collected are placed in a special account in my name, as trustee, either in the Harriman National Bank of New York City or the Continental & Commercial National Bank of Chicago. This account is kept entirely apart from all other moneys, either my personal accounts or those of my business. The contract which we sign binds us to the fulfillment of these conditions. We draw upon the account after the exhibitor has played the dates that his deposit covers.

Having in this manner assured the safety of these funds, the question of reimbursement to the exhibitor for the sequestration of his cash received serious consideration. Realizing that ordinary interest, such as a bank rate of 4 per cent. or 5 per cent. per annum would not be adequate compensation, I decided it to be only fair to allow what would be considered a trade discount in ordinary merchandising: For instance, in certain lines of business, such as jewelry, when the dealer makes a purchase, his bill is usually subject to a cash discount of 5 per cent. for ten day cash, net ninety days. As our advance collections run on a maximum of ninety days, I decided to refund to the exhibitor a flat trade discount of 6 per cent. on the amount he deposited, amounting in effect to 24 per cent. per annum.

We remit this sum to him by check on receipt of payment for the first feature rented to him under the contract.

Many exhibitors have expressed their appreciation of this manner of handling the problem and in a number of cases have tendered payment in full, in advance, to cover the entire contract. I did not in the beginning contemplate this possibility, as the expense to us is high, but in order to show appreciation of the confidence thus placed in us, instructions have been given to all of our branch offices to allow the full discount of 6 per cent. flat on the total sum so advanced, be it 20 per cent. of the contract or the full amount.

Wishing further to assure our customers that their funds are safeguarded and not withdrawn until they are earned, I am making arrangements to have a well-known firm of certified accountants check up all of our contracts, determine the total amount of deposits involved, check up the bank balances covering these trust funds and notify each customer that his advance payment is held in bank. It might be preferable to scatter these funds among banks located in the various cities where our twenty-three branch offices operate. This would reduce the risk of loss from bank failure to one twenty-third.

The making and marketing of films, particularly features, involves a great financial risk that should be carried by the manufacturer and distributor. It is not just to the exhibitor whose money is deposited to have it involved in the risks of other branches of the business. It is absurd and unfair to ask an exhibitor to advance money to be used in paying the expenses of making films, unless he is made a partner in the profits—if any.

The handling of these funds, as outlined above, is not only of no advantage to us, but an expense, justified only because it stabilizes our business. Such security is essential to the distributor; the operation of a chain of branch offices is expensive; the procuring of rental contracts involves employment of many office and traveling salesmen, and if the orders obtained by them are likely to be canceled, there is a premium placed upon the careless signing of contracts, and the good faith of the salesman whose contracts are canceled by the exhibitor is subject to attack by his firm.

I have considered various substitutes for the advance deposit system and suggest the following for consideration without having yet reached a conclusion that they are satisfactory to either or both parties:

The use of "acceptances": An "acceptance" is an acknowledgment of an obligation to pay a certain amount of money at some future date and is in common use on the continent of Europe. I am most familiar with this practice, as it obtains in Italy, where it is generally employed as follows:

A manufacturer or wholesaler, having received an order for certain merchandise, makes a shipment when he mails his bill he attches an "acceptance," usually in printed form, which shows the amount of the bill and states that the shipper has a claim against the customer for the stated sum, which is to be paid upon a certain date, which may be thirty, sixty, or ninety days, more or less. The customer signs the "acceptance" and returns it to the seller.

This is not a note, but is a written acknowledgment of the debt, and the buyer expects to pay the obligation when it is due. This method of handling business accounts is being exploited in some of our periodicals and is recommended by the National Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga. If we apply the system of "acceptances" to the film business, substituting it in place of advance payments, the distributor upon receiving a contract for the future delivery of certain films will offer at the same time a number of "acceptances," covering all of the films that are to be shipped under the contract, stating the amount due upon each shipment, and the date when it is to be paid; or all of the films could be grouped in one "acceptance," which would specify the various dates and amounts to be paid.

If the use of such "acceptances" becomes common in this country and if the practices of Europe are followed, there is a danger involved for the exhibitor, which should be pointed out. An "acceptance" being an acknowledgment of an obligation, the holder is in a position to take it to his bank for discount; if the credit of the signer is good, banks would lend money upon an "acceptance" up to very nearly its face amount. If a film exchange holding such "acceptances" were to fail in its own obligations, and if they had been negotiated at a bank, or elsewhere, the signer might find himself obligated to pay for the use of films that he did not receive. They should therefore be marked "non-negotiable."

The advantage of the "acceptance" would consist in removing the necessity of depositing cash.

Another method of meeting the difficulty would be the getting together of groups of exhibitors, the group party to collectively guarantee the payment of the obligations of its component members. Such an arrangement would offer the combined credit and good faith of the entire group to guarantee the payment of the obligations thus incurred. The details of such an arrangement would be complicated, however, and would meet the customary difficulty that is found in inducing large numbers of men who are busy, and sometimes antagonistic to each other, to take community action.

The following method also occurs to me:

A board of trustees could be selected consisting of three representatives of manufacturers and distributors and three exhibitors of high standing, as for instance, Marcus Loew of New York, Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago, and Mr. Roth of the Portola theater, San Francisco, all moneys collected as advance deposits to be placed in the hands of these trustees, who might be bonded at the expense of the fund, serve without pay, and deposit these funds in various banks selected with a view to their responsibility. Distributors could render weekly bills for service given when part of the fund has been earned.

The handling of other people's money carries with it obligations that most film concerns would probably avoid, if it were practicable; for instance, if in panic times a depository bank were to fail and part of the deposit lost, the legal liability would probably rest upon the holding concern. If the money is used by the manufacturer or exchange before it is earned, the risk is very much greater to both parties. The sums involved are necessarily large, and the manufacturer may be tempted into speculative contracts with high salaried stars; huge sums may go into advertising, authors' royalties, etc., risks which would not be taken if these men were forced to produce their own capital.

I do not know if any manufacturing concern is so using exhibitors' deposit funds, but there is a general belief among exhibitors that it is the fact. If it is, then some day there will come a crash that will react on all of us.

In any case it is not only the exhibitors' right, it is his duty as a good business man, to assure himself of the safety of his funds, which reach large sums in individual cases. I know one exhibiting firm, with a large group of theaters, whose average advance deposits among distributing companies total at least $10,000. It is bad business to part with such sums without reasonable assurance of their safety.

TOOMEY BACK WITH MUTUAL.

William C. Toomey has been appointed assistant to the president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The announcement is made by John R. Freuler, Mutual president. This fills the vacancy left by the resignation of John Cecil Graham, who has gone abroad for Paramount. Mr. Toomey this week took up his work with the Mutual Film Corporation, establishing his offices at 71 West 23d street, New York Mutual headquarters.

Mr. Toomey thus becomes Mutual's new "ambassador to Broadway," with the special mission of concerning himself with the Mutual's interest in productions and stars. Mr. Toomey has for something more than a year past held the post of vice-president of Mirror Films. He is particularly well known in film and dramatic circles in New York, and began his motion picture career with Mutual.

H. W. OVIATT STUDYING THE MARKET.

H. W. Oviatt, for two years prior to last October head of the Pathe exchange in San Francisco, for the past two months has been in New York City. Mr. Oviatt, acting for a new producing company, is looking into market conditions generally with a view to determining so far as possible what particular types of photoplays are going to be most in demand in the near future.

Mr. Oviatt has been in the motion picture business for seventeen years. It was in March, 1900, he bought his first projection machine from William N. Selig. Fourteen years ago he showed pictures in Los Angeles. Since that time he has had wide experience in the exchange end. Mr. Oviatt expects shortly to return to San Francisco, where he will make his headquarters in 714 Hewes Building.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SUBSIDIARY DISBANDS.

Adolph Zukor announces that the Famous Players-Charles Frohman Company, formed some time ago to present some of the Charles Frohman plays in pictures, has been discontinued. It will be remembered that the Famous Players released a number of Frohman picture plays on the Paramount program. Mr. Zukor said that the reason for discontinuing the company was principally because they had used all the plays suited to Famous Players' stars. Mr. Zukor also calls attention to the fact that the discontinuance of the aforesaid company does not affect in any particular the relations of Daniel Frohman to the Famous Players.

If you are in the moving picture business or allied industries, your advertisement in the Tenth Anniversary Number will carry its message where you want it to go. Advertising forms close February 23.

Great Year for Mary Maclaren

THREE years ago there was a little girl attending Holy Angels Convent, Fort Lee, N. J., who had not the remotest idea that she would be so soon a screen star at the Rialto, one of New York's two great moving picture theaters. She was pretty, to be sure, but not all pretty girls in convents become screen actresses, and Mary MacDonald gave no thought to such things at the time she was a convent girl.

Mary MacLaren.

But when her parents moved to Los Angeles and Mary "got the fever" she was eager to stand with the other girls in the crowds that waited to be called as "extras" for the pictures. One day Lois Weber needed a girl to play maids and Mary was selected to carry on the cards in an early Bluebird "John Needham's Double."

At that time Miss Weber had a commission to produce "Where Are My Children?" and Mary had so well performed her duties as a maid that Miss Weber gave her a little more difficult part. She was chosen as the girl who was to usher a young man to the guests chamber; when he arrived he was to undertake the task of purloining a kiss and the maid was to "swat him a good clout" on the cheek.

Into that action Mary put so much temperament that Miss Weber marked her mentally for future indentification. When time came to start the production of "Shoes," one of the last summer's Bluebirds, Miss Weber considered no one but Mary to play the role of the distressed heroine—and Mary confirmed Miss Weber's judgment in a manner to which hundreds of exhibitors and their public can bear enthusiastic witness.

From maids to stardom in three pictures was Mary's record—but Bluebird was cautious. It took legal possession of the name of "Mary MacLaren" for the screen and gave it to Miss MacDonald. And as Mary MacLaren this girl three years away from convent (and right now only eight months in moving pictures), has appeared as star of "Saving the Family Name," "Wanted—a Home," on the Bluebird program, and as the featured one in "Idle Wives," the "state right" production.

Monday, January 22, "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," the Bluebird in which she is co-starred with Harrison Ford, opened at the Rialto, New York—and Mary, the unknown, has completed the jump from maids to stardom in one of America's foremost motion picture theaters. No wonder Mary MacLaren had the happiest of nineteen-sixteens.

PAUL GULICK MARRIED AT LAST.

For some time the friends of Paul Gulick, editor of the Moving Picture Weekly, have been urging him to join the ranks of the Benedicts, but Paul was proof, up to recently, against all temptations, holding out to the point that the belief became current that he was destined to lead a life of single blessedness. But one day, as Nat Wills would say, he fell for the argument of Dan Cupid and was sold all the way up for that married stuff. Last week he came across with the announcement that "Kathryn Bowman was married to Paul Gulick on January 14 at Marble Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church," and that the happy couple would be at home at the Cambria, 355 West 55th street, New York.

O, well; he was a good fellow while he lasted.

NEW NAME FOR ESSANAY "BILL" PICTURE.

The Buffalo Bill picture, issued by Essanay, and announced in the last issue of the Moving Picture World as "The Life of Buffalo Bill," has been renamed, "The Adventures of Buffalo Bill." This is a five-reel subject entirely distinct from the picture called "The Life of Buffalo Bill," and will be released by the K-E-S-E Service.

"Motion Picture Trust" Again Sued

Joseph H. Sampliner, Assignee of Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., Asks $750,000.

SUIT for $750,000, under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, was begun January 19, in the United States District Court, by Rogers & Rogers, 160 Broadway, representing Joseph H. Sampliner, of Cleveland, Ohio, against what is described as the Motion Picture Trust, the defendants named being Motion Picture Patents Company, Vitagraph Company of America, Biograph Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Kalem Company, Pathe Freres, Lubin Manufacturing Company, Gaston Melies, George Kleine, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Selig Polyscope Company, Frank L. Dyer, Harry N. Marvin, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, William Pelzer, Jacques A. Berst, Albert E. Smith, Siegmund Lubin, William N. Selig, George K. Spoor, Percival Waters and William Pelzer.

This is one of a number of suits that are being brought throughout the country against the so-called Motion Picture Trust, and is the second case of its kind brought in this jurisdiction, the first one being that of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, in which William Fox was the controlling factor and in which Rogers & Rogers also represented the plaintiff, who sued for $1,500,000. This case was settled out of court, after the appeal had been argued and heard and before decision was rendered in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The plaintiff in the present suit alleges that he was damaged to the extent of $250,000, and under the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, asks for three-fold damages. He is an attorney in Cleveland, Ohio, and is the assignee of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Company, which, it is asserted in the complaint, was put out of business by the alleged unlawful refusal of the Motion Picture Trust to furnish it with films necessary for it to conduct its business.

TRADE DINNER POSTPONED.

The dinner and entertainment planned for January 26 by the General Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been postponed until March on account of the absence of William A. Johnston, chairman of the division, and the present nature of legislative and other duties now devolving on the officers of the association. Definite announcement of the place and date of the dinner will be made shortly, as it is planned to give this entertainment the full advantage of careful planning for some weeks ahead.

EDITOR OF MUTUAL WEEKLY ON VACATION.

In search of a well-deserved respite from his arduous labors as editor of The Mutual Weekly, Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont Company, sailed Saturday, Jan. 20, for Havana, Cuba. He was accompanied by Mrs. Mitchell. It is Mr. Mitchell's intention to spend several weeks in Cuba, with headquarters at the capital. While he plans several side trips of interest he has solemnly vowed that he will not carry a camera with him. Although taking a vacation, it is not altogether possible for him to get away from business, and he has promised to keep in touch with the Gaumont studios by wireless and cable. During his absence The Mutual Weekly will be edited by his staff, with several executives of the Gaumont Company assisting in advisory capacities.

Enid and Margery Bennett Hostesses

Entertain Party of Trade Press Representatives at Astor Luncheon.

ENID BENNETT, star in Thos. H. Ince productions released through Triangle, and her sister, Margery, were hostesses to a group of trade paper representatives at luncheon in the Hotel Astor on Friday, January 19. The luncheon was a delightful affair, which is not to be wondered at after one has met the Misses Bennett. Suffice it to say that Enid Bennett is as good a hostess as she is a motion picture actress, and that Miss Margery is a true sister of Enid.

Margery arrived in the United States from Australia a few days after Christmas. She is to work with Enid in the latter's next picture. The Bennett sisters have been in New York for but a few days, and will leave for Los Angeles within the week, where they will immediately begin work in a picture.

Enid Bennett's first picture under the Ince banner will be given its premiere at an invitation showing at the Strand theater on the morning of January 31. It is titled "The Princess of the Dark."

Charles W. Barrell, of Triangle's publicity forces, acted as master of ceremonies at the luncheon.

KLEINE BRANCH TAKES LARGER QUARTERS.

Growing business due to the increased popularity of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay features has forced the "Keys" service branch office at Toronto, Ont., to give up its former location at 96 Bay street and move into more commodious quarters at 39 Adelaide street, West. The new location is admirably suited to the purpose and offers facilities which will permit Manager Cooper to continue his excellent service to Canadian exhibitors in spite of the greatly increased volume of business which he is handling. The suite includes a well equipped projection room, where exhibitors and newspaper men may view the forthcoming Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay releases.

CARL LAEMMLE GIVEN BIRTHDAY SURPRISE.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was fifty years old on Tuesday, January 16, and in his honor the employees of the Universal tendered their executive a surprise birthday dinner at the Cinderella, Lexington avenue and 86th street.

Mr. Laemmle was greeted by his friends as he entered the banquet hall by a demonstration which lasted for many minutes and which showed him the affection in which he is held by the members of his organization. He was kept busy all evening receiving the congratulations of his friends on having reached the half century mark, and he declared the occasion the happiest of his life.

Mr. Lesser intends exploiting "The Garden of Allah" in a high class manner and it will be given an extended first run engagement in San Francisco at advanced prices, and then handled as a road attraction throughout the territory.

EXHIBITORS' BALL FOR RED CROSS.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League No. 1, New York City, will hold a ball at Terrace Garden, February 16, for the benefit of the Red Cross Society. The league will lend its aid in every way possible in conjunction with the society to make it a financial success. Some of the most exclusive people of social distinction interested in the Red Cross work will lend their presence and assistance to the event. The entire receipts will go to the Red Cross Society.

Famous Players-Lasky Invades South America

All Productions to be Handled in Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay by Sociedad General Cinematografica.

CONTRACTS have just been closed between the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. and the Sociedad General Cinematografica, of Bueno's Aires, by the terms of which Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas Pictures are to be handled exclusively by the Sociedad General in Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay.

The completion of these arrangements marks the invasion of South America by the Famous Players-Lasky, and is the culmination of a series of investigations and negotiations lasting three years. When the Famous Players and Lasky companies completed a mutual agreement for the joint distribution of their products outside of the United States, the producers turned at once to South America as being geographically next in line to Canada itself as the logical place for the exploiting of American photoplays.

In September, 1915, an able representative was sent to South America as a special representative of the Famous Players and Lasky companies for the sole purpose of investigating conditions first-hand, with a view to determining whether or not they had reached a favorable condition for the invasion of the market. His investigation covered a period of five months and took him to Argentine, Brazil, Uruguay, and Paraguay. During this tour he interviewed the most prominent motion picture and theatrical managers, witnessed every type of motion picture presentation from the great theater with its orchestra of forty pieces, to the cafe where motion pictures are used as a substitute for the cabaret performance.

When the Famous Players-Lasky representative went to South America, he took with him several photoplays produced by the companies which he represented, and these he exhibited in all the principal cities which he visited, frequently having as his guests the mayors of the municipalities and their staffs, together with many socially prominent persons who had never before visited a motion picture exhibition.

These performances created such an excellent impression and the pictures were acknowledged to be so far superior to any American program pictures which had been shown in South America up to that time that keen interest in the marketing rights of these productions were manifested by various importers and theatrical syndicates. When the film ambassador explained to his questioners that he came simply as an investigator, and had brought the photoplays with him only for comparative purposes, and not with a view to disposing of South American rights, the interested parties got in touch with the New York office of the concern at once.

The producers did not feel, however, that the time was ripe for entering this new field of activity, and have held aloof from the final acceptance of any of the numerous offers which have been pending since 1915. Meanwhile conditions in South America were very carefully studied, and it became apparent that the Sociedad General Cinematografica was the strongest concern handling motion pictures in Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay. Now that circumstances have so shaped themselves in South America as to warrant the introduction of a high-class feature program, the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. has signed a contract with the big distributing concern to handle its products in the three countries already mentioned. Since the expansion of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. to include not only the Famous Players and Lasky productions, but those of the Morosco and Pallas companies as well, the new South American contract also includes the distribution of the last named two concerns as well.

The signing of this contract, following closely upon the engagement of J. C. Graham as a general foreign representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the engagement of Alec Lorimore and Ingvald C. Oes as foreign representatives, is only the first step along the line of expanding the world-wide activities of the company which have previously embraced South Africa, Australia and the Continent.

HORSLEY NEGOTIATING BIG DEALS.

Though he originally planned to be away from his studios in Los Angeles for only ten days, David Horsley has prolonged his stay in New York to cover a month's time in order that he may conclude negotiations for several big moves which will concern his future activities.

Fox Man Gets Married

Washington Branch Manager Weds Miss Rose Stewart Watson, of Mamaroneck, N. Y.

CARL F. SENNING, manager of the Washington branch of the Fox Film Corporation, has a daily mail just at present that nearly requires the services of an additional office force opening and acknowledging the letters. 'Tis true that some of these are contracts, some are letters from the New York office, others contain circulars and advertising matter, and we presume some of them are bills, but the majority of the letters are of congratulatory character. Carl Senning put one over on his friends last week and enacted a little scenario written sometime following Adam's period in which there was a considerable sprinkling of "I wills."

To get right down to the sober section, if it is possible, of this story, Carl F. Senning took unto himself a bride, and the hearts of many are accordingly broken. The dope is something like this:

Miss Rose Stewart Watson, daughter of George Watson, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., an accomplished horsewoman and one of the best known exhibitors at the New York horse shows, after considerable importuning on the part of the groom, accepted Mr. Senning at the Belmont Hotel, where on Friday, January 12, the Rev. Dr. George Smyth, of Hartsdale, N. Y., made two hearts beat as one in the presence of Frederick Duxbury, brother-in-law of the bride, and Miss Anna Wellington, a close friend. It was not exactly a runaway match, for the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World had asked Mr. Senning many weeks ago to tip him off when the date was set. However, the telegraphic announcements to Washington and Louisville, where Mr. Senning formerly resided, came something in the nature of a bombshell, and it is going to be some time before the many friends of the happy one in both cities forgive him for running away in this manner.

SIGNAL ENLARGES STUDIO.

The activities of the Signal Film Company, releasing through the Mutual Film Corporation, have become so great that more room is required at the studio. To provide for this additional space, plans are being drawn and estimates made for the construction of a new row of dressing rooms for the accommodation of the Signal players. There will be twenty of these dressing rooms built on a spacious scale, and each one fitted up with hot and cold running water.

In addition to these improvements the original stage is to be torn out and a new one built in a more suitable location on the grounds. This new stage will be somewhat larger than the old one, and will be so constructed that it can be converted into an indoor studio for use during rainy weather.

Director General J. P. McGowan has also found the quarters set aside for offices are too cramped, and has ordered the removal of the offices of the company to a larger building on Pasadena avenue. The building into which they are to be moved was originally a residence. This is being thoroughly renovated, partitions are being torn out and others rebuilt to accommodate the office force. The building in which the offices are now located will be left standing for a private office for Mr. McGowan for the time being.

VIOLA DANA AN APOLLO STAR.

Apollo Pictures, Inc., of which Harry R. Raver is the head, will star Viola Dana in a picturesque drama whose setting is New York's famous East Side, with its unusual types and odd situations. Miss Dana's newest vehicle is called "Rosie O'Grady," and will be issued through the Art Dramas program in five episodes. President Raver of the Apollo is enthusiastic over the acquisition of Miss Dana in such a striking production, particularly as "Rosie O'Grady" represents a heavy investment and will undoubtedly prove a strong booking magnet for Art Dramas exchanges. The magnitude of Mr. Raver's second production may be understood by his announcement that no less than five hundred people are seen in the cast supporting Miss Dana.

LOUISE GLAUM STARS IN TRIANGLE PRODUCTION

Louise Glaum will soon be presented upon the Triangle program by Thomas H. Ince in a vivid drama of French life, in which she is said to have the strongest and most varied role of her career. Ever since the pronounced hits she registered in "The Wolf Woman" and "Somewhere in France," requests for more Glaum features have poured into the studios at Inceville from exhibitors all over the world. It is confidently predicted that the production now nearing completion will meet all of these demands.

Kid Matinees.

PROBABLY most readers of this department know that the Notable Features Film Company of Salt Lake City, has a theater and that George Editor Carpenter runs it for them, as well as editing Real Reels, their exchange house organ, and doing a few other odd jobs. Lately George Editor has been experimenting with Kid Matinees and spreads the results in his paper. It is a pity we cannot reproduce the entire article, for he offers some new angles as well as confirming the old ones, but we'll give what we can. In the first place, he has found that "Boys' and Girls' Matinees" is a better title as some mature young ladies of twelve and fourteen and some adult males of about the same age object to being seen at "Children's" matinees. Boys' and Girls' Matinees is rather too large a mouthful, but it is along the right lines. Perhaps someone can find a brief title that shall be descriptive and appeal alike to the youngsters and those who are interested in this phase of the business. Of course he knows that the too palpably educational matinee will be as popular with the kiddies as castor oil at Christmas, even if it is just as good for them.

He also strongly advises that the programs of the regular shows be watched to see that they do not defeat the aims of the exhibitor. You cannot, he points out, run a kid matinee in the morning and "Gertie the Ladylike Chambermaid, or the Bigamist's Revenge" later in the day. These kid shows are not always immediately profitable in money. They return a huge profit in the effect they have on the community. Preferably they should be run in conjunction with the various welfare societies and under their patronage and the split should be 50-50 either before or after deducting the cost of the film. It is far better to pay the rental yourself and make it an even split. Naturally Mr. Carpenter used mostly Paramounts, a five-reel and a split cartoon-Ditmar or some such picture, but the feature is one that it is good for children to see; not merely fit.

Most of this has been said before, but it is worth saying again, and that tip on "Boys' and Girls' Matinees" is worth real money. George Editor caught one ten-year-old refusing to go to the Children's Matinee on the plea that it was a show for babies. Most houses now have one or more of these special shows. If you have none, start now and if someone else is using the child welfare clubs, form a neighborhood organization of mothers and teachers if you have not already a Parent-Teachers' Association in your vicinity. You cannot do too much toward building up your house with the public and making it something more than a mere show shop. The real motion picture theater is an institution and not anything less than that.

Took Four Pages.

Recently another Fichtenberg house was opened in New Orleans, the Globe being added to the Dreamland, Alamo, Picto and Plaza. To celebrate the opening a four-page special supplement was gotten out by one of the Sunday papers. There was plenty about the house and a lot of advertising from those who had supplied material for the building. The sheet has red ink ears and tabbed "Fichtenberg Section" and there is more stuff in the regular motion picture section.

Mixed.

The Auditorium Summer Garden, Meyersdale, Pa., came out with a holly border for Christmas. Somehow summer gardens and holly do not seem to mingle aptly, but they got out a nice Christmas program on a Kleine cover and gave a ball midway between Christmas and New Year's. They have adopted the Powers slogan and their program reads "Seven years of knowing how," which is a good line for any program that can use it with truth.

Suspended.

The Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has suspended its house organ until springtime and the summer boarders hit the place together. An eight-page house organ is rather a costly luxury in a small town, but we are selfishly sorry that Motophotograms has quit, because we liked to read Mr. Guimond's stuff. When he takes it out of the moth balls we hope he gets a new title for it.

It Worked.

When Selig's The Ne'er Do Well was launched L. J. Scott, then the V-L-S-E publicity man in Kansas City, suggested as a stunt that an auto be found abandoned in the streets, claimed and the interest kept up until the time came to spring the film title. Ray Burford, of Arkansas City, Kans., was the first to try it and he did not get the film until some months after the stunt had been suggested. He worked it in a town of 7,000 and got more than a column of live news before he sprang the title. As a result, with a 650-seat house and prices twenty-five and thirty-five cents, he pulled $331. It was just as good a stunt the day it was first offered the exhibitors and hundreds of them passed up what eventually proved to be a money maker, probably because they did not have the nerve to try and swing the story. He followed the better course and let the editors in on the stunt in advance, but that did not hurt the value of the story as news and he got front page two days running and roused local interest that was eventually diverted to the film. Don't say this is circus stuff. It is not. Stunt stuff is different if you work it right, and it is good stuff if it is the right sort.

But Mr. Burford "eats up" stunts. When he had Chaplin's The Pawn Shop, he did not decorate his lobby, but he borrowed the window of a leading druggist and set up a burlesque pawn shop there. People wondered so much what the pawn shop was doing in the drug store that they had to find out that it was a show at the theater. That's half the trick—to put your stuff where it will get the greatest amount of attention. The lobby pawn shop is good, but if you can get it some place still more unusual the stunt is even better.

Correct.

J. M. Blanchard, of the Orpheum, Chambersburg, Pa., opines that he has "some" cut for newspaper work. We opine in the same way. It is some cut, a drawn design with the half-tones tacked. The one reproduced was that used for the thanksgiving advertisement, and explains the turkeys. Mr. Blanchard says he is the Blanchard of Sunbury and adds that he has been a long time dead. Not so much dead as sleeping, for there is little that is dead about his present work. And just to help get a good reproduction he sends in his proof on white card instead of print paper. That is why the cut looks so good.

Circusing.

Lately a western exhibitor declaimed against circus stunts, but sometimes they are needed. Louis C. Bernays, of the Lura, Augusta, Ark., sends in a throwaway that is as dizzy as a circus bill. Chrstmas day there will be a balloon sent up to which is attached a basket of gifts, and a real Santa Claus will give presents that evening to all under sixteen. There are two presents given out each day of holiday week. Most managements brace up the week before the holiday, but this is a good will offering and runs holiday week itself, just to make business better for a 300-seat house. The entire bill is worded to emphasize this desire to help the holidays and breathes the Christmas spirit. That sort of circusing pays in a small town with rural territory.

Udells.

Dave Udell, of the Majestic and Crystal, Paxton, Ill., sends in a new batch of advertisements and wants to know if we think he is getting more like C. E. Madden, of the Stillman, Cleveland. He likes the Madden reproductions we have run lately, and they have left their impress upon his own work. He sends along a couple of advertisements that he wrote three years ago and wants to know if we note any improvement. A glance at one of these reproductions is about the best answer, though from the batch of new stuff we have selected one that is not Dave's best or perhaps not quite up to the average. The printer has done his best to spoil the sense of the top half and the looks of the lower half, but as a contrast to the larger space we think that the facts speak for themselves. It takes a three-column space against two and a lot of it is wasted upon a border too large for the space while the text says little. The fact that G. M. Anderson was a millionaire actor never did sell film. The statement that men gossip more than the women probably will. Dave had made a decided advance, but he should find out where the the foreman stacks the empty chases and smite him with one the next time the foreman tries to run in machine lines as in the lower half of the Crystal advertisement. It's easy for the foreman, but he should have used display stuff and he knows it and he probably knows he is a cheater. But that is no reason why Dave should not get mad with himself, too, for letting the foreman put one over on him.

But that Stillman stuff has been run to suggest rather than to establish a model. Dave is a natural born copy writer and he should not spoil his own style in an effort to copy another, no matter how good that other may be. He comments on the use of too heavy type in most theater advertising and points to commercial stuff for comparison. Most theatrical advertisers feel they are being swindled if they are not given the biggest and blackest fonts in the shop. They feel that they want their stuff to be seen, and conditions are almost as bad here in New York as they are out west. It is a mistaken idea which trained advertising men are slowly correcting, but Dave hit upon the idea himself long ago as the numerous reproductions we have made from time to time will show if you turn back your files.

One of his new stunts is to print the ten nicknames most generally given Mary Pickford and offer free admissions for new names along the same general lines. This will make for interest and if you make them matinee tickets the outlay will not be prohibitive.

More Wall Paper.

The Pythian, Belt, Mont., is using the wall paper idea for Wanted—A Home. R. C. Hudson, of the Butte Universal Exchange, sends it in and adds that since he left the management of the Majestic, Portland, to take the management of the exchange, he has been booming business for the Big U in that territory.

He's Reformed.

Larry Hayes used to be an illustrated singer, but says he has reformed and now he does the advertising for the Family theater, Jackson, Mich. He writes:

> Although I have never written either the paper or the department, I have read the World ever since I broke into the exhibiting game, about eight years ago, when I first started as the "ulcerated song" artiste, who entertained (?) you between reels. You know the guy. I reformed, however, about five years ago, and have tried to behave ever since. At present am trying to do advertising for this house, and am submitting some samples of newspaper and program work for criticism. I make no pretence of being an old-timer, but have simply tried to do my best to get business, keeping in mind the town, what appeals to the people, and what has brought money before. I can say, however, that we have made a winner out of what was a "lemon" as a vaudeville house. Playing three changes of Triangle and Fox, straight ten cent admission. Piano only, but will install organ very soon. Capacity 700. Business good. Under separate cover am sending photos of lobby and interior of house. That stage setting is home-made. Black cambric, some flowers we had in the lobby until the flies got too fresh, and some old vaudeville drops cut down. All it cost outside of our labor was for the lumber to build the lattice. It's getting us by until we get rich enough to get a real one. Screen is back of center scene of course. We use about 50 inches in the two papers here each week, that is 50 in each. Space is 70 cents in one paper, and 40 cents in the other. No reading notice or reviews.
> Your department is a great help to me each week, and I don't know what I'd do without it. You will no doubt recognize some stuff in the programs, but dern it, it was what I wanted and I used it, so there.
> Enclosed find check for two bucks. Send me P. T. A. I NEED IT. Well, there's nothing much that I can pass along. Used a half-sheet card offering $1,000 reward for the capture of "Draw Egan" dead or alive, with good results; let in the old folks over 70 free for "Old Folks At Home"; got three Shakespeare clubs to attend "Romeo and Juliet," all with good results. Tell me what I can do to make my work better. That advertising of Madden's of the Stillman is great.

The home-made stage setting looks well. There is a false proscenium of lattice work with trailing vines and flowers backed by black cambric. The opening is screened by a drop; part of an old olio drop. In the photograph it looks extremely well. We reproduce a print of the lobby though the cut does not give the proper suggestion of its depth. Note the seats back of the rail. This gives a suggestion of comfort to the waiting patron that would be lacking were the benches merely placed in the lobby. Somehow the rail suggests the privacy of an apartment off the lobby. The idea is good enough to be passed along. The programs are well done, with a yellow cover and eight white pages. The printer helps a lot by doing his work well. The newspaper advertising all carries a white-letter-on-black title and most of them also use a half tone. Sometimes it would be better to drop the picture and trust more to the type to gain attention. Six-point rule holds most of the cuts together. We do not know what goes on the page, but sometimes a heavier rule or a white margin inside the rule will work better than a cut. Unless a cut either attracts direct attention or tells part of the story it has no place in the advertising, and many cuts do neither. There is a cut of Bill Hart shooting two guns right at the reader that gain attention, but one advertisement shows three portrait cuts that are largely wasted space. The stuff is well written, and as a rule well set. As a whole it is above the average grade.

Stillman Stuff.

The Stillman theater is trying to get its audiences to applaud. It is a good idea in many ways. Most houses are uncannily quiet, but the Stillman points out another reason. If your audiences seem to feel that they have come to a funeral, change this copy and run it yourself:

> We're happy this week. For in "The Matrimaniac" we have a feature that we know everybody will like—and that fact makes the job of running the theater a lot more fun. But it's a trick that's rarely done; every week there are some people (and, confidentially, some weeks there are many people) who tell us that "the music is fine but I don't care about the picture." If it weren't for the people who tell us—that same week—that "there's what I call a real picture—best thing you've had," we don't know what we'd do.
> You can get us to admit, though, that we like this job of trying to please some eleven hundred kinds of preferences in pictures—leaving out the nine hundred that we don't try to please. And right here we want to say again that if you'd just get the habit of applauding—like audiences at the picture-plays in New York and other cities do—we might come nearer to pleasing you every time. When an exhibitor hears applause for a picture, night after night and matinee after matinee—and can measure it against last week's applause; and when he learns just what sort of situations bring out the heartiest evidences of approval from his own audiences, he can be much more sure of what you will or will not like best.

Naturally we are keen to get for you the pictures which you are most apt to like. It may interest you to know that in order to do our most in that direction we pay for four pictures every week, though we can use but one—that we may have the choice of of four and select the best one of the lot. And sometimes we reject all four, and purchase a fifth—if there's a fifth available to us which we think is better than any of the others.

All that this means is that we are sincerely anxious to please you, that we may have your favor and your good-will. We're always willing and ready to go the limit in this direction, and we're always grateful to the people who tell us that they do or don't like a picture we're showing.

But why don't you applaud when you feel like it—so we may surely know how you like it?

Different.

The Victoria, Tamaqua, Pa., used red and green ink for Christmas on its eight-page program, but it used the red ink for one form and the green for the other, four pages in each color. This gives a novel effect as you turn the pages; rather too vivid for regular use, but good at holiday time. The title page is neatly designed, a stripe effect that seems to be about the best that can be gained with one or two colors. All the type is let into panels in the stripes, and the stripes are run over to the back page, which is a bit of thoughtfullness not always followed. It would have been even better had the back page been cut into panels with the stripes not only at top and bottom but for a half-inch at the centre of the page. The effect of the back would be more than doubled and each announcement would then stand out better and land more certainly.

Be Careful.

It pays to read over your stuff and see how it sounds. Here is a clipping from an advertisement of a Farrar picture:

> It was during the making of this picture Miss Farrar met Lou Telegen; their marriage followed shortly after. Wallace Reid supports Miss Farrar.
> Miss Farrar took the lead in Carmen and Temptation with Wallace Reid. Maria Rosa—more thrilling than Carmen, more interesting than Temptation. Miss Farrar's greatest achievement.

This is eight-point stuff in a single column advertisement. The division of the paragraphs seems to start a scandal and the statement might interest Mr. Tellegen and Miss Davenport were it not so obviously a case of not thinking.

The first paragraph should have stopped with the matrimonial item and the awkward opening of the second paragraph could have been replaced by: "Mr. Wallace Reid, who supported Miss Farrar in both Carmen and Temptation, her previous starring vehicles, will again be seen in her support." In the same way what follows could have been made to read more smoothly had it been written: "Maria Rosa is more thrilling than Carmen; more interesting that Temptation. It is Miss Farrar's greatest achievement in film." Clipping words to save a line of space sometimes costs more than the space would.

Program Stuff.

Here is a clipping from the Stillman program that will be serviceable to most exhibitors. It is an excuse that does not sound like one, and that is always the best sort of an excuse. It is written by C. L. Madden:

> The big reason why we can't give you a 100 per cent picture-play every week is that they aren't made. We're willing and anxious to do just that, and we go (we believe) as far as any exhibitor can go to get for you the best things there are, excepting only those biggest feature which require two hours or more in the showing—and which can be counted on the fingers of one hand.
>
> Our standards are high, as you know—so high that we can't find, every week, a picture-play that measures up to them. What we do is get for you the one that we consider the very best of those available; and so it is reasonably sure that you will never see a really poor play here. Further, we aren't quite satisfied with just getting the best we can; we try to give it a production that will make it still better—a musical setting that reflects its atmosphere and stimuates your imagination, and other extra effort in details of production which may make the film as you see it here noticeably different from other productions of it.
> But when it comes to claiming that you can see here, every week, a picture-play as good as your 100 per cent favorite, we just don't do it.
>
> There's another side to it, too. Tastes differ. The play which you consider just right may be considered very poor by, say, ten per cent of the audience—and even partially offensive in some regard to another percentage. What we have to depend upon there is majorities, and our own judgment. We have never yet seen a film that pleased everybody in any given audience.
>
> But you can come here every week in the full confidence that we will have for you the best that we can get—and we think that nine times out of ten you will be sincerely pleased. What we are always striving for is to provide such programs that you will want to come to the Stillman whether or not you know what is on the bill—confident that it will be entertainment you can enjoy.

Better Still.

The campaign book for Pathe's The Challenge is about the best that company has yet turned out. One good point is setting the press copy in twelve-point imitation typewriter type, which will be a lot easier on the competitor than the usual unleaded eight-point Roman. The book gives a complete layout of stuff for newspaper work, cut frames, set with suggested matter for this play, but capable of being used repeatedly for any Gold Rooster attraction; music and effect cues, reel end cues for the operator and about all else that is needed even by an inexperienced man to advertise the feature. And it is only about three years ago that the first of these campaign books was privately prepared and sold for $5.

Booming Singles.

The Gaumont press department sends in a four pager gotten out by Walter Golding, of the Imperial, St. John's, N. B., for the Gaumont travelogues. It is roughly 4 by 6 inches, on cheap stock, but well worded with such lines as "A Holiday Gift that will last you the whole year through," "Arm chair visits to the most interesting places on the globe," "Have you been vacationing with us?" and similar catchlines. It is the right idea. Probably most persons come to see the dramatic feature, but more would come if the single reel topicals and travel pictures were better boomed by the management and even the drama lovers would have greater respect for what managers are too apt to regard—and treat—as fillers. Travel pictures are not merely shorts with which to fill the program. They are in themselves features, capable of drawing to the house persons who would not come to see Theda Bara playing Hamlet to Chaplin's Ophelia. There are many of these who do not even know about the travelogues. If you pay money for their rental, get your money back and as much more as you can by advertising them. If they can't make you money—if your drama pulls all the patrons, who add these subjects? It is not the length that makes the worth of a subject; it is the interest created, and you can help to raise these short lengths to their proper place in your program by giving them good publicity and acting as though you thought pretty well of them yourself. Even houses like the Strand and Rialto, here in New York, are plain "pup foolish" in not making more of their shorts on the program.

Please Don't.

Don't spoil the climax of your story. It is bad enough, at best, to preserve suspense when most playgoers know that the heroine must be rescued, but don't make it worse by giving positive assurance that the heroine will be rescued. At least give the director a chance to make them think that perhaps this is one of the infrequent unhappy ending stories. Three recent house programs make the same error, and this is not an exception to the general rule.

Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

Variety.

SEEKING to defend the studio staff writer, one debater lately pointed out that some such thing was an absolute necessity, since it was not always possible to get material from the free lances that would prove suitable. The studio must have its staff men to ensure a proper supply of material. That argument would be all very well if the staff were so formed as to be capable of giving a supply of suitable material. The trouble is that the staff seldom can do this unless, as is sometimes the case, these staff writers are permitted to look over the work send in from the outside and so freshen their imaginations.

The trouble is that no man can work beyond his capacity and do good work, but he can work beyond his capacity and produce mediocrity, and with an author on salary and the present necessity for retrenchment, there is too strong a temptation to "save" money by taking the poor stories of the overworked staff man.

In the last week we have read three fiction stories among others. One of these was a series story in the magazine section of a Sunday newspaper. The man who wrote it wrote two or three humorous stories so much above the average that he established his reputation almost overnight. Now he writes more junk than any three beginners and most of it is published because he has a name. The particular story we read was inane to the point of childishness. It was hack work and poor hack work. A second story was in a weekly magazine. It was written by a man whose signature appears in three or four magazine a month. We have counted six in a single month. Running out of plots, he used the theme of a current Broadway dramatic success. It was briskly told, but it lacked novelty of idea and treatment. It finds its parallel in a five reel feature recently released without any credit to the source. Both the hack writer and the hack photoplay writer stole because they were out of ideas.

A third story was from an equally prolific writer. This man trusts more to his dialogue than to his plots to get the stuff over. The dialogue was good, but the local color was so bad that the story was almost an insult to intelligence. It was hack work, just as the work of the studio staff man is hack work, and it does not help the magazines to run such stuff any more than it helps the studios to put on a story merely because it does not have to be paid for. There is bound to come a change in the studio attitude toward the free lance and the first man to really go into the open market and buy good material will be the first man to clean up.

The Right Spirit.

Not long ago we foregathered with a man who had been a star writer but who let the market and its changes grow away from him. He was pretty well discouraged and about ready to turn to something else, and we suggested that as a valedictory some paper might give him important money for his views of the film game today. He could have written a corking good story along these lines, but we were better pleased to get a letter of which this was the essence:

> Well, I wrote the S. E. P. article, 5,000 burning words of it, and, having gotten it out of my system, says I to myself, says I: You poor mutt! You certainly are the prize specimen of the cream of the Whine Club! You beat the game when it was easy, but you can't beat it when it is hard. Suppose, instead of this bleat, you get to work and write some stories that are so darned good that somebody just has to buy 'em. And other words to like effect. Whereupon I threw that perfectly dandy article away—Lord knows I need a thousand dollars, or whatever it might bring, but do not want it bad enough to see that squeal in print—and am doing the best I can to make good on the so-good-they-have-to-buy-them proposition. I have turned out one that comes pretty near making the class, I think. We'll see, anyhow.

That's the right idea. If you were good enough to beat the game when it was easy, you are good enough to play the game now if you will run a little and catch up with the head of the procession. It is not an easy game at the moment, but it is and always will be a game that can be beaten by the better-than-ordinary story.

Moods.

It is useless to try to write when you do not feel like it, but it is foolish to permit yourself not to feel like writing if you ever expect to get anywhere. The habit of regular work is most valuable to the writer. Better twenty minutes a day every day than a couple of hours once a week. If you put off writing too long you get out of the habit and must spend more or less time pulling yourself together again. You write regularly and you keep in the spirit of your work, but work one week a month and you will find that it takes you the better part of a day to get into swing again. It is no different from prize fighting or distance running. You must either keep in trim or each time you must undergo more or less strenuous training, and since you write scripts more often than you box or do Marathons, it is easier to keep in trim than to work up to it. Habit counts for much, so get the habit.

Here It Is.

For a long time writers on script topics have been talking about the Kalem "whiskers" script and telling more or less clearly what it is, but it has never been published before now. Through the courtesy of William Wright we are able to give this gem to the world. It was written by an actor who later made a name for himself in pictures and learned a lot more about them than he knew when he wrote this. It is given verbatim, as what is generally considered to be the prize boob script:

And this was seriously offered for sale and not written as a joke.

Fancy Work.

It is insane to suppose that you can make a hit with an editor by writing for style. The editor doesn't want style and he knows that no one who knows how to write a story will bother to put in the flourishes. The moment he gets a script all trimmed up with verbal embroidery, he knows that it is a boob script and passes it up. Only the beginner and the would-be literary light tries to impress an editor with his style. The old-timers know that the editors want not style but stories. Style is generally used to cover up a lack of action. In print this is all very well. In photoplay, style will be seen by the editor alone, and he doesn't care for it. He is looking for action and lots of it. Give it to him. If you can write style, stick to fiction, for it is a cinch that you spend so much time over style that you forget to put in plot.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 172.

Explain, in detail, the various items of danger which are brought about by over-speeding the film. Be careful and give them all.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 164.

The Roll of Honor on question 164 was, as I expected, very light. It consists of C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta; John W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo.; A. M. Malley, Edmonton, Alberta.

I think, on the whole, W. B. Allen submits the best answer.

Reply to Question No. 164.

By W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Question:

What advantages are there in the auto-transformer as against the straight two-coil transformer

The Answer:

For some kinds of work the auto-transformer has no advantage over the two-coil transformer, in fact it has disadvantages. But for certain other types of work the auto type is better. Each type of transformer is designed and built for a certain line of work. The auto-transformer is only used where the ratio of transformation is relatively small. Because of the fact that the primary and secondary is all in one coil it would be dangerous to use it on high voltage, therefore the two-coil transformer is invariably used where the supply is high tension. For low voltage work the auto-transformer is superior in every way. It has a higher efficiency, and is much smaller and lighter for a given capacity, hence it costs less to build. The nearer equal the primary and secondary voltages are the greater is the saving in copper in the secondary coil. I think this is all the question was intended to cover, and it is rather hard to answer it properly and fully without going into the theory of each type, and making a lengthy comparison which would, of course, require a lot of space, and probably result in my answer being "thrown out."

Brother Allen is right. The auto-transformer is cheaper to build, but it cannot be used directly on high tension lines, nor is it safe to use it where there is any possible danger of high pressure current reaching its coils.

It Is to Laugh.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., says:

> Here is a good one, and the connection is so apt and the entertainment, so genuine that I could not let it get past. In my article, October 7th issue, I claimed there was a more or less prevalent belief that the E.F. of the condenser set should match the E.F. of the objective. In your comment upon the same you said you did not think anyone held any such absurd idea at this late date. However, in the enclosed marked article we see that identical method actually recommended, and that too by one who apparently poses as an authority on the subject.

Brother Martin sends in a page of what purports to be the "projection department," of a trade paper. Under the caption: "Meniscus-Bi-Convex Condensers Again," the editor of the aforesaid department says, in part: "And when ordering you should give the distance from machine te screen, as well as the size of picture being projected, so that the proper combination may be sent you." Meaning proper condenser combination.

It is to laugh! Giving advice on the optics of the projector is rather a hot proposition right now, even for those of us who have spent the best part of the past twelve or eighteen months very largely in the study of that one subject, but such an utterly out-of-date, crude piece of advice as this, which neglects all the vital points involved, and answers along the ideas long since thrown in the rubbish heap, was hardly to be expected. But the matter is, after all, one between the aforesaid advice-giver and his correspondent, and if they are both satisfied, why, Brother Martin, "we should worry." It would seem, however, that the thirty-ninth verse of the sixth chapter of St. Luke might be studied with profit by the editor in question and his victim.

Generator Voltage.

F. H. Hibbard, New York City, N. Y., arises to remark:

> I note with interest your comment on the inquiry of Mr. R. E. Wicker, Pinehurst, N. C., November 25th issue of the World. Upon what reasoning does anyone base a conclusion that the 110-volt generator operated at 60 volts will burn up? The current which the armature will carry is limited by the size of the armature conductors and its radiation characteristics. The normal full load current can therefore be carried by the armature at 60 volts, the same as at 110, but at the lower voltage the output will be reduced to approximately the value of 2.7 K.W. which Mr. Wicker mentions. The difference in the machine at the lower voltage, that is with the additional field resistance, lies in the fact that the field flux is greatly reduced. At normal full load amperage the armature reaction is the same, regardless of the voltage, but with the weaker field the effect of the armature reaction will be greater, and the regulation of the machine not so good. That is to say, the operator would find that when operating at 60 volts and loading the machine up to the full load current, the voltage would fall off rapidly and the field controller would have to be used to bring it up again.
> The efficiency of the generator is determined by the losses, and the losses, as you should know, are proportional to the square of the current in the generator armature. Therefore, so long as the normal full load amperage is not exceeded, the losses will not be increased and the efficiency will not be greatly impaired.
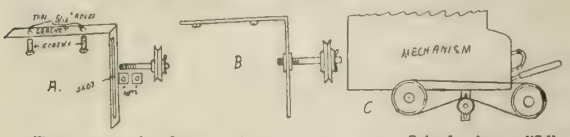
> It appears, therefore, that the 110-volt generator could be used at 50-60 volts, although it is true that if the operator were too reckless in cutting out field resistance he would stand some chance of over-heating the machine. It also appears that with the generator operating at 50 volts and 60 amperes, which I imagine is somewhere near the normal current of the 110-volt generator in question, it could be run by the 4 h.p. motor. This current value, however, would represent the maximum output of the set with the 4 h.p. motor. The simplest thing for your correspondent to do would be to obtain a field controller that will double the resistance at present in series with his field, and enable him to cut down to 60 volts. By a short trial he can determine what the machine will do, but with reasonable care the armature will not burn up. The result of operating the machine at low voltage is to change the regulation.

I was just a little bit amused at Brother Hibbard when he said in one place: "Upon what reasoning does anyone base a conclusion that the 110-volt generator operated at 60 volts will burn up?" And when in next to the last sentence he remarks: "But with reasonable care the armature will not burn up." Friend Hibbard therefore admits, at least, by inference, that the armature would have a strongly added tendency to over-heat. I also note where he says: "As you ought to know." Well, Brother Hibbard, if I really knew everything I "ought to know" in order to answer the range of questions which reach my desk, I certainly would be one stem-winding, double back-action dyed-in-the-wool wonder. I would have to rival Thomas Edison as an electrician; be somewhat superior in optical lore to the Bausch & Lomb Scientific Department; know more about carbons than Speer, the National, and all the foreign manufacturers rolled into one; be past-master of the mechanics of the projection machine; have all data regarding ventilation at my finger tips, and in addition to this cough up ideal operating room plans, et cetera, at will. After eight years of experience in answering questions, with the consequent continual study which is necessary to place me in position to even keep within sight of the head of the procession of advanced knowledge on the art of projection, I have at least accumulated some considerable fund of information, but it does not follow I am an expert dynamo constructor, versed in all the different fields of knowledge that particular line of human endeavor calls for. Do you get me, Brother Hibbard—do you get me?

A Boost.

J. A. Merklein, Jersey City, N. J., says:

I enclose herewith sketch of a method of tightening my motor drive belt which I have been using successfully for some time. On damp days I used to have a lot of trouble with the belts; they would be loose and slip, which meant loss of speed. To overcome the trouble I invented the little device.



From any hardware store procure one 3-inch iron "L" bracket, same shape as shown in sketches A. B. Drill two three-sixteenth-inch holes in one end of the bracket, and two holes to match in the underside of the head of the mechanism. Thread the two in the mechanism to fit two screws which you have previously secured. In the other angle of the "L" bracket make a slot about two and one-half inches long by one-fourth-inch wide. You will then need a shaft and a V pulley, which you will attach to the slot in the bracket, as shown. The V pulley will have to set out far enough to engage the belt. The whole thing is shown in sketch C. Sketch A shows the various parts required.

And now let me say a word in praise of Brother Nugent of the Halsey theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. I visited his theatre, without his knowledge, on the evening of November 12th. When I entered Part 3 of the five-reel Triangle "Plain Jane" was being shown. There is no keystone effect at all, although the operating room is away up in "nigger heaven." The light was well handled and his blending at change perfect. To make a long story short, although I was in a critical frame of mind, I found nothing to criticize. Brother Nugent's work is good, and he should receive credit for that fact.

We are glad to give it to him, Brother Merklein—very glad indeed. It is much more pleasant to praise than to blame, but unfortunately for me the office of the editor is not to do what he would like to do, but what ought to be done, and all too often, I am sorry to say, censure is deserved.

As to the belt tightener, it is submitted for the benefit of our readers. It is, I think, adapted for use with the Simplex machine only.

Fredericton, New Brunswick.

In the accompanying picture we show a map of J. J. Merriman's features, together with front elevation of his Simplex machine. Brother Merriman is operator at the Gem Theater, Fredericton, N. B. I had the pleasure of meeting him while up in that country, and can vouch for the fact that he is one of the "reg'lar guys." Brother Merriman says:

> I have a 59 foot throw, projecting a picture to a plaster screen with A.C. current. Get excellent results. And now here is a little puzzle. Sometimes my Simplex runs easy; at other times it runs hard. I use the regular Simplex oil, and do not understand why this should be. This, however, is about the only difficulty I experience. Can you tell me where I can get some slow printing lantern slides for making slides from newspaper copy, and work similar to that where it requires great detail? I cannot get them in Canada.

Friend Merriman's address is Gem Theater, Fredericton, N. B. Will some operator who knows about the slides give him the required address; also has any Simplex operator had similar trouble, and been able to locate it. If so kindly advise the department.

St. Louis Operators to Dance.

On Thursday evening, February, 8, 1917, the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union, No. 143, I. A. T. S. E., will give their annual ball. The affair is in the hands of a very able committee made up of John Nick, chairman; A. L. Stone, secretary; Ruby Srenco, treasurer; Fred C. Mosier, and William Robinson.

It is expected that the light effects will be something out of the ordinary. The committee is doing everything possible to make the ball one of the events of the season in the city by the Father of Waters, and a glance at the personnel of the aforesaid committee convinces us that their efforts will be crowned with success.

Eighteen Amperes.

A. C. Hartman, manager Omaha Film Exchange, Omaha, Neb., says:

> We note your comment in the Department, Page 110, November 18th issue, regarding number of amperes being used in the Dundee theater. A year ago if you had told me that it would be possible to get as beautiful a picture as the Dundee is putting on, using only 18 amperes of current, I certainly would have doubted the statement. The credit for this remarkable performance is really due to our operator, A. B. Bradley, a member of Local Union 343, Omaha. As Mr. Bradley is also machine salesman for the Omaha Film Exchange, he had, previous to the opening of the Dundee, collected a miscellaneous lot of carbons in broken packages from what stock we had on hand in odd sizes and makes. This is how he stumbled onto the combination of a ½-inch cored Siemen carbon above and a ⅝-inch solid Electra below. At first I thought there must certainly be something wrong with the ammeter, but tests proved the instrument to be correct.
> We are glad to note you will be in the west some time this spring, and will certainly appreciate your calling upon us. Meanwhile please find enclosed statement from perfectly reliable theater managers and operators. I would like to have you test this out for yourself when you come.
> The measurements under which we are obtaining these results are: Gold King screen 12 x 16 feet, picture covering the entire screen; distance of projection 97 and a fraction feet; width of house 30 feet, inside measurement; auditorium well lighted; a combination of a 7½-inch meniscus lens in back and a 6½-inch bi-convex in front; from condenser to aperture plate is 14 inches; the back focus of the objective lens is 4½ inches, and its E. F. length is 5¾ inches; distance of crater to condenser is 5 inches.

The foregoing seems to be utterly impossible, because, while we used to project what we considered a pretty fair picture with current taken through a 25 ampere rheostat which after a month or two use only really delivered about 20 amperes, still by comparison with the illumination of today the picture was really quite dull, but there are, however, other equations which make for large loss of light. First: the crater is 5 inches from the lens, meaning presumably the flat surface, and this is very, very bad indeed. The distance from condenser to film is given as 14 inches, and that makes for considerable loss of light with an objective of that diameter working at 4½ inch back focus. Now, I would suggest a trial of the following, and would like very much to have a report on it: one 6½-inch meniscus and one 6½ bi-convex lens close together, with 16 inches from the center of the bi-convex lens to the aperture. The arc to be advanced until the spot is (a) 1½ inches in diameter; ((b) 1¾ inches in diameter. This should bring your arc to within less than 3¼ inches of the lens, and ought to result in a very decided increase in illumination. The following statement accompanied Mr. Hartman's letter.

> We, the undersigned, have personally attended the Dundee Theatre during a regular performance and have witnessed a perfectly projected sixteen foot picture at a throw of 97 feet. A Baird projector was used, taking current from a Hertner transverter. The carbons were ½ cored above and ⅝ solid below, and the ammeter registered 18 amperes.
> Joseph F. Vasko, Jr., owner and manager of Columbia and Gem Theatres; Robert W. Murray, operator Muse Theatre, member Local 343; M. D. Brannon, operator, Local 343; J. C. Maxwell, operator Hipp Theatre, Local 343; Jos. P. Bean, Gem Theatre, Local 343.

If you will turn to page 287 of the third edition of the Handbook, you will find that for less than 20 amperes D.C. ½ inch cored carbon above and ⅝ inch solid below is recommended, therefore Brother Bradley has accidentally done precisely what the Handbook would have told him to do. On page 286, I say: "Below 20 amperes D.C., I think ½ inch cored above and ⅝ inch solid or cored below will serve the purpose very well." On page 287 the table makes it ½ inch and 7/16 inch for 20 to 25 amperes.

Meeting of Good Fellows.

Sixty miles north of Gotham, on the shores of the stream named after Explorer Hudson, in the village of Newburg, there recently occurred a meeting of two good fellows. The aforesaid convocation took place and was held by and between one Frank Rembusch, often dubbed Mirror Screen for short, and one J. H. Genter, better known as the original and super-enthusiastic booster of Mirroroid. Oh, yes, and by-the-way, there was a third party to the meeting, namely, Mrs. J. H. Genter. Yes, and still, a fourth party in the shape of Mr. Turkey, though, at the end of the meeting only the framework of the last named remained. In lieu of the missing parts, however, there was a placid, contented look upon the faces of the three survivors, and a rotundity of form not present when the meeting began. In other words, Brother Rembusch helped Mr. and Mrs. Genter massacre the corpse of the Thanksgiving turkey.

Just what took place at this historical gathering the historian sayeth not, but according to Madame Rumor deep laid plans were formed to benefit the screen manufacturing business, which, of course, means benefiting the whole moving picture industry. Be that as it may, however, I know Rembusch enjoyed his dinner because I've been there myself and can bear testimony to the fact that Brother Genter's table is a mighty good one under which to repose your feet. Can't be beat, my boy, can't be beat. I would have liked to have joined the happy throng and intend to get good and even with Genter for not issuing an invitation. By golly, I am going up there some of these days and deliberately eat him out of house and home.

The Nicholas Power Company.

Since the birth of the year 1917, the boys down at 90 Gold street have been, as they always are, extremely busy. Nicholas Power himself is quite some considerable personage any way you view him, and anything that gets past his eye is qualified to get into heaven by passing through the eye of the smallest needle made.

Another important cog in the Power Company is Edward Earl, vice president and treasurer, who is a prototype of what is highest and best in American business life. To Mr. Earl's untiring energy, his bland affability and tremendous organizing power no small part of the success of the Power Company is due. Those who have not met him have missed knowing one who is that rather rare combination, a thoroughly good fellow and a keen, capable business man.

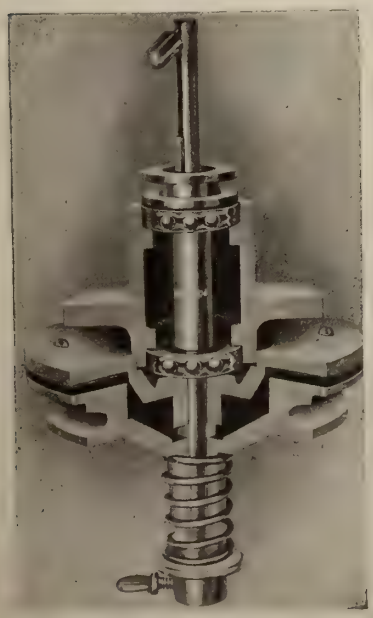

Fig. 2.—Take-up Friction; Sectional View Showing Construction.

Then, too, there is John F. Skerrett, who occupies the general manager's chair, and fills it too! You can get an argument out of Mr. Skerrett any old time, without even one-half of a try, and the worst part of it is he generally manages to either make you out wrong or prove you a liar, he doesn't care particularly which, but he is a good fellow at that, and as I said before, he fills the chair he occupies. Out in the main office, in a sanctum sanctorum all his own, we find Will C. Smith, assistant general manager, who is busier than a bumble bee in a red clover field.

Of course, we need not bother about mentioning Mr. Uhleman, because he has been there so long that, like the wall paper in a boarding house, he is a fixture; the Nicholas Power Company without Uhleman would be like a soap kettle without any bottom. He is superintendent of the factory; also he is quite some considerable superintendent, as anyone will tell you who is acquainted with affairs at 90 Gold street. Seriously, however, the Nicholas Power business organization is most emphatically not open to criticism, and the proof of that fact is found in the business they do, both in America and other countries.

During the past year the company has developed its export trade until the order department is now yelling for help, and Superintendent Uhleman is demanding a new lot of machines in order to keep up with the same. Friend Uhleman is, however, hampered, and that means the company is hampered, by inability to secure machinery which has been ordered, and should have been delivered months ago.

Fig. 3.—New Tension Device.

During the year there have been certain minor changes made in the projector substantially, as follows: First, in place of the two pins which fit in two slots in the hub of the fly wheel to lock the shaft and the wheel together, a "Woodruff" key has been substituted. This key is similar in shape to what you would get if you split a one-half inch round rod of iron down its center for half an inch, and then sawed the resultant two halves off. These two halves would be, and constitute, two "Woodruff" keys. Put in another way, it is a key which is round on one side and flat on the other, the flat surface measuring something like one-half an inch across. This key presents several advantages as against the old pins and slots. It is a very simple matter to remove it, merely by placing a screw-driver underneath the end or tapping gently on its end. Also, whereas the old pins used to give considerable trouble when the wheel was improperly placed on the shaft, the "Woodruff" key is practically indestructible. By welding flat spring steel on the aperture plate tracks, a practically non-wearing surface has been presented to the film.

A big and very genuine improvement is the substitution of a new tension device in the upper magazine for the old, and, if I may be pardoned for saying it, rather inadequate spring attached to the magazine door. The manufacturer is not altogether to be blamed for the old condition, inasmuch as the standard of measurement of the hole in the hub of the film reel is still the same as it was when reels carried but a few hundred feet of film. The manufacturer, thus, as can be seen, was compelled to adhere in spindle construction to the small diameter dimension, which did not permit of sufficient stock to design a proper tension and sufficiently strong holding arrangement applied to the spindle itself.

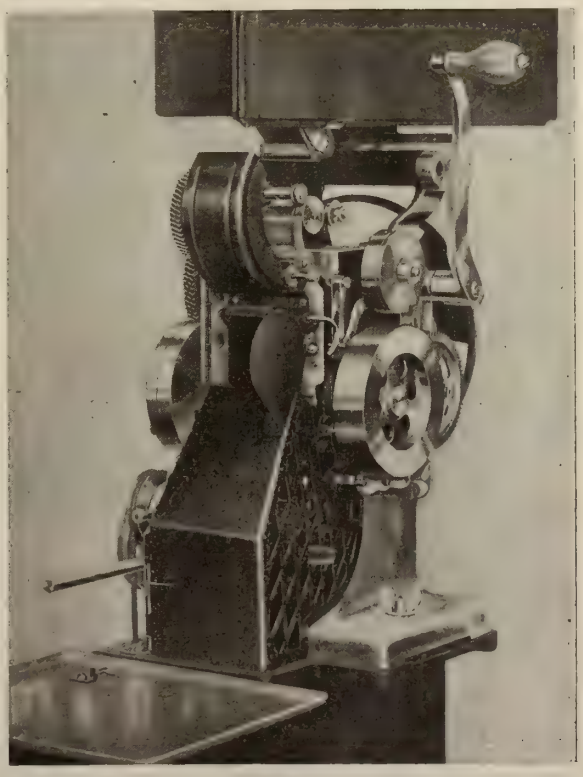

Fig. 4.—General View of Mechanism.

The new tension device is illustrated in Figure 3. It is fastened in the upper right-hand corner of the magazine. It consists of an arm hinged to the magazine in the upper right-hand corner, and at the point of hinging there is a flat steel spring which normally holds the arm tightly against the reel. At the outer end of the arm is a round bearing surface, which comes down against the hub of the reel, applying its pressure in a circle around the spindle upon which the reel rides. This method serves two purposes; first, it supplies adequate tension in a very acceptable form. Second, it holds the reel on the spindle when the operator (do not tell this to anybody; the operator is not supposed to open the magazine door to see how much film is on the reel, but—he does it just the same) opens the magazine door to look in.

The gate latch of the mechanism has been improved in that it is now manufactured in one piece, and is made of sufficient length so that it is kept away from the heat of the spot, all of which is a convenience to the operator. It speaks well for the Power's machine that it has only been found necessary to make these comparatively few changes during the period of twelve months. A thing must be pretty good if it can stand the wear and tear of a whole year without any radical changes in construction being found necessary.

In closing I want to extend to the Nicholas Power Company, from the Projection Department, and from the Moving Picture World, our best wishes for a prosperous year. The company is itself very progressive. Its product has stood the test of time, the Nicholas Power machine being the oldest now in the market, with the single exception of the Edison.

Mr. Skerrett, general manager, in conversation with the editor, made the following pertinent statement:

"It seems to me that one of the greatest commendations the American-made projection machine has ever received, or could possibly receive, and one of the best proofs of its superior construction is found in the fact that, although American-made machines, including our own, are shipped literally to the four corners of the earth, and come into direct competition with all makes of foreign made machines, the experience of this company is that wherever the American-made machine gains foothold, its use increases, and, although placed in the hands of men unfamiliar with the American product, criticism appears to be almost entirely absent; in fact, commendation takes its place."

Impure Dyes.

John W. Creamer, Chillicothe, Mo., writes:

> In your opinion what is the seat of the trouble which caused the damage to the samples of film I am enclosing? The letter from the exchange explains its position in the matter, but, nevertheless, I dispute its correctness, and firmly believe the exchange to be in error. They claim there is something wrong with my machine, but if this is true why did it only injure this particular portion of the film, and not injure any other films at all? Moreover, I have gone over the machine carefully and can find absolutely nothing wrong. Now, Brother Richardson, you know, as well as I and all other operators know, that no machine could tear up a film in that way for fifteen feet without causing a stop. At the very least one would certainly lose the lower loop. I therefore claim that the exchange is in error in saying I did the damage. If it did, then would it not treat all reels the same? Upon close inspection you will note that one edge of one piece of film is creased and partly cracked. Now I do not believe any machine is guilty of the damage. The film is very brittle stock. The reel had been rewound just once too often upon a lop-sided, bent reel, with result that part of it, the film, was damaged by the metal sides, and partly creased, which, of course, would help start a crack if the film was brittle, as it most certainly was in this case. It is also possible that I rewound it on a bad reel, which put on the finishing touches, so that the exchange actually received the film in the condition claimed. Now if a sharp idler would cut the film for fifteen feet, or a deposit of emulsion would do it, it would keep on cutting it. (Not necessarily, Friend Creamer. The deposit of emulsion might possibly be torn away, or the idler might move slightly.—Ed.) Also if the film ran off the sprocket there would be indentations.
> I am having trouble with dynamo of my motor generator set. The commutator is covered with a black deposit. I cleaned this off until the commutator shone, and after ten minutes it was as black as before. What is the cause? Inferior grade of brushes, or brushes too soft?
> I would like to register a complaint about the type of tension the new Simplex has in the upper magazine. It squeaks too much; also if the upper reel is very thick the tension device works the magazine door slightly, and eventually the door comes open. Also the take-up tension is decidedly too tight, and there seems no way of weakening it without cutting off a part of the spring. You can tighten the tension, yes, but how can you loosen it?

With regard to the film, Brother Creamer, this department has received many complaints of the splitting of tinted film. In fact the complaints became so frequent that I took the matter up with the Eastman Company, who went into it exhaustively and determined the fact that the fault lies in the dyes used for tinting. You know, since the trouble in Europe started, we have been unable to import dyes, and the domestic breed renders the emulsion hard and creates a decided tendency to crack the celluloid beneath. I have had the matter up with some of the larger manufacturers, and the tinting of film is being limited to the lowest possible degree at this time, just on this account. You will note that the yellow film of which complaint is made is quite heavily tinted, and I do not think there is any question but the base of the damage lies in the dyes. Most likely rewinding on a crooked reel helped the matter along very considerably. I don't think the damage was done in a projection machine at all. I would again call the attention of producing companies to the need for caution in using domestic dyes. The fact that the damage only showed on a short portion of the film does not disprove the dye theory.

There is also another lesson in this, this time for the exchange, viz.: Get the best obtainable reels and keep your reels in perfect condition. It is, as this department has time and again pointed out, little less than crass stupidity to place a valuable film on a weak, cheaply constructed reel, or a reel in bad condition, which might, and probably will, cause more damage to the film in one rewinding than a dozen good reels would cost.

As to the trouble with your commutator, your data are insufficient to allow me to form a very decided opinion as to what is wrong. Such a condition may be brought about by several things, each one of which ought to be accompanied by considerable sparking, but you have not mentioned anything of that kind. First: Perhaps the mica insulation needs under-cutting, or, if it is under-cut, then possibly you are using a brush which is too soft and the under-cut is filled up with a combination of powdered mica, dust and paraffine which ought to be thoroughly cleaned out. This can best be accomplished by breaking a hack-saw blade in two, grinding the broken end to a square, sharp point, or corner, and carefully drawing it through the grooves between the commutator bars. It is also possible that the condition is brought about by the brush containing too much paraffine, or a poor grade of brush. But you will have to describe the condition more closely, particularly with regard to sparking. After having cleaned your commutator, and cleaned the under-cut, if you find that is the seat of the trouble, lay a strip of No. ½ sand paper on the commutator, sand side out, rest the brushes on this paper, and, with the tension on, draw the sand paper back and forth around the commutator a few times in order to clean off the contact end of the brush thoroughly. If you have one of the new Handbooks I would recommend that you study General Instruction No. 8, Pages 372 to 380 inclusive, which covers care of the commutator. I cannot possibly print all this, since, as you will observe, it covers eight pages of the Handbook. I would earnestly recommend that you get the book, if you haven't a copy, because this is only one of hundreds of things which are dealt with far more exhaustively than it is possible to deal with them in the department.

As to the Simplex magazine tension, why that matter is respectfully referred to the Precision Machine Company for attention.

Cole's Picture Machine.

N. E. Stevens, Calgary, Alta., sends in answer to Question 166 and asks:

> Can you give me any information concerning the Coles' picture machine? I have never seen this projector, and would like to see your description and opinion of it in print. The boys in Calgary are looking forward to your visit, and sincerely hope nothing will occur to change your plans and cut us out.

No danger of that, Brother Stevens. I will be there all right, though it will not be until some time the latter part of April.

As to the Coles' picture machine, I described the mechanism a long time ago in the department, when it was known as the "Cameron" machine. I cannot consume valuable space, which is needed for other purposes, in again describing a projector which is not yet on the market. Just why the Coles' Picture Machine Corporation does not do something besides maintain an office, deponent sayeth not. They have been telling me for the past year: "We are going to have the machine out very soon," but up to date that is all it has amounted to. The intermittent of the Coles' machine will prove a novelty to operators. It is an oscillating movement, which could most nearly be described as a modified beater movement, though it does not at all resemble the beater movement, at least in so far as its mechanical construction be concerned. As soon as the machine is actually placed on the market this department will supply full and complete description and information concerning it. Until that time, nothing doing. We are not looking for matter to fill space, but for space in which to place matter awaiting publication.

DO NOT use any hard, sharp instrument to scratch away the accumulations of emulsion, because such an instrument is liable to score the plate, thereby causing worse scratches than before. If the aperture plate is of very hard metal a piece of soft brass may be used in extreme cases for clearing away accumulations of gelatin. It is better, however, to clean them away with the finger nail, followed by a cleansing with a moistened cloth, going over it two or three times with fresh portions to make sure that none of the dissolved gelatin is left adhering in a thin, invisible coating upon the metal. It is permissible, especially in damp weather, to lubricate the aperture plate very lightly with Three-in-One oil or vaseline, or in cases where these are not available rubbing the ball of the finger against the side of the nose or on the scalp will produce sufficient natural oil to lubricate the plate nicely. In using vaseline or lubricating oil extreme care must be taken not to use too much, a small dab of vaseline smeared on some convenient place on the inside of the camera, such as the inside of the door, being sufficient to last for months, barely touching the ball of the finger to the edge of this spot of vaseline, providing a great sufficiency for the purpose. Strictly speaking, the aperture plate is merely the frame of metal surrounding the aperture opening, but in general usage it extends not only to this portion but to all of the metal plate within the side guides above and below the aperture opening, and includes, in most makes of cameras, the film rails as well, which are integral with the plate. The Prestwich camera has a separate aperture plate, held in a groove, which may be removed independently of the film track. The film rails and aperture plate on the emulsion side and the film gate with its pressure plate and pressure rails on the celluloid side, together with the side rails, are the mechanism which holds the film accurately in the focal plane while the picture is being taken, and guide it in its movement while being drawn down for the next succeeding exposure. Unless all of these parts perform their functions accurately and well there will be certain imperfections in the finished negative. Some aperture plates are merely a flat piece of metal, indifferently polished, with the frame opening and the finger slots. The only place in the camera where the surface of the emulsion which records the picture should come in frictional contact is just above and just below the aperture opening, and at this place the contact should be as light as possible consistent with keeping the sensitive surface accurately in the focal plane. The center of the aperture plate, above and below the aperture opening, should be milled out or relieved to a sufficient depth so that the emulsion between the two lines of sprocket holes does not come in contact except at the two places just mentioned. The rails are the portions of the plate left out on each side which bear the friction of the moving film on the edges at the line of perforations. All edges of contact rails coming in contact with the film should be nicely rounded and polished, as well as the edge surrounding the frame opening and the slots in the lower rails through which the fingers work. Although the Pathe camera is one highly estimated by professional cameramen, it is safe to say that nine out of ten owners of Pathe cameras in this country have had the velvet film tracks with which they were originally provided removed and metal tracks and rails substituted.

The gate is the metal plate or door which, in conjunction with the pressure and runner plates, holds the film in contact with the aperture plate. In most cameras this is a true gate working upon hinges which is held closed by one or more firm catches. When open it allows free access to the aperture plate for cleaning and for threading the film. In some makes, however, it is a mere plate held upon springs, and only recedes far enough to allow the film to be threaded through. Such a gate is an abomination, as it does not permit the aperture to be cleaned without taking the camera partially apart with a screw driver. The pressure plate is a plate, generally of metal, resting against springs fastened to the gate which presses the film in contact with the aperture frame. This pressure should be adjustable, as nothing is gained in having a greater stress upon the film than is necessary to keep it in the focal plane. If the pressure is not great enough, however, the film in its passage by the aperture opening will play backward and forward, causing the picture to go in and out of focus in a most annoying manner. There are several varieties of pressure plates, practically all of them being of metal, although it is common to face the friction surface with black felt, short pile velvet or sateen. The pressure plate should be easily and quickly removable so that a ground glass may be substituted for focusing purposes. To eliminate the time wasting occasioned by changing from the pressure plate to the ground glass and back to the pressure plate again many pressure plates are perforated; that is, a hole is made through the plate just the size of the aperture opening, so that the image may be focused directly upon the film while it is still threaded in the camera. As some operators believe that a pressure plate only working at the edges of the aperture is apt to allow a small amount of bulging of the film one way or the other within the aperture opening, one or more narrow bars are sometimes permitted to remain crossing the hole in the aperture plate. In using a solid aperture plate it is generally advisable to use the cloth upon the friction surface, as mentioned above, as metal cannot be smoothly polished without giving a reflecting surface; and a highly polished pressure plate at the back of the film is liable to cause a certain amount of halation by the reflection of high lights penetrating the emulsion and being reflected back upon the film again. The finger rails are important, as they keep the film in contact with the slots through which the fingers, or claws, operate. These runners must be upon strong but light springs, or in some cases the springs themselves are the runners which bring the film into engagement with the claws. When the claws push through the slots to drag the film downward they may come in contact with the segment of film between the two perforations instead of striking in the center of a perforation. If the springs are too stiff and the runner does not spring back with the pressure of the claw against the film the claw will perforate a new hole in the film with burred edges. The function of the spring upon the runner is to allow the film to give away until the finger in its downward passage encounters the first perforation hole in which it engages; the spring pressing the film back in contact with the film rails with the claws threaded in the perforations.

Side Guides.—Having discussed the means by which the film is held in the focal plane without forward or backward movement, we must now turn our attention to the means of maintaining the lateral alignment. Celluloid is subject to considerable shrinkage under various atmospheric conditions. If it is guided in its passage between the gate and the aperture plate by immovable side rails these immovable side rails must of necessity be sufficiently far apart to receive the widest ribbon of film which would be likely to thread into the camera. In that case all film ribbons of narrower gauge would have a certain amount of play, or side weave, between these two guides. For that reason in the better makes of cameras the guide rails on one or both sides are made.

In the Pathe camera the side rails are built upon the principle of a parallel ruler, being held parallel by two cross-arms, each of which works upon a central pivot, so that any adjustment of one side rail is accomplished equally by the other. A small spring draws these rails lightly toward each other when the gate is closed. When the gate is open the rails are spread open by the opened gate, permitting the film to be threaded easily between the rails which close together with a firm, light pressure upon the edges of the film as soon as the gate is closed. This equalization of adjustment upon both sides of the film tends to keep the frames centered between the edges of the film. The amount of this adjustment is so small, however, that other makers prevent side weave by placing the side rail on one side only upon springs. In a very narrow ribbon this has a tendency to push the frames toward the perforations upon one side, but is seldom sufficient to cause any trouble. The Gillon and Universal cameras have the adustable rail upon one side only. The Bell & Howell camera has no side guides but depends for its centering upon two pilot pins which fit the perforations exactly and engage on either side of the aperture during the exposure period, thus making it probably the most reliable camera made for obtaining exact register in double exposure work.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

Announcement.

ANY questions concerning music for the film, suitable instrumentation for motion picture theaters, questions relating to the pipe organ; in fact, any questions, criticisms or suggestions dealing with musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered by Mr. Stuckey through this department. Inquiries should be addressed to Musical Editor, Moving Picture World, 17 Madison avenue, New York City.

The Success of S. L. Rothapfel.

At a time not so far distant the music supplied at the average motion picture house was of a grade about two degrees above that of a blind man's hand organ. The film business wasn't the sixth largest industry in the country then, and the picture houses were still in the dime museum and side show category. Naturally they were operated by managers of the side show stripe, who judged music by its value as a ballyhoo and accordingly placed their old style raucous electric pianos close to the doorway where they would compel the attention of the people on the street. Never mind the people in the audience; their money was in the box office. If the music was not to their taste they could move on and leave vacant seats for others who had a nickel to squander.

That was the first phase. Then, following the player piano came the piano player. His interpretation was about as good as that of his automatic predecessor, except that the mechanical piano played all the notes and he didn't.

But "the movies" were progressing. The places where they were shown were getting cleaner. A better class of people was beginning to patronize them. Prices went up to a dime and managers were overcome by a sudden rush of money to the box office. They could afford more music, so the rough work was taken off the piano player's hands and turned over to a trap drummer. This virtuoso on the cow bell and the auto horn added much indiscriminate atmosphere to the pictures, and his installation was a step in the right direction. A violinist or some one who had been told he was a violinst, was usually added to the ensemble at this period, but the less said about him the better.

Next came the pipe organ, and with that the motion picture began to come into its own from the standpoint of musical accompaniment. Things were possible with an organ which no handful of journeymen musicians could even approach, and the organ business picked up all over the country.

Also certain inventive geniuses began turning out elaborate mechanical orchestras which one man could operate and which could produce practically all the effects originated by the nimble-fingered trap drummer.

Even at this stage, however, there was no intelligence brought to bear in correlating the spirit of the music with the spirit of the pictures. The orchestra and the organ played tunes, that was all.

Then in the grimy little mining town of Forest City, Pa., something happened. A young man there was running a nickel picture show in a dance hall back of a saloon. Scarcely the environment to produce an aesthetic ideal, one would say; yet in those sordid surroundings a desire was born which has been bountifully gratified in recent years and has left its impress wherever motion pictures are shown.

For this young man who ran the picture show and separated the Poles and Huns whenever knives began to flash in the combats incident to pay-day, had an imagination which made thrilling flights into the future. He was gifted with the soul of a musician and an artist, and as he worked he thought, and dreamed and hoped.

That was seven years ago. Today that young man selects the musical numbers for an orchestra which acknowledges no superior save the Metropolitan Opera House. The pictures which that orchestra interprets are presented in a theater which serves as the model for every new motion picture house throughout the country. It has the largest organ in any theater anywhere; its auditorium is lighted by a color system unique in the beauty and variety of its possible effects; it stands on the choicest theatrical location in New York; and it is filled rightly with a clientele which represents quite the opposite extreme from the Polish miners of Forest City. The theater is the Rialto. The young man who directs it is Samuel Rothapfel.

Every new spectacular film production, the kind that constitutes an evening's entertainment, has its specially arranged score. Some of these, notably that for Geraldine Farrar's appearance in "Carmen," was arranged by Mr. Rothapfel. Others has enlisted the services of many well-known composers and directors. The desire for interpretative music has become fixed with the public and their standards of taste in such matters have been immeasurably elevated.

The latest and most gratifying result obtained by presenting classical music in motion picture houses is the increased interest it has created in the opera and the higher class concerts. Thousands of people go to see motion pictures every week, and to get the best pictures they have listened to good music. Symphony concerts and grand opera have limited seasons and comparatively few performances. Also the prices are high. The motion picture houses are open the year round; they give several performances a day, and the price is within the reach of everyone. For this reason Mr. Rothapfel makes the well-substantiated claim that the orchestras in the theaters with which he has been connected have done more to create a popular demand for high-class music than all the symphony orchestras put together.

An Album of National Music for Musicians Playing Weeklies.

The musician playing weeklies is often confronted with the task of supplying National music to many scenes. For example: one scene in a weekly may be laid in Turkey, the next scene in Holland and the scene following in Greece, etc.

While many musicians have memorized a number of National airs, particularly America, Great Britain, Germany and France, the national music of other countries is not always easily memorized.

Carl Fischer publishes an album of National Anthems, Hymns and Patriotic songs containing the following National airs:

AMERICA—"Hail Columbia," "The Star Spangled Banner," "Yankee Doodle," Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," "My Country 'tis of Thee," "Maryland, my Marland," "Dixie's Land," "Hail to the Chief."

AUSTRIA—"Got erhalte Franz den Kaiser."

BAVARIA—"Heil unserm Konig, Heil."

BELGIUM—"La Brabanconne."

BOHEMIA—National Hymn.

DENMARK—"King Christian."
FRANCE—"La Marseillaise," "Partant pour la Syrie."
GERMANY—"Heil Dir im Siegerkranz," "Deutschland uber Alles," "Die Wacht am Rhein," "Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland?"
GREAT BRITIAN—"God Save the Queen," Rule Britannia."
GREECE—National Hymn.
HOLLAND—"Mien Neerlandsch Bloed."
HUNGARY—"Rakoczy March."
IRELAND—"The Minstrel Boy," "Killarney," "St. Patrick's Day."
ITALY—"Garibaldi Hymn," Marcia Reale Italiana."
MEXICO—National Air.
NORWAY—"Sonner of Norge."
POLAND—Patriotic Song.
PORTUGAL—National Hymn.
PRUSSIA—"Ich bin ein Preusse."
RUSSIA—"God Save our Noble Czar."
SPAIN—"Hymme de Riego."
SCOTLAND—"The Blue Bells of Scotland," "The Campbells are Comin'."
SWEDEN—National Hymn.
SWITZERLAND—"Rufst Du, mein Vaterland."
TURKEY—"National March."

This album is small in size and should be on every musician's stand who endeavors to play weeklies correctly. Arranged for piano, the album can be used for organ, and it is also arranged for full and small orchestra.

Music Every Musician Should Know.

Kamennoi-Ostrow—Rubenstein.

This piece forms one of a series of portraits from the Album de Portraits, Opus 10. The title—meaning "Stone Island"—requires explanation. It refers to an island in the River Neva near Petrograd upon which is an old monastery famous in Russian history. The piece can be considered to belong to the class of descriptive music; being doubtless an attempt to portray the thoughts and emotions aroused by contemplation of the great names of the past, their strivings and achievements, in contrast to the present peaceful environment. Rippling water is suggested, and the bells and chants of the monastery are portrayed.

Hungarian Dances—Brahms.

Funeral March of a Marionette—Gounod.

Gounod's piece is one of the best examples of humor, as the drollery comes from the clever humor put into the music itself. Even without titles and sub-titles, this march would be noticeably comic. In playing this number, the musician should make a strong contrast between legato and staccato. Let the music have a steady rhythm, and a little touch of Bohemian jollity. The end must die away very softly.

Doubled.

Something new is the double use of a Chaplin film by the Heibergers, of the Bethlehems. They played The Rink in one of their houses at the matinee and at another in the evening. Bicycling a program is by no means uncommon, but this subject was shown but once in each house, at the Lorenz in the afternoon and at the Broad in the evening.

Music Helps Acting in William Fox Studios.

"Music hath charms," saith the poets. "It certainly hath," every director at the William Fox studios will agree. For, whether you know it or not, it is true that an orchestra plays at each of the Fox plants while practically all of the scenes are being filmed.

The music is there because tests proved the efficiency of cadence. It was found that the players worked much more easily and that the tedium and constant strain were relieved greatly by the presence of a small group of musicians.

The music played is of the utmost "democracy," chiefly because of the methods used in screening a picture.

Scenes laid in one room are taken consecutively by the director, regardless of the order in which they appear in the finished product. This, of course, makes it necessary to skip back and forth in the scenario.

Consequently, in filming a script, dramatic values change more rapidly than the weather. These shifts, in turn, are reflected in the music, which is always appropriate to the situation which is being enacted.

A sample program of an orchestra's afternoon at the studio would read like a musical melange. It would be not the least unusual, for instance, to have in succession bits from "La Boheme," "Ragging the Scale," "The Maiden's Prayer," "Aloha Oe" and "I Vespri Siciliani."

A Film Best Seller.

Thanhouser Film Corporation announces the release of "A Modern Monte Cristo" through Pathe exchanges on February 4. Vincent Serrano is the star. "A Modern Monte Cristo" is to be a "best seller" according to the forecast of Edwin Thanhouser. The story was written by Lloyd Lonergan, the direction was by W. Eugene Moore.

As a story with rapidly tumbling incidents, "A Modern Monte Cristo" is a fast-told drama. Lively situations of wide diversity include a shipwreck; the marooning on an island of the man seeking vengeance and the little daughter of his enemy; an aeroplane rescue, and pearl-fishing in diving outfits. Supporting Mr. Serrano in the cast are Thomas A. Curran, Helen Badgley, Gladys Dore and Boyd Marshall.

"Civilization" Bookings in the Mid West.

The Mid West Civilization Corporation, which handles the Thomas H. Ince spectacle "Civilization" for the states of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, etc., report many bookings for the picture in their territory. The picture is to be shown shortly at Pueblo, Colorado Springs, by the Moore Graves Amusement Company; then at the Atlas theater, Cheyenne, and in other large theaters of the territory. It is stipulated by the holders of the territorial rights that the admission charges in these and other theaters is to be not less than 25 cents to 75 cents per person. The offices of the Mid West Civilization Corporation are at 763-764 Gas and Electric Building, Denver, Colorado.

Mutual Weekly a Feature.

Los Angeles, Cal., the home of so many producing companies, has long been regarded as the city in which competition is the keenest between producers to get their film on the screen. It is therefore a matter of gratification to the Gaumont Company and the Mutual Film Corporation to announce that The Mutual Weekly has a seven days' run at Clune's Broadway Theater, the finest motion picture house in Los Angeles. It is used from Sunday to Saturday, inclusive, to be succeeded by the next issue.

Ivan Popular in New England.

F. J. Willis, the manager of the Ivan Film Exchange, located at 23 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass., the distributor of Ivan photoplays in the New England states, has in a remarkably short time completed arrangements for the first runs of Ivan photoplays in the leading theaters of the largest cities. Every Ivan photoplay secures a first run of not less than one week in Boston at the Modern theater, and the largest theaters of Providence, New Haven, Portland, Manchester, Springfield, Worcester and so on.

Interesting Educationals

Including Two Industrials, One Topical, One Scientific, Four Scenics and Two Military Subjects.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"The Kid Glove Industry" (Mutual).

MINUTE details regarding the manufacture of kid gloves will be found in "Reel Life No. 37." Opening with a view of a group of kids whose skins are eventually taken from them, tanned and scraped free of the hair, we are allowed to view the tinting of these skins, the stretching of them over chamois covered forms to make them pliable. In the glove factory we see the skins cut according to pattern in long strips which are then placed on a gauge, after which the strips of kid are placed in a cutting machine in which the fingers of the gloves take shape. They are then sewed, and sorted into packages such as we see in the retail stores.

"Producing Perfect Pickles" (Mutual).

In this short industrial which is also to be found in "Reel Life No. 37," we learn all there is to be learned regarding the manufacture of cucumber pickles without revealing the manufacturer's secrets. Opening with the gathering of the cucumbers from the vines, the sorting of them so that small ones only may be used for this particular kind of pickle, the submitting of them to the usual liquid preservatives, and the bottling of the pickles by hand is shown. The final scenes show the capping of the bottles.

"The Care of the Teeth." (Mutual.)

This subject, also found in "Reel Life No. 37," claims that of the 12,000,000 school children in the United States of America, ninety per cent. have defective teeth. It shows by diagram a sound tooth and an unsound tooth, explaining the composition of a tooth and naming the various layers of which it is composed. The proper method of brushing the teeth is an important item, and we are advised to brush our teeth for two minutes each night before retiring. Another interesting feature of this film is a tooth brush drill in one of the class rooms of a public school.

"A Fish Screen for Irrigation Ditches." (Mutual.)

"Reel Life No. 37" contains the above named interesting subject, which shows the contrast between the old method of screening in the fish with which the irrigation ditches of some of the western states are stocked and a new method now in vogue. The old method called for an ordinary flat wire screen which frequently clogged, allowing the fish to escape and die. The new method employs a water wheel, of which wire screening is one of the principal factors. As it rotates it cleanses itself, allows a free passage of the water, and prevents the passage of the fish.

"From Gibraltar to Algeciras." (Mutual.)

"Mutual Tours Around the World No. 11" contains as its opening subject scenes on the straits of Gibraltar, with the African coast in the background, views of the British fortifications and of the seaport town of Algeciras six miles west of Gibraltar. It tells us, among other things, that Gibraltar is three miles long and but one-fourth to three-fourths of a mile in width. The subject is short but instructive.

"In Tunis, North Africa." (Mutual.)

Also a part of "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 11" and presenting scenes in the northernmost part of Africa, the French Protectorate of Tunis. The narrow streets of the city of Tunis present various types, among them the veiled Arabian woman. We are also shown the Arabian woman in her home, the Mosque of the Poor, where beggars sit to ask alms of the rich, and the Mosque of the Barber, where the mussulmen come to spend their holidays in prayer. Other interesting sights are a native at prayer, and natives smoking "Kif," a stupifying powder. The farming of large quantities of olives also takes our attention.

"The Bois de Boulogne." (Mutual.)

Views of the most attractive spots in Paris' largest park, the Bois de Boulogne will be found in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 11." The scenes included are the Dauphne entrance, the Armenonville pavilion, lovely nooks on the banks of the Serpentine, St. James' lake, the Big lake, the Cascade and the circular driveway in front of the cascade.

"A Trip Up Mount Lowe, California." (Mutual.)

This subject found in "See America First No. 71" takes us on a trip by incline railway up the side of Mount Lowe, which is situated about twenty miles from Los Angeles, and is 6,100 feet in height. At a certain point of the ascent it is necessary to leave the railway and mount burros for the final climb to the summit, from which point an unusual sight is looked down upon in the form of a sea of clouds. Portions of the journey up the mountain are interesting, while other portions are less attractive.

"From Civilian to Soldier." (Mutual.)

This is the opening number of "Uncle Sam's Defenders," which is a series of six single reels illustrating the military system of the United States, and which promises to be the most complete illustration of the kind that we have had. It shows us first the capitol at Washington and President Wilson advocating "Peace at any cost, and above all, Honor." The training camp at Plattsville, showing business men learning the practical side of soldiering as well as the ordinary drill forms is another interesting part of the film. Recruiting stations in New York City, physical examinations of recruits, the final test at Fort Slocum, and a recruiting tent in Central Park, are also interesting. Drilling at Van Cortlandt Park, and scenes at the Military Academy at West Point afford various extraordinary exhibitions such as the building of a pontoon bridge, sappers at work in the trenches, the building of communicating trenches, and cadet cavalry drill in the riding hall at West Point. This series is being released by the Mutual Film Corporation.

"Our Boys at the Border." (Mutual.)

The second number of "Uncle Sam's Defenders" shows us first a regiment entraining for Mexico, after which we see them arriving at Columbus, New Mexico. These scenes are followed by scenes at Fort Bliss, Texas, and the starting off of the soldiers to the relief of the ill-fated Tenth. Interesting scenes show us a six-inch howitzer in action, range finders using latest methods, setting the time fuse at the nose of a shell, a close view of a machine gun firing 640 shots per minute, siege artillery at Fort Sill, Okla., loading with 4.7 inch shells, a cross section of a big shell showing shrapnel and time fuse, the setting up of an army radio plant, and various other highly instructive views.

SECOND SERIES OF GERMAN WAR PICTURES.

In this series we have the first pictures taken in the Far East theater of the war. The first lot of Roumanian prisoners to be taken were caught by the camera, the city of Hermanstadt, in the occupation of Australian soldiers, is illustrated in detail; here we have some excellent views of the new Emperor Charles Francis Joseph. Described as being "beloved by the people because of his democratic bearing," it would seem that the pictures fully bear out this description as particularly appropriate. The new Emperor is seen at close range in thorough familiarity with the officers and troops, while everywhere there is evidence of great cordiality. The surroundings of "Red Tower Pass," one of the most important scenes of the war on this front are pictured in detail. Turning again to the western front the city of Lille is presented, showing but little damage and apparently in normal conditions; the peculiar feature is pointed out that the great opera house had "either by accident or design" escaped the destruction which the German shells had otherwise wrought in close proximity thereto. One semi-humorous incident in this city is that of the inhabitants flocking in droves to register their dogs under the law, which requires to know "where each mouthful of food is going." The German Emperor is again seen visiting hospitals, reviewing troops and holding consultations; his activities seem untiring and a spirit of great activity pervades his surroundings wherever he appears. Pictures of great workshops, "ten miles in the rear," are wonderful exhibitions of German industry.

Railroad trains bring large quantities of disabled guns from the front, they are immediately overhauled, repaired and returned. Following to a close proximity to the firing line the life of the soldier is again seen. These pictures are undoubtedly drawing large crowds of people, naturally those of German descent are especially interested. W. H. J.

Poster Competition Ended

National Committee on Films for Young People Awards $25 Prize to Winning Contestant.

SOME time ago it was announced that a Poster Contest conducted by the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review) was under way. This contest for which two prizes were offered, a $25 prize and a $10 prize demanded one example from each contestant of a poster suitable for the purpose of advertising young people's entertainments at moving picture theaters. And while the contest closed on December 20, judgment was delayed until the first week of January, when the prizes were awarded to their talented recipients. The judges were: Professor Arthur W. Dow, Department of Art, Columbia University; Mrs. John W. Alexander, of the Arden Gallery; Paul Coenoyer, N. A.; Mrs. Howard S. Gans, Chairman of the National Committee on Films for Young People; and Miss Louise Connolly, of the Art and Textile Museum (Newark, N. J., Library).

The accompanying cut is of the poster which won the first prize. This poster was designed by Paul Romanowicz, 1814 Gravesend avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., who is a student in the South High School, and the Pratt Institute Evening Course. It shows a brown boat with a rich red sail, drawn by a picturesque fish, through a purple sea set against a finely toned and imaginative background of castles, suggesting the work of Maxfield Parrish, aud was chosen because the spirit of the subject appeals to all ages.

The second prize was awarded to Emilia A. Roelker, 51 Downing street, Brooklyn, N. Y., who is a student of the Modern Art School, New York City. This poster shows the opening of a wonderful chest, from which are hopping grotesque and lively figures symbolizing the various kinds of adventure and comedy. Honorable mention was given to a poster submitted by Helen Hill, also of the Modern Art School, which was exquisitely done, but was somewhat too juvenile in character to suit the general public for which it was intended.

The posters will be exhibited shortly in art galleries in New York and vicinity.

THE NEWS REEL AS AN EDUCATIONAL.

The remarkable revival of interest in short releases of educational worth, highly acceptable because of their sustained interest, has not called the attention of the exhibitor quite as much as should be done to the combined entertainment and educational value of a weekly news reel. The very fact that college professors are stimulating interest in their courses by lecturing from the daily papers on current history proves the contention of such advanced motion picture producers as the Gaumont Company, that the motographic news reels have barely made an inroad upon the logical field that is peculiarly their own.

"Take the current issue of the Mutual Weekly, No. 106, for example," said an officer of the Gaumont Company, "we manufacture this weekly reel for release through Mutual. It contains a high average of first page news, we may say, transferred from the newspaper to the screen. Looking at the pictures that have interest more than ephemeral, we find the schoolroom that moves, a school on wheels for the children of section hands on the Southern Pacific. At night it is a night school for adults. Here is a fact of sociological value that is more than a hint to progressive persons in all parts of the country concerning what can be done to Americanize our foreign element and instruct the young of our floating population.

"People will not support what they do not understand. That is why President Wilson went on a speaking tour of the middle west to explain the need for preparedness. This issue of the Mutual Weekly has pictures of eight army airmen about to fly from New York to Philadelphia. Thus the nation is made acquainted with the possibilities of the aerial arm of our service—a distinct national service performed by motion pictures.

"Current history is pictured in such war views as the King of Greece receiving General Sarrail, the Annamite workers in French munition plants building their barracks, the head of the Russian church blessing ambulances donated by Russian subjects living in France, the trial cruise of a new destroyer off Rockland, Me., and a United States tractor company in action on the Mexican border.

"All these pictures have more than an entertainment value. It is admitted that the primary aim of the motion picture is to entertain, just as that is the primary aim of the theater. Yet the most artistic play is the one that gives the auditor something to carry away with him. In the same sense is the motion picture an artistic success. When exhibitors come to see that spectators carry away lasting impressions secured through viewing history in the making then the sale of the Mutual Weekly and other motographic news reels will be many times what it is today."

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

While in Burlington, Vt., for the purpose of addressing the Parent-Teacher Association, representatives of Women's Clubs, and others interested in the Better Film Movement, Mary Gray Peck discovered that a great interest was being taken in special performances for young people. These, she states, are conducted by a committee which includes representatives from each of the schools, consisting of the superintendent of schools, a principal or teacher, a father and a mother, and a representative from each of the two women's clubs. She also states that in that particular section of Vermont there seems to be a keen interest in the subject, and that at least three other towns nearby are following the example of Burlington. Miss Peck treated the Burlingtonians to an enthusiastic denouncement of legalized censorship in the course of her address there.

It will be interesting to learn that the Fine Arts Film Co. have established in connection with their Los Angeles studios a school for the studio children. This school is located in the studio grounds and is under the jurisdiction of the Los Angeles Board of Education, receiving regular visits from a school inspector. All children from eight to sixteen years of age are required to attend school four hours per day, and it is said that a number of children outside this age limit attend of their own volition. Owing to the wide divergence of ages each child receives individual instruction from a competent teacher. Directors who use the little folks are required to accommodate themselves to the conditions.

The Better Films Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers Associations have compiled a list of selected films which they will gladly send to exhibitors who may be interested. The compiling of this list is merely the foundation of a scheme which involves a regular weekly pamphlet containing the titles of additional films that have been approved by the committee. These lists can be obtained by addressing the chairman of the committee, Mrs. Michael, 5325 Indiana avenue, Chicago, Ill.

"How Life Begins," a scientific film made by George E. Stone of Berkeley, Cal., is now under the control of Mrs. Katharine F. Carter of 220 W. 42nd street, New York City. This remarkable film, which was exhibited on several occasions in New York in a four-reel length, has now been lengthened to five reels by Mr. Stone, with material relative to the subject, and serving to illustrate it even more fully.

Among the Picture Theaters

NEWS AND VIEWS OF PHOTOPLAY HOUSES EVERYWHERE

T. & D. Theater, Oakland, Cal.

Turner & Dahnken's Newest Photoplay House a Magnificent Structure—Bespeaks Progress in Motion Picture Theater Construction—Seats 3,450—Equipped With $48,500 Wurlitzer Organ—Many Prominent Persons Attend Dedication.

CALIFORNIA, within whose borders are produced more than one half of the moving pictures now being made, and which but one short year ago was entertaining the nations of the world on the shores of San Francisco Bay at that wonderful Exposition in which moving pictures played such a prominent part in education and entertainment, has again spoken, and this time her offering to the arts of the silent drama is in the form of a magnificent theater which for size compares favorably with the largest in the country and which in architectural detail, decoration, arrangement and conveniences for patrons probably has no equal anywhere. This new house, located at Oakland, the largest east-bay suburb of San Francisco, is a monument to the builder, James K. Moffitt, and the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, with its chain of houses in nine Pacific Coast cities.

T. & D. Theater, Oakland, Cal.

The opening of this new house on the evening of November 22 was the occasion for a demonstration such as had never before been accorded the opening of a moving picture theater in Western America. Society was out in full force, city officials were there, moving picture stars were present in person, musical celebrities gathered to hear the great organ, exhibitors and film exchange men came from all over Northern California, and there was a continual volley of ohs and ahs from the time the doors were opened at seven o'clock until the last scene of "Miss George Washington" faded from the screen just before midnight.

Following the opening of the doors a half an hour was set aside for an inspection of the house, but so great was the demand for seats that the general public chose to settle down in the comfortable opera chairs as quickly as possible. Within a half an hour 4,000 persons were inside the big structure, and as many more were outside seeking admission, the streets in the vicinity of the house being crowded for blocks. A period of music then followed, and at its conclusion E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit appeared upon the stage and briefly traced the growth of moving pictures as a form of entertainment. He paid tribute to James K. Moffitt, whose investment of a half a million dollars had made the theater a reality, and to the people of Oakland for their loyalty in the past. H. C. Capwell, representing the Downtown Association, made a ringing speech expressing confidence in the development of the San Francisco Bay region and of the success of the new T. &D. theater and was followed by Mayor John L. Davie and ex-congressman, Joseph R. Knowland.

The pleasant duty of presenting the film stars fell to the lot of resident manager George E. Thornton who brought upon the stage in quick succession Miss Anita King, "The Paramount Girl," Miss Myrtle Stedman, Sessue Hayakawa and Tsuri Aoki, who appeared through the courtesy of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and all of whom were given enthusiastic receptions.

The Wurlitzer Hope-Jones organ then came in for attention, the first selection being the "Sextette from Lucia," followed by the overture from "Fantana" and "The Rosary," rendered by Gordon Bretland, organist of the T. & D. Tivoli theater at San Francisco. "Kilarney," sung by a chorus, followed by other Irish melodies, served as an effective introduction to the first picture, "A Son of Erin," featuring Dustin Farnum. This picture, with "Miss George Washington," comprised the photoplay program. But one show was given owing to the length of the dedicatory program.

The new T. & D. theater is located at Eleventh and Broadway, between the shopping center of Oakland and the harbor, occupying a lot 100 by 175 feet in area. It has a seating capacity of 3,450 on the lower floor and single balcony, and this could easily have been made 4000 had the seats been spaced as in the ordinary theater. Instead, room has been left between the rows to allow patrons to pass freely without the necessity of others arising. The chairs are upholstered in Spanish leather, with spring seats for comfort, and are the best that could be purchased. On both the upper and lower floors there are loges arranged for special parties, and in these even more room has been allowed for the movement of those who occupy them. The lines of vision have been so carefully planned that there is not a bad seat in the house.

One of the distinguishing features of the house is the absence of stairways. From the marble tiled lobby one passes into the main entrance from which either the lower or the upper floor is reached. A broad incline, on which Everlastic tiling has been used to prevent slipping, leads to the mezzanine, through a bower of potted plants and past walls decorated with oil paintings of popular film stars. The balustrades leading to the mezzanine floor are of hand-polished marble in Etruscan design and the foyer, which extends the full width of the house, is also wainscoted in marble.

The original features of the house culminate in the mezzanine floor, where the management has fairly outdone itself in arranging for the comfort and convenience of its patrons. On the left is the Pompeiian lounging room for the use of both men and women who may desire to rest or await the arrival of friends. A stone table with an aquarium illuminated by colored lights forms the central decorative feature, and arranged around the room is other stone furniture and objects of art in pure Pompeiian design, cural chairs, tall vases, statues of the design of Pliny's time, reproductions of tapestries of the time of early Rome, lounging divans, settees and drinking fountains. Here, as in the other rest rooms, are bells to give notice of the beginning of productions on the screen.

At the head of the incline, fronting on Eleventh street, is the women's tea room, a decorative dream, with its woodwork in English oak, its tapestry walls, silk curtained windows, beautiful upholstered chairs and divans and exquisite blue carpet. The lighting comes from concealed sources and illuminates the room with a warm glow that is enchanting. German "roller" canaries sing in vari-colored cages, while maids serve tea, cakes and ices. Adjoining the tea rooms are the women's parlors, with lounges, sofas, writing desks, telephones, triple-mirrored tables and other conveniences, all bespeaking culture and refinement.

At the right of the incline landing is the gentlemen's lounging and smoking room, luxuriously furnished with chairs heavily upholstered in leather, tables and other conveniences, with beautiful Persian rugs on the floor. A retiring room for men is located in the basement, with an entrance from the foyer, and a rest room for women is to be found on the ground floor.

From the mezzanine floor there are two inclines to the balcony, one to each side, these terminating about one-third the way up the balcony. Between these is a third entrance to the upper floor, one that takes the visitor high up in the balcony. The addition of this entrance was an after thought on the part of the designers and it is planned to close the two side inclines when the balcony is fairly well filled, so that the patron will take the middle one and reach the rear rows before coming in sight of the screen.

The decorative features of this house are typical of the Golden State, the side walls on the lower floor being decorated with an orange motif, while those above the balcony show fields of golden poppies fading away into a California sky. At each side of the proscenium arch are openings in which illuminated paintings are shown, these being changed with the change in program. Above the arch is a huge gilded grill illuminated from behind, and here is located the organ. The house lights are controlled from the organ seat and are arranged in five circuits with colors in green, amber, red and white, to produce effects suggested by the pictures.

The organ is the largest on the Pacific Coast and is said to be the sixth largest in the world. The largest pipes weigh as much as half a ton, and are installed in concrete chambers, while the smallest ones are not much larger than a match. This unit organ was installed at a cost of $48,500, and combines the volume and tone of the cathedral pipe organ with the sweetness and spirit of a symphony orchestra ensemble of forty musicians. It was installed under the direction of George H. Leathurby, Pacific Coast manager of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company.

The projection room is equipped with two Power's Cameragraphs No. 6B and is located on the ground floor, there being a straight throw of 133 feet to the screen, which is of local manufacture. The booth is of concrete construction and its observation ports can scarcely be noticed, so carefully have the lights been arranged. The size of the screen is 19 by 25 feet.

Heavy carpets have been used throughout the theater, except on the incline, where a noiseless tiling has been laid. A feature of the house is the stage sets which will accompany the various productions. The screen hangs in the center of a theater stage and appropriate prologues will be given in advance of the main productions. The ventilating system is probably the largest ever installed in the Far West, handling 60,000 cubic feet of air a minute, much more than will be required. Fresh air is drawn in from the roof and warmed or cooled as the case may be and forced into all parts of the house. Steam for heating purposes is purchased from outside sources and the heat is regulated by automatic thermostats.

The exterior of the building is Roman in design, with a modern art facade executed in mat-glazed terra cotta. At intervals along the Eleventh street side are huge urns from which steam arises in clouds, these being illuminated by red lights concealed within, while above them are a number of flag poles with banners flying, giving the appearance of a gala day at the Coliseum in ancient Rome.

The executive staff of the Oakland T. & D. theater consists of George E. Thornton, manager; Prof. Wetmore, musical director; Albert Hay Malotte, organist; Elmer E. Nichols, chief electrical operator; Irving S. Cohn, assistant operator; F. J. Clazie, chief usher, and W. H. Jobelmann, press agent. The Turner & Dahnken Circuit, whose headquarters is at 942 Market street, San Francisco, has for its officers the following: Fred Dahnken, Jr., president; J. T. Turner, vice-president and general manager; Claude E. Langley, directing manager and treasurer, and E. B. Johnson, secretary. It conducts houses at San Francisco, Oakland, Richmond, San Jose, Berkeley, Watsonville and Reno, Nevada, and is erecting a large theater at Stockton, besides having plans in course of preparations for still others.

Golden Gate Theater, Oakland, Cal.

Opened Two Years Ago by J. Wiseman. This House Has Been Doing Excellent Business—Fitted With Westinghouse Motor Generator Set and Motiograph Machine.

THE Golden Gate Theater, located on San Pablo avenue, Oakland, near the suburban train station for many years known as Golden Gate, is one of the most interesting district houses in the east-bay city. It is well named, as it commands a full view of the celebrated Golden Gate, named by Gen. John C. Fremont, and is but a short distance from the shores of San Francisco Bay. This house was opened about two years ago by J. Wiseman and is the third one he has owned in this district during the past eight years, the change in each instance having been made in order to secure a larger and better one.

The theater is practically of fireproof construction and has an attractive front of pebble-dash cement, with a tiled lobby extending the full width of the building. The seating capacity is 400 on the ground floor and there is also room for about thirty in the balcony, where the operating room is located. The house is lighted by a splendid system of indirect lighting and a heating system keeps it comfortable in winter. Music is furnished by a double tracker automatic player-piano. Should it be found advisable at any time to increase the capacity this could be done by building an addition at the rear and moving the screen back. At the right of the main entrance there is an attractive retiring room for women, a decorative feature of which is a splendid collection of pictures of famous stars attractively grouped.

Golden Gate Theater, Oakland, Cal.

A number of marked improvements have been made in the house recently and others are planned, some of these having been deferrd until the walls were perfectly dry and all danger of leaks was past. A Westinghouse motor-generator set has just been installed in place of a mercury-arc rectifier and a new Motiograph projection machine has been put in to supplement the Power's Cameragraph No. 6A that has done service for a long time. The next change will be in the decoration of the walls.

When the former houses were operated in this neighborhood a five-cent admission price was the rule, with a special attraction at 10 cents occasionally, but when the move to the new theater was made the general price of admission was made 10 cents. At times special features are shown and higher rates prevail, as when the "Clansman" was shown at 25 cents and "Purity" at 15 cents. Mr. Wiseman has been in this neighborhood for so long that he understands perfectly what his patrons desire to see. He states that they do not care for weeklies and that travelogs must show beautiful scenery or something entirely out of the ordinary.

Although Mr. Wiseman has been in this neighborhood for a long time, as far as moving picture chronology is concerned, his experience began in other fields and he is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the State. His first connection with the business began when he opened a house on Post street, San Francisco, assisted by "Pop" Furst, the first man to conduct a five-cent moving picture theater in that city, this house being known as the Cinegraph. He then opened the Star theater near Fillmore street, San Francisco, and conducted this for two years before entering the Oakland field. The first house he opened in the latter city had a seating capacity of but 150, and the Golden Gate Family theater, which succeeded this, had accommodations for 200.

In speaking of the development of the business Mr. Wiseman expresses the opinion that some of the changes have not been to the advantage of exhibitors and declares that they have only themselves to blame. He believes that the tendency toward long shows, double feature bills and the like, is harmful and tends to cut down the number of times that patrons can be induced to come out. He is a firm believer in organization and displays a card in his ticket booth calling attention that his house is affiliated with the Exhibitors' League of California.

Strand Theater, Evansville, Ind.

Up-to-Date Photoplay House Equipped with Westinghouse Motor Generator Set and $10,000 Fotoplayer.

IN the Strand Theater, Evansville, Ind., has a photoplay house of which it has just cause to be proud. Its appointments compare favorably with those of the best theaters in the country. There is a special stage setting which cost $1,500 and flowers are used for ornamental purposes. The foyer and lobby have tiled floors, and the foyer is flanked by marble stairways. An electric fountain surrounded by flowers and backed by a large mirror is also located in the foyer. The music is furnished by a $10,000 Fotoplayer.

This theater is operated by the Standard Amusement Company, and credit is due to Manager R. R. Russell for the high class and careful selection of pictures shown. Paramount dramas and Metro comedies are the rule, with one big feature a week.

The theater has a seating capacity of 1,500, 1,200 on the first two floors, and 300 on the third floor. As a result of the care taken in determining what pictures shall be shown, capacity houses are the rule. The theater is open from 2.15 to 10.45 p. m., seven days in the week.

The screen is 13 by 17 feet, and the projection distance is 74 feet. Two projectors are used. The operating booth is located on the first floor, level with the screen. It is made of concrete and is absolutely soundproof. A 4½ kw. two-light Westinghouse motor-generator for converting alternating current to direct current at 75 volts, is located in the operating booth. This set consists of an alternating current motor and a direct current generator.

The motor is rated at 7½ horsepower. The generator delivers current at 75 volts, but as only 55 volts at the arc is required the generator voltage is reduced to this value by means of non-inflammable, well-ventilated resistors having a sufficient number of steps for adjustment purposes. The motor generator set is capable of furnishing sufficient current for the operation of two projection machines simultaneously for short periods. By using a two-light set there is no variation in voltage, so that there is no interruption to the picture, nor, in the case of a motor driven picture machine, is the speed altered.

Elite Theater, Portland, Oregon

Modern Fireproof Photoplay House in Residential District Successfully Conducts Children's Matinees.

THE Elite theater is located at 47th and Sandy Boulevard, in the Rose City Park district of Portland, Ore. Its seating capacity is 250. The theater was built about four years ago in an office and store building constructed at that time and was built as a theater. It is of brick and cement and is fireproof throughout.

Elite Theater, Portland, Oregon.

Many owners have had the Elite, but few have enjoyed the success of the present owner, E. H. Young. He is an ex-newspaper man and knows how to cater to the people in his district. This is a somewhat difficult task, for Rose City Park is one of the better and newer additions to Portland, and just any old picture does not get by with the people who live there. Mr. Young has conducted children's shows successfully in his house, and has made the Elite an active factor in a live community.

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

TRUNELLE, Mabel. Born in Dwight, Ill. Her father was of French-Scotch descent and her mother Irish-Scotch, a combination that gives her the fire of the French, the reserve of the Scot and the impulsiveness of the Irish. She is 5 feet, 4 inches, weighs 120 pounds, has an olive complexion, dark brown hair and eyes. It is no reflection on a lady's age to call her one of the Old Guard in pictures, for she really made her picture debut February 1, 1911, in Edison's The Princess and the Peasant. Her work immediately attracted the attention of the critics and she soon found herself securely placed as star and favorite. Later she went to Majestic, but returned to the Edison company. Among her best known releases are Dolly Varden, Why Girls Leave Home, The Two Van Revels and Janet of the Dunes. She is fond of automobiling, swimming, and the dramatic stage is both recreation and study.

Mabel Trunelle

DUNN, William Robert. Born in Astoria, L. I. Parents both Americans. Five feet 10½ inches and weighs 165 pounds. Brown hair and eyes. He has played in vaudeville, heading his own production and has played with Mrs. Leslie Carter and in The Squaw Man. Made his stage debut in 1900 and went to the Vitagraph in 1908, making his debut in The Ugly Duckling. Some of his best known parts have been Philip Holden in The Juggernaut and the Dope Fiend in A Woman's Fair Name. Played Juan Lopez in the serial, The Secret Kingdom. Mr. Dunn is one of the "old" Vitagraph favorites, dating back of the present changing days, and is one of the best known members of the old stock company. He is fond of painting and is an artist of no little skill. He is also fond of outdoor sports, as are most players of the studios, but he is more the student than the athlete.

William Robert Dunn

MOORE, Victor. Born in Hammonton, N. Y., of New England parentage. Brown hair and eyes and dark complexion. Is 5 feet, 6½ inches and weighs 200 pounds. Mr. Moore made his stage debut in 1893 and is widely known both on the dramatic stage and in vaudeville, where he headlined bills for several years. His success here brought him to the attention of George M. Cohan and he was starred in 45 Minutes from Broadway, The Talk of New York and other Cohan & Harris productions, some of the parts being specially written for him. In April, 1915, he made his picture debut with the Lasky Company in the five-reel feature, Snobs. He later appeared in Chimmie Fadden and other screened stage successes. The Klever Pictures, Inc., was formed to exploit him and December 10, 1916, found him in Jacksonville; work was begun on a studio the following day and completed a week later.

Victor Moore

STOREY, Edith. Born in New York City. American parentage. Five feet, three inches tall. Dark hair and gray-green eyes. Following a stage experience that began in her tenth year and included engagements with leading Broadway and road attractions, Miss Storey became one of the Vitagraph stock. For a time she was loaned to the Melies company, then working in Texas on a series of western pictures and her fearlessness gained her the admiration of the cowboys who taught her to ride and shoot and who nicknamed her "Billy." Later she returned to the Vitagraph and has been with that company since. She has played a wide range of characters from the leads in The Christian and similar plays to comedy verging upon the slapstick, and in between romantic, society, western and sensational drama. She has supported E. H. Sothern in his starring roles and has herself been a star. Is fond of outdoor sports.

Edith Storey

FAIRBANKS, Douglas. Born in Denver, Col. Five feet, four inches tall and weighs 150 pounds. Dark complexion, black hair and hazel-brown eyes. Mr. Fairbanks starred for many seasons under the Brady, Cohan and Harris and other managements and it was not until September, 1914, that he was coaxed into the pictures. His initial appearance was made in Fine Arts' The Lamb and he has since appeared in a wide range of parts. Western thrillers and light comedies looked all the same to him, but picture lovers decided that they wanted him in comedy, and in this line of work he has been signally successful. Among his best parts have been His Pictures in the Papers, The Habit of Happiness and Manhattan Madness, but he is best liked in those parts giving the fullest scope to his wonderful agility. He says that every form of athletics is his fad, but it is more than that—it's a gift.

Douglas Fairbanks

MOREY, Harry T. Born in Charlotte, Mich. Height just six feet and weighs exactly 200 pounds. Light hair, brown eyes. Mr. Morey has played with the Biograph and Dramograph, but made his greatest success with Vitagraph. He made his stage debut in 1896 with Robert Downing and has played under the Ziegfeld management in The Little Duchess, with Weber and Fields, under Cohan and Harris, the Shuberts and with Montgomery and Stone in The Wizard of Oz. He made his picture debut in 1908 under Pierce Kingsley in The Last Straw and has played notable parts in The Wreck, A Million Bid, Shadows of the Past, 413, The Price for Folly, Salvation Joan (with Edna May), Motherhood, Whom the Gods Destroy and The Law Decides. Mr. Morey gives considerable time to the study of his work and his fad is the creation of an atmosphere of realism in his various roles.

Oak Park is again in throes over the opening of moving picture theaters on Sundays. Two strong factions are engaged in the contest, which will be decided by a ballot in the near future. There is no special law against Sunday moving pictures in Oak Park, it is said, but the theater owners have kept them closed on Sundays without having made any effort to open them without special authority. All the ministers of Oak Park are strongly against the movement to open the picture theaters on Sunday.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has returned from New York to the Chicago offices after closing the "Frohman-Freuler" contracts and completing the formation of the Empire All-Star Corporation. The latter organization will attend to the presentation of Charles Frohman's successes in moving pictures through the Mutual.

Terry Ramsaye, Mutual's publicity director, has also returned from New York, and relates an interesting experience in connection with the new Empire All-Star Corporation. The stenographer in New York got out the copy on the story only a few minutes before train time. Mr. Ramsaye took it with him to the Twentieth Century and handed it to a messenger on the train. This messenger wired the announcement ahead, and long before Mr. Ramsaye got to Chicago he was reading copies of morning papers along the route, which contained the story.

R. R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Co., Inc., is now making arrangements for the entertainment of Miss Gail Kane on her arrival here Monday, January 22, on her way to the American studios in Santa Barbara. Miss Kane will spend the day in Chicago, and will meet Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American, and President Freuler of the Mutual.

C. W. Bunn, manager of the Chicago branch office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., gave a dinner in the English room of the Congress Hotel one night last week to the representatives of moving picture trade papers and of the Chicago dailies.

The main object of the gathering was to boost "Patria," the International serial, the initial episode of which had just been given the unusual honor of being placed on the bill of the Majestic for one week. The alphabet consomme had only the letters of the title in its make-up, while the caviar served had the letter "P" artistically worked out by the chef.

During the dinner Manager Bunn spoke of the new Pathe serial, "The Double Cross," which features Mollie King, and the first episode of which will be released some time within the next two months.

After dinner the party proceeded to the Majestic where "Patria" was reviewed.

The question of the increase of the license of moving picture theaters in Chicago for the ensuing year was taken up by the city council Wednesday morning, January 17. No definite action was taken, but it is reported that certain members are in favor of increasing the license from $200 to $1,000 per year. This, of course, would be plainly confiscatory, as it would lead to the closing of more than 40 per cent. of the picture theaters in the city, at the present rates of admission.

During the filming of the hold-up scene for the George Walsh picture, which Otis Turner is making for William Fox, Anna Luther was missed. The company was spending the night in the open near Inglewood, where they had hired an entire train and were busily engaged in filming glimpses of bandit work.

Frantic search was instituted for Miss Luther, as the photographing could not go on without her. She was finally found. She was in a cabin near the scene of the hold-up, telling fairy tales to a bed full of six poor children who seemd to think that she must be one of the good fairies she was telling them about.

Mr. Davis paid $40 to see "The Eyes of the World" at Clune's Auditorium. Having heard of the remarkable success of the new Clune production, and being a live manager he took a train to Los Angeles and spent this sum and two days of his time to give "The Eyes of the World" the once-over, and if possible to secure it for his theater. "LEGISLATION," HE NEVER HEARD OF IT.

Sam Trigger tells a story of an experience he had in visiting different New York exhibitors to collect the three cents per seat assessment toward the fund for defraying expenses contesting the Sunday closing law and for State legislation against it.

He called on a 600-seat house exhibitor on the East Side of the city, who was entirely ignorant of the Sunday law and everything in connection with it. Sam told him he would like to have him contribute toward the fund for "legislation," as voted by the league.

The exhibitor asked: "How much is it?"

Sam replied, "$18."

The exhibitor exclaimed, "That's too much, I couldn't afford it, besides I never heard of the picture."

Enlightenment Corporation Launched

Brock's New Company Now Ready for Business—"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Its First Offering.

FULLY launched and actually engaged in exploiting its first production, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," the Enlightenment Photoplay Corporation, headed by Henry J. Brock, has established headquarters at 220 West 42d street, Suite 1005.

The Enlightenment Photoplay Corporation, taking its name from "Enlighten Thy Daughter," the first big super-feature to come under the jurisdiction of the organization, has been definitely established for the purpose of purchasing extraordinary screen productions, which in turn will be exploited in the United States on the state right plan, and throughout the civilized world on the same substantial basis as the hundreds of other productions the foreign rights of which have been controlled by the Brock organization during the past few years, and so successfully distributed throughout the world.

Henry J. Brock.

Harry Reichenbach has been engaged by Mr. Brock to conduct a widespread campaign for the picture, and has already begun the dissemination of news matter in its behalf.

The first step in the exploitation of the feature will be its opening as a high class attraction at the Park theater, Columbus Circle, New York, on January 28, arrangements for which were consummated by Mr. Brock this week. The original plan was to place the picture in a Broadway house for a short period, but, as the demands for the picture grew, and one important theater manager after another expressed the desire to secure it as an attraction, arrangements were completed for a minmum showing of four weeks at the Park theater, with a continuous indefinite engagement to follow as long as business justifies.

The executive organization of the new company is being established now. Mr. Brock is the executive head, Gus Schlesinger is in a confidential, official capacity, and other prominent motion picture people in equally important fields of action.

Mr. Brock has not before gone in for the distribution of pictures in this country, and is emphatic in his ambitions to do so now on a most comprehensive scale.

"Properly encouraged and somewhat certain of a market for costly, worthy subjects, the numerous independent manufacturers can turn out any number of extraordinary pictures," said Mr. Brock. "Our new organization is equipped to do business on a strictly cash basis. We can finance productions in advance of their completion, and will, if sufficiently impressed by a scenario or subject, finance a feature in advance of its being started. We can stimulate the independent producer to renewed effort by assuring him a ready market for powerful subjects.

"We can assure an adequate offer for any production we consider big enough for the Enlightenment concern to handle. We want only productions of more importance than the best program feature, and we are not particular about stars. It's the stories, properly produced, that will attract us.

"In 'Enlighten Thy Daughter' we have no stars, but the cast, including Frank Sheridan, Zena Keefe, Katharine Kaelred, Marie Shotwell, Rubye de Remer, Arthur Donaldson, James Morrison, Mathilda Brundage and Violet Horner, is of far greater importance to the picture than any individual star one could name.

"Assure the independent manufacturer that we've established a mart for his ware, and that we want only the best.

"We paid Ivan Abramson a substantial sum for 'Enlighten Thy Daughter,' and this, within three hours after seeing it at the Broadway theater."

Through an error, an announcement was made recently that the Merit Company had purchased the New York and New England rights to "Enlighten Thy Daughter." This was erroneous. No territory has been disposed of as yet, and none will be until the picture has been exploited throughout the country in a manner befitting the importance of the feature.

What Fox Is Doing

Record of a Week's Work of the Several Companies—New Plays Coming.

ABOUT the time that Washington's birthday is observed, this year, a new photoplayer, who is a great-great-grandniece of General Washington, will be seen in a William Fox production. The new acquisition with the distinguished ancestry is Eleanor Washington, who is descended directly from John Agustin Washington, a full brother of the General. Miss Washington has been in motion pictures since 1912, when she began her career in the silent drama with the Majestic Company. She is the wife of Harris L. Forbes, the photoplay director.

Another newcomer to Fox Films is James Grover Tarver. Mr. Tarver, who is seven feet four inches, is undoubtedly the tallest man in filmdom. He will work on the West Coast.

Valeska Suratt completed another feature for William Fox last week, and Stuart Holmes will finish his big production within a few days. Harry Hilliard plays opposite Miss Suratt. Others in the cast are John E. Mackin, Eric Mayne, Frank Goldsmith and W. W. Black. Kenean Buel was in charge of the direction. Miss Suratt has the only important feminine role in the picture.

Stuart Holmes' film will unquestionably be one of the most remarkable cinema presentations William Fox has ever made. The story for it was taken from a book of which millions of copies have been sold. The new screen play gives the noted Fox villain a role entirely different from any which he has ever essayed. More than two months were devoted to the making of this subject, and Mr. Holmes' supporting cast includes Mary Martin, Edward N. Hoyt, Robert Vivian, Dan Mason, Florence Ashbrooke and Kittens Reichert. Last week, the Holmes company went aboard the replica of the Half-Moon, Hendrik Hudson's famous vessel, which is moored in the Hudson at the foot of Bear Mountain.

Another production which will soon go into the cutting-room is Virginia Pearson's new starring vehicle. Miss Pearson recently spent part of an afternoon at a big telephone exchange getting "pointers" on how a "hello girl" acts, as preparation for the final scenes of her screen play. There is a real jurist on the bench in the criminal trial scene of the Pearson picture. He is ex-Judge William B. Green, of Brooklyn.

Progress is also being made on Dustin Farnum's premiere production under the Fox standard. The cast includes Winifred Kingston, William Conklin, Edward Alexander, Ray Downs and Frank Lanning.

William Fox's next release is "One Touch of Sin," with Gladys Brockwell in the stellar role. Richard Stanton directed the film. Jack Standing will be seen in the role opposite Miss Brockwell. Others in the company are Willard Louis, Sedley Brown, Carrie Clark Ward, Frankie Lee, Jack MacDonald and Charles Edhler. "One Touch of Sin" will be released on January 29.

"REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM" FOR MARY PICKFORD.

Shortly following its release of Mary Pickford's latest offering, "The Pride of the Clan," which is now breaking box office records throughout the country, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," as a forthcoming screen vehicle for "Little Mary." This well known novel and stage hit will be produced upon completion of "A Poor Little Rich Girl," the Eleanor Gates subject now being staged under the direction of Maurice Tourneur at the Fort Lee studios, and will mark the fourth Mary Pickford release by Artcraft Pictures.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was adapted for stage presentation by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson from two of the former's books, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "The Chronicles of Rebecca." Originally produced by Klaw and Erlanger, under the direction of the late Joseph Brooks at the Republic theater, New York City, on October 3, 1910, it scored an instantaneous hit with Edith Taliaferro in the title role. Following a long run at the Republic, the play was presented with notable success throughout the country and became popularly known among playgoers as a subject of unusual charm and human interest.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of January 21 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Lost and Won" at the Strand.

AT THE Strand theater. Marie Doro was seen the week of January 21, in "Lost and Won," a drama of newspaper life written especially for her by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf and prepared for the screen by Margaret Turnbull. The story has to do with "Cinders," a little newsgirl who, on a bet, is made the ward of a wealthy stockholder, he wagering that he can transform the newsgirl into a society belle within a year. The Famous Players Film Company have given Miss Doro an excellent supporting cast, including Elliott Dexter, Maym Kelso, Carl Stockdale, C. H. Geldert, Sydney Deane and Robert Gray.

Other films of interest to be shown were "King of the Rail," a new comedy entitled "The End of a Perfect Day" and the Strand Topical Review. Knud Dahlgaard, Grace Hoffman and Enrico Arenzen were the soloists.

"The Mysterious Mrs. M." at the Rialto.

The feature picture at the Rialto was a Bluebird production, "The Mysterious Mrs. M." in which Harrison Ford and Mary MacLaren were the stars. The plot is novel and has a "surprise finish." Excellent acting by the cast is balanced by a production of much merit.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in "Blackmailers;" an educational film showing Mt. Kilauea, Hawaii, in eruption, and "Literary Digest of the Screen," were on the same program. The soloists were Vicente Ballester and Bela Nyany.

A new series of war pictures, with lectures by E. Alexander Powell, was an added feature.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" at the Broadway.

The interest in the Universal novelty picture, founded on the famous story by Jules Verne, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," continues to fill the Broadway theater at each performance. The photoplay is now in the fifth week of its engagement.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four pictures were shown: Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Bessie Love in "Nina, the Flower Girl," and a Keystone comedy made up the picture portion of the program. On Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Wm. Desmond in "The Iced Bullet," and a Mack Sennett comedy constituted the screen part of the entertainment.

Desmond to be Starred by Ince

WILLIAM DESMOND, whom Thomas H. Ince will present upon the Triangle program in many unusual Kay Bee productions during the coming year, has quietly and unobtrusively created a vogue for himself that should be the envy of numerous screen veterans of twice his experience.

William Desmond.

Desmond made his first big impression in Triangle plays, as the minister with Billie Burke in "Peggy." He followed up this delightful characterization with a telling part in "Bullets and Brown Eyes." Then came two entirely dissimilar but equally interesting co-starring ventures with Clara Williams in "The Criminal," and with Dorothy Dalton in "A Gambler in Souls." His latest individual starring vehicle is "The Iced Bullet," a novel serio-comedy, which offers the actor every opportunity to display his versatility.

Desmond is a native of Dublin, Ireland, but was brought to this country as an infant and grew up in New York City, graduating from one of the local high schools. From his earliest youth he was an incorrigible "gallery god," and finally ran away from home to join a troupe of barnstormers. After a series of adventures, under various managements, he joined the Morosco stock company in Los Angeles. Morosco brought him to New York, where he played the leading male part in "The Bird of Paradise," before undertaking other engagements with Belasco, Frohman and the Shuberts. At one time he cas called upon to play the part of Villon in "If I Were King," with only three days' rehearsals, but he made good. Desmond counts this the most notable achievement of his career.

He joined the Ince forces over a year ago and has rapidly gained favor as a star of dependable possibilities.

Goldwyn Pictures Working Fast

New Organization Engages Important People in Photoplay World—Forms Advisory Board.

ANNOUNCEMENTS coming from the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation indicate that the new organization will shortly have an unusual aggregation of picture people of importance gathered about its standard. Already it has announced the acquisition of such players as Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott. Ralph Ince and Allan Dwan have been commandeered as directors and now the information comes that a contract of an exclusive nature has been made with Robert W. Chambers, by the terms of which Mr. Chambers will supply a series of original scenarios each year, together with the exclusive right to use any or all of Mr. Chalmers' stories for screen purposes.

On top of this important acquisition comes the further news that Adolph Klauber, for several years dramatic critic of the New York Times, has been engaged for the important duty of selecting the principals and the supporting cast for all Goldwyn pictures.

Finally Goldwyn Pictures is to have an advisory board which will be made up of Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn Margaret Mayo, Irving S. Cobb, Arthur Hopkins, Roi Cooper Megrue, Archibald Selwyn and Crosly George.

It is believed that with array of critical talent many of the mistakes that are made in the process of production, from scenario to the finished picture, may be headed off. Looks like a good start.

LEHRMAN MAKING FOX COMEDIES.

Henry "Pathe" Lehrman ran away from the camera out at Los Angeles the other day long enough to come to New York and rest. Mr. Lehrman is producing a series of comedies for the Foxfilm program. His first production has been completed and two others are under way on the coast.

"It's the most difficult thing in the world to produce comedy today if you adhere to the old line methods," he contends. "Real comedy must bring laughs. All the laughs have been squeezed out of pie-throwing and the like, so something entirely new must be substituted. My aim in comedy-making is to produce laughs by unusual methods, and unusual situations. I am strongly opposed to the use of character make-up by principals in particular, and all the leading players in my comedies will appear in their regular faces.

"It is my intention to have six comedy companies at work within a few weeks. Every picture they make, I will supervise in person. I will act in some of them, but I do not care for it particularly. My principal work will be direction."

F. I. L. M. CLUB DOINGS.

The best attended meeting so far held by the New York F. I. L. M. Club was held at the headquarters of the Hoy Reporting Service, 1482 Broadway, New York City, on Tuesday evening, January 2, 1917. Nearly every member of the club was present. Several applications for admission were read and referred to the proper committee. Reports of committees in reference to transportation and other matters of importance to the trade were submitted and considered. It was announced at the meeting that nearly all exchanges in New York state, as far west as Buffalo, were now affiliated with the club.

Communication was read from C. B. Hoy, of the Hoy Reporting Service, regarding many helpful innovations being adopted by the Chicago F. I. L. M. Club. But misunderstandings and disputes which were formerly a constant source of friction between exchanges and exhibitors are now being eliminated through the medium of the F. I. L. M. Club and the Hoy Service.

NEW YORK STATE RIGHTS FOR "WITCHING HOUR."

The Rogson Film Company has sold the rights for the State of New York, exclusive of Greater New York, for "The Witching Hour," to the Lenox Film Corporation.

British Notes

AN ORDER prohibiting candies and confectionery in places of amusement after 8 o'clock in the evening has been brought into force by the Home Office, bringing theaters into line with a regulation now imposed upon all vendors of these goods. A strong deputation opposing the restriction interviewed the Home Secretary, but without avail. The extension of the order to include places of entertainment has been mainly due to an agitation from the sweetmeat trade, which alleges that while the sale of candies is only a side line with the exhibitor it is the whole existence of the storekeeper and the theater's privilege in being allowed to trade after the closing hour for shops is ruining their interests. That the sale of sweetmeats is no negligible sideline is evident from the fact that a suburban London moving picture theater has been averaging close upon $250 a day in takings by the cult of the patrons' sweet tooth.

A new freak of the industry is the trade-show specialist. After a postal course of "money-making in the movies" (25c and job found) he springs out to teach the manufacturer the right and golden path to the exhibitor's pocket. Presumably the idealist will provide sleeping accommodations for viewers.

"Lost and Won"

Marie Doro Is Seen in Widely Contrasting Characters and Surrounded by Excellent Cast in Lasky Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

MARIE DORO is the heroine of "Lost and Won," the Lasky release for January 22. She is seen both as a newsgirl and as a young woman with a year's training in a fashionable school, later blossoming out as a newspaper reporter. The story is melodramatic, and is from the pens of Channing

Pollock and Rennold Wolf. It has been well staged by James Young. The picture is entertaining, and at times it is exciting, but Mr. Young did not come on his stage equipped with the same raw material as when he began the production of "Oliver Twist."

The story strains the credulity at times, as when, for instance, it asks us to believe a girl with a year's training in school is sufficiently equipped to take a job as a newspaper reporter. Still, at that, Cinders might have been able to do as good a piece of work as we find in the samples of news story writing we see flashed on the screen. Art directors will scour a big city to find an inconsequental bit of furniture of a period of a century ago, but take it for granted anything will get by as an opening paragraph of a newspaper yarn, or as a spread head, either.

Miss Doro is given excellent support. Robert Grey is Bill Holt, a newspaper reporter; his performance will please those who in life follow similar lines. Elliott Dexter is Walter Crane, the broker who takes chances in his business, and also wagers $50,000 that within one year four of his chums will "fall for" or to a girl that he will take from among the "newsies" and educate and refine. Carl Stockdale is Kirkland Gaige, the unscrupulous banker friend of Crane and so infatuated with Cleo Duvene that in order to obtain jewelry for her he steals money from the till of Crane. Mabel Van Buren is Cleo, the dashing adventuress, an unusual piece of work. Maym Kelso is the aunt of Crane, who mothers and protects Cinders.

"Little Shoes"

Eleanor M. Ingram's Delightful Story Most Happily Filmed by Essanay, Featuring Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson—Directed by Arthur Berthelet.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE HOUSE OF THE LITTLE SHOES" appeared as a serial in Munsey's Magazine and created a large following of readers. Essanay very appropriately clipped the title, as seen above, and the adaptation by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., has retained for the screen all the gist of the printed story. The production is in five reels.

Director Berthelet has given the filmed story very appropriate settings, some of them sumptuous and others squalid, as the occasion demands. Had he made the little gamin, David Noel, appear with a dirty face, instead of the nice clean one we see him wear as he emerges from the human kennel that he calls home, the spectator would be still more convinced of his real type.

The acting of little Mary V. McAlister as Rosalind, and little Jack Paul as David Noel, when these characters were children, will appeal to everyone who sees them. Later on, when the characters become grownups, Henry B. Walthall appears as David and Mary Charleson as Rosalind.

Mr. Walthall's David Noel is the creation of an artist. It shows fine imagination and a rare gift of expression. The selfmade man, who has risen from the New York gutter to become the leader in a movement that accomplishes the independence of a new republic in South America, cannot be expected to become also the polished gentleman. Hence his rudeness and his almost unpardonable offense in doubting the truthfulness of Rosalind Arloff, when she denies that she is either a professional dancer or engaged on the stage, comes near ruining the dearest quest of his life. And Mr. Walthall's David Noel is made to express the doubt brutally, both in look and word. But the true heart of Mr. Walthall's David is made to show itself pure as gold, when at the feet of Rosalind he again becomes the beggar boy with a shivering heart.

Mary Charleson's Rosalind is another fine characterization. When poverty has come to her father and herself Rosalind is still the gentlewoman, proud of her independence, and devoted to her bedridden parent. The slight put upon her by David's questioning of her truthfulness is not forgiven, even when he proves her identity. In the scene where she dismisses him in a storm of anger, Miss Charleson's Rosalind reveals the bitterness of the shock to her gentle refinement. An instant afterward, when David lies unconscious at the foot of the stairs, down which he has fallen, her woman's heart melts in tenderness and she kisses him as love and anxiety take possession.

Vasilie Orloff and Abel are well acted by W. K. Haupt and Patrick Calhoun.

The photography is fully up to Essanay's high standard.

The release date was January 15, through the K-E-S-E service.

"A Modern Monte Cristo," Five-Reel Gold Rooster Play Featuring Vincent Serrano, and "The Monroe Doctrine," Ninth Episode of "Pearl of the Army."

IN SELECTING a plot of Dumas' to modernize, Floyd Lonergan, the author of "A Modern Monte Cristo," made sure that his model was of the best. The five-reel Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster play in which Vincent Serrano is the central figure is by no means the peer of its celebrated prototype; but, nevertheless, it has distinct merits of its own. The spirit of revenge which animates the actions of Edmund Dantes is also the cause of this later day Monte Cristo's activites during the progress of the Lonergan play.

his rival, a young doctor of exceptional promise devotes his life to squaring accounts with the man who worked his downfall. Chance places the young daughter of his rival in Dr. Emerson's hands after she has been injured, and he saves her life. When the child reaches womanhood, Emerson, now a man of great wealth, is bent upon causing her father's financial ruin and taking a terrible revenge upon the girl. Her trust in him defeats his purpose and brings his better nature to the fore.

The variety of incident and scene that is such a potent factor in the scenes of the French romance is utilized in "A Modern Monte Cristo." The ship used in the picture is not very impressive, but the struggle in the water of Emerson and the child after the shipwreck contains a real thrill.

Vincent Serrano gives a good account of himself in the character of Dr. Emerson and plays with the requisite melodramatic touch. Helen Badgley is a courageous youngster and exhibits an uncommon spirit of daring; she is also a clever little actress. Thomas Curran, Gladys Dorr and Boyd Marshall help to sustain the picture at an excellent acting level. E. Eugene Moore directed the production.

"The Monroe Doctrine."

The melodramatic incidents in "The Monroe Doctrine," the ninth episode of the "Pearl of the Army" serial, are as thick as plums in a Christmas pudding. Considerable of the action takes place on the schooner introduced in the preceding number, and has to do with a box of bombs intended for the blowing up of the Panama canal.

The way in which the Colonel's daughter attempts to defeat the plotters and is herself injured in an explosion is very effective.

"Germany and Its Armies of Today"

Wealth of Information on Germany Given in Official Films Presented by Special Permission of German Government.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

THERE is a virtual mine of interesting information regarding Germany as it is today to be found in the series of films to be released on a state rights basis under the general title, "Germany and Its Armies of Today," by Germanic Official War Films, Inc. There are 10,000 feet of film to be released in lengths of 2,500 feet each. The films as a whole visually present a comprehensive study, not only of the lives and pursuits of those left at home—the women and children, mostly—but also of industrial conditions and general factors of life in a war-worried country. Many scenes of prison camps are shown. The pictures are probably the most informative propaganda on Germany that has as yet reached this country. They are good enough to deserve countrywide booking.

The scenes are all authentic. Of special note are those human interest touches that show the women of Germany doing work formerly done by men. In the films we see them digging ditches, repairing tracks, running trains and street cars, directing traffic, delivering mail, and in many other ways taking the places of the men in the trenches. Other human notes are struck when there are shown scenes picturing inhabitants of a town in the danger zone fleeing under the direction of the German soldiers. There are many close-up views of the Kaiser and his staff in the field. A great deal of footage is devoted to Berlin during the third year of the war. Also we see pictures of artillery "hospitals" ten miles behind the front-line trenches.

This series of pictures is not a series of war pictures as we have come to know them. But they are a series of the most interesting pictures that have come out of censor-bound Germany as yet. They show, if there be such a thing, the human side of war, and will make a special appeal to women.

Any exhibitor can book them with the assurance that they will interest his audiences. The only point that can be singled out as a negative quality is the fact that some of the titles are a trifle boastful, and smack quite strongly of German propaganda. The photography is excellent.

"A Girl Like That"

Owen Moore and Irene Fenwick Featured in Famous Players Story That Has Good Moments.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on January 18 "A Girl Like that," a melodrama with a crook touch, but only a touch at that. It is directed by Del Henderson. Featured are Owen Moore and Irene Fenwick. Mr. Moore has the role of a cashier of a country bank—and it is a good character drawing of the bashful, nervous young man reared in a rural environment. Miss Fenwick is seen as the daughter of a bank burglar, who has decided to give up his old habits, and declines to be persuaded to resume them. The story turns upon the efforts of Nell Gordon, portrayed by Miss Fenwick, to keep her father straight and walk straight herself.

Scene from "A Girl Like That" (Famous Players).

There is a good village atmosphere running through the picture—of the little bank, the home life of the country parson and his wife, with whom Nell boards on the strength of her forged letters of recommendation, and of the church "sociable." There is strong love interest, too, following the arrival in town of the young woman who secures a position as bookkeeper in the bank; it is her love for the cashier which is the determining factor in the upsetting of the plans of the burglars and their later capture.

There is a good cast supporting the two principals. Jack Dillon is the sheriff and Alice Thomas is Fannie, the sister of the cashier. There is a subsidiary love match here which contributes to the interest. Tom O'Keefe, Edwin Sturgis and Harry Lee, the latter as John Gordon, portray the bank burglars. William Butler is the clergyman.

The raid on the bank is dramatic. It takes place in a rain storm unusual in intensity. The struggle in the bank following the opening of the safe possesses real elements of melodrama. There are other tense moments, too, as when the father of Nell is killed by his companions because he refuses to instruct Nell to give to them the aid they later try to secure by subterfuge, only to fall into the trap she lays for them.

"A Girl Like That" will be liked.

"Envy"

First of the "Seven Deadly Sins" Series of Photoplays to Be Presented by McClure Pictures, an Entertaining Release—Ann Murdock Heads the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHATEVER shortcomings are to be charged against "Envy," the five-reel photoplay which constitutes the opening number of the "Seven Deadly Sins" series, to be presented by McClure Pictures, the scenario alone must bear the blame. Absolute honesty of purpose on the part of the person responsible for the story would have insured an uncommonly entertaining screendrama. Starting with an effective and fairly novel theme, the unknown author has developed it consistently and with due regard to its dramatic worth up to a certain point and then forced the situations to the limit of sensationalism.

The last reel is full of the liveliest sort of action. A thief, who discovers that the woman he has assaulted is his own sister, has a terrific battle in the cabin of a yacht with a man that has been the young woman's protector. In the meantime another young woman, the intended victim of the man of wealth, is engaged in crawling out of a port-hole and is rescued by her lover and the sister of the thief. The latter girl, a beautiful and accomplished actress, has been warned by her physician that she has a weak heart and must give up all violent exertion, but she disregards the advice with a vengeance when the "redfire" finish gets well started.

As before intimated, much of the work of the photoplaywright is admirable. He understands the value of contrast and carries out the meaning of the title by showing a successful woman of the stage surrounded by flatterers, money and, apparently, everything to make her happy, yet haunted by apprehension of her criminal brother and her physical condition; then, bringing into the story a simple little country girl, who envies the lot of the unknown celebrity and finds her fate strangely bound up with this same woman. Deft touches of characters, brief sidelights that reveal intimate and unexpected bits of life, progressive movement of plot, and most of the other elements that go into the making of a drama, either for the screen or the stage, are to be found in this pictureplay. Many persons will consider it thoroughly entertaining; but it does not bear out the promise of its earlier scenes—a promise of a much higher quality of dramatic fare, of more food for thought and less dependence upon physical action.

In respect to the efforts of the cast and the general production, nothing but praise need be written. The direction by Richard Ridgley and the photography by George Lane, are fine specimens of the two arts. No detail has been slighted.

Ann Murdock heads the cast. As Betty Howard, the actress, her beauty and histrionic skill are important assets in the success of the picture. A fetching boudoir costume, a chic bathing suit and an elaborate "nightie" are features of her extensive wardrobe.

"Her Life and His" is the name substituted for Florence La Badie's next Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster play, previously entitled "The Girl Who Wanted to Live." At the same time he made this announcement, Edwin Thanhouser gave out the release date as Feb. 18.

"Love Aflame"

Red Feather Release Makes Excellent Combination of Humor and Swift Moving Adventure.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, written and directed by Raymond Wells, reveals once more the creator's understanding of light-running adventure of the imaginative type. There is not a dull moment in the whole feature, and in spite of the fact that the observer is aware that the yarn is a preposterous one, there is no lack of conviction as the story proceeds.

The opening scenes occur on the island of Bongalug, where the cannibal natives worship a live volcano. When this is in a state of eruption the king of the island must stand ready to fight any man who aspires to succeed him. They fight on the edge of the crater and the loser falls into the flaming pit. When the story opens Tloofa is seen hurling the king into the depths. These settings are extremely picturesque and attractive.

In the course of the stirring narrative, the leading characters arrive on this strange island. The hero is one of four young clubmen who start to Constantinople on a bet. The heroine is a tomboy who dresses in boy's clothes and leaves home on a freight train. She and the hero meet on the train. The scenes in which they dine with the real knights of the road are amusing and full of interest. The girl is followed by her father and an insistent lover.

The hero and heroine are made captive on the cannibal island and escape after numerous adventures. Constantinople

THE twenty-fourth episode of Kalem's "The Girl From Frisco" series, titled "Wolf of Los Alamos," is a two-reel Western above the ordinary. With a story by Robert Welles Ritchie, and with capable direction by James W. Marin Sais proves her fearlessness in this number several times—notably when she stops a runaway, and later when she falls from her horse over a cliff and is later pulled up the side of the precipice. The story tells of a murder committed on the Brent ranch. Suspicion points to a Mexican, and the cowboys go after him. Barbara Brent (Marin Sais), by clever detective methods, finds the guilty man in a Hindu cook. The Mexican is saved from lynching and Barbara finally catches the Hindu.
